TO THE

MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD,

CHARLES,

BY DIVINE PROVIDENCE,

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY,

PRIMATE OF ALL ENGLAND, AND METROPOLITAN.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

In soliciting your Grace's protection to the present Edition of the Book of Common Prayer, I presume to think that the propriety of the request will be apparent, in consideration of the high office, which you occupy. The Archbishop of Canterbury may be deemed the natural patron of an attempt to promote the understanding and the efficacy of a work, which is not only the authorized formulary of worship and of doctrine for the Church, over which he presides; but was also composed for its edification by some of the most distinguished of his predecessors: which, with the blessing of Divine Providence, and under the sanction of our first Protestant Sovereigns, arose and was established by the piety, the learning, and the judgment of Cranmer and of Parker; which Whitgift successfully defended against the efforts of early assailants; and which Sheldon contributed to rescue from more recent attacks, and to advance to its present state of perfection.

To a consideration of the office, occupied by your Grace, might be added that of the qualities displayed in the discharge of it. But I am not insensible, my Lord, that upon this topick it would, on such an occasion as the present, not become me to enlarge. Yet thus much I may perhaps venture to observe, without indecorum or offence, that those qualities are, I am persuaded, most highly appreciated by such persons, as enjoy the best opportunities of estimating them.

It would however be to impose an unnecessary restraint upon my feelings, if I refrained from saying, that considerations of a publick nature have not exclusively actuated me in desiring to inscribe this produce of my industry with your Grace's name. For I apprehend that no impropriety can be charged upon me, for thus openly avowing my sense of that considerate condescension, and kind but dignified affability, which I have uniformly experienced during the execution of the duties with which I have had the honour and happiness of being intrusted in your Grace's household.

Under the influence of these considerations, my Lord, and with corresponding sentiments of veneration for your office, of respect for your character, and, may I be permitted to add, of grateful and affectionate attachment to your person, this Edition of the English Liturgy is humbly submitted to your Grace's acceptance, by,

My Lord,
Your Grace's very dutiful and much obliged Servant and Chaplain, RICHARD MANT.

INTRODUCTION

CONCERNING

THE ORIGINAL OF "THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER," AND THE SEVERAL ALTERATIONS WHICH WERE AFTERWARDS MADE IN IT.

BEFORE the Reformation the Liturgy was only in Latin, being a collection of prayers, made up partly of some ancient forms used in the primitive Church, partly of some others of a later original, accommodated to the superstitions which had by various means crept by degrees into the Church of Rome, and were from thence derived to other Churches in communion with it; like what we see in the present Roman Breviary and Missal. And these being established by the laws of the land, and the canons of the Church, no other could publickly be made use of: so that those of the laity, who had not the advantage of a learned education, could not join with them, or be any otherwise edified by them. And besides, they being mixed with addresses to the saints, adoration of the host, images, &c., a great part of the worship was in itself idolatrous and profane.

But when the nation in King Henry VIII.'s time was disposed to a reformation, it was thought necessary to correct and amend these offices; and not only have the service of the Church in the English or vulgar tongue, (that men might "pray, not with the spirit only, but with the understanding also;" and "that he, who occupied the room of the unlearned, might understand that unto which he was to say Amen;" agreeably to the precept of St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16,) but also to abolish and take away all that was idolatrous and superstitious, in order to restore the service of the Church to its primitive purity. For it was not the design of our Reformers (nor indeed ought it to have been) to introduce a new form of worship into the Church, but to correct and amend the old one; and to purge it from those gross corruptions which had gradually crept into it; and so to render the divine service more agreeable to the Scriptures, and to the doctrine and practice of the primitive Church in the best and purest ages of Christianity. In which reformation they proceeded gradually, according as they were able.

And first, the Convocation appointed a committee in the year of our Lord 1537, to compose a book, which was called, "The godly and pious institution of a Christen man;" containing a declaration of the Lord's Prayer, the Ave-Maria, the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and the Seven Sacraments, &c., which book was again published in the year 1540, and 1543, with corrections and alterations, under the title of "A necessary doctrine and erudition for any Christen man:" and as it is expressed in that preface, was "set furthe by the King, with the advyse of his Clergy; the Lordes bothe spirituall and temporall, with the nether house of Parliament, having both sene and lyked it very well."

Also in the year 1540, a committee of bishops and divines was appointed by King Henry VIII., at the petition of the Convocation, to reform the rituals and offices of the Church. And what was done by this committee for reforming the offices was reconsidered by the Convocation itself two or three years afterwards, namely, in February 1542-3. And in the next year the King and his Clergy ordered the prayers for processions, and litanies, to be put into English, and to be publickly used. And finally, in the year 1545, the King's Primer came forth, wherein were contained, amongst other things, the Lord's Prayer, Creed, Ten Commandments, Venite, Te Deum, and other hymns and collects in English; and several of them in the same version in which we now use them. And this is all that appears to have been done in relation to liturgical matters in the reign of King Henry VIII.

In the year 1547, the first of King Edward VI., December the second, the Convocation declared the opinion, "nullo reclamante," that the Communion ought to be administered to all persons under "both kinds." Whereupon an Act of Parliament was made, ordering the Communion to be so administered. And then a committee of bishops, and other learned divines, was appointed to compose "an uniform order of Communion, according to the rules of Scripture, and the use of the primitive Church." In order to this, the Committee repaired to Windsor Castle, and in that retirement, within a few days, drew up that form which is printed in Bishop Sparrow's collection. And this being immediately brought into use, the next year the same persons, being impowered by a new commission, prepared themselves to enter upon a yet nobler work; and in a few months' time finished the whole Liturgy, by drawing up publick offices not only for Sundays and Holidays, but for Baptism, Confirmation, Matrimony, Burial of the Dead, and other special occasions; in which the fore-mentioned office for the holy Communion was inserted, with many alterations and amendments. And the whole book being so framed, was set forth "by the common agreement and full assent both of the Parliament and Convocations provincial;" that is, the two Convocations of the provinces of Canterbury and York.

The Committee appointed to compose this Liturgy were,

1. Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury; who was the chief promoter of our excellent Reformation; and had a principal hand, not only in compiling the Liturgy, but in all the steps made towards it. He died a martyr to the religion of the Reformation, which principally by his means had been established in the Church of England; being burnt at Oxford in the reign of Queen Mary, March 21, 1556.

2. Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Ely.

3. Henry Holbech, alias Randes, Bishop of Lincoln.

4. George Day, Bishop of Chichester.

5. John Skip, Bishop of Hereford.

6. Thomas Thirlby, Bishop of Westminster.

7. Nicholas Ridley, Bishop of Rochester, and afterwards of London. He was esteemed the ablest man of all that advanced the Reformation, for piety, learning, and solidity of judgment. He died a martyr in Queen Mary's reign, being burnt at Oxford, October 16, 1555.

8. Dr. William May, Dean of St. Paul's, London, and afterwards also Master of Queen's College in Cambridge.

9. Dr. John Taylor, Dean, afterwards Bishop, of Lincoln. He was deprived in the beginning of Queen Mary's reign, and died soon after.

10. Dr. Simon Heynes, Dean of Exeter.

11. Dr. John Redmayne, Master of Trinity College in Cambridge, and Prebendary of Westminster.

12. Dr. Richard Cox, Dean of Christ Church in Oxford, Almoner and Privy Counsellor to King Edward VI. He was deprived of all his preferments in Queen Mary's reign, and fled to Frankfort; from whence returning in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, he was consecrated Bishop of Ely.

13. Mr. Thomas Robertson, Archdeacon of Leicester.

Thus was our excellent Liturgy compiled by martyrs and confessors, together with divers other learned bishops and divines; and being revised and approved by the archbishops, bishops, and clergy of both the provinces of Canterbury and York, was then confirmed by the King and the three Estates in Parliament, in the year 1548, who gave it this just encomium, namely, "which at this time BY THE AID OF THE HOLY GHOST with uniform agreement is of them concluded, set forth, &c." This Common Prayer Book is frequently called the first Book of Edward the Sixth; or the Book of the second year of Edward the Sixth.

But about the end of the year 1550, or the beginning of 1551, some exceptions were taken at some things in this book, which were thought to savour too much of superstition. To remove these objections therefore, Archbishop Cranmer proposed to review it, and to this end called in the assistance of Martin Bucer, and Peter Martyr, two foreigners, whom he had invited over from the troubles in Germany; who, not understanding the English tongue, had Latin versions prepared for them: one Alesse, a Scotch divine, translating it on purpose for the use of Bucer; and Martyr being furnished with the version of Sir John Cheke, who had also formerly translated it into Latin. The following were the most considerable additions and alterations that were then made; some of which must be allowed to be good: namely, the addition of the Sentences, Confession, Exhortation, and Absolution, at the beginning of the morning and evening services, which in the first Common Prayer Book began with the Lord's Prayer. The other changes were the removing of some rites and ceremonies retained in the former book; such as the use of "oil in baptism;" the "unction of the sick;" "prayers for souls departed," both in the Communion office, and in that for the Burial of the Dead; the leaving out of the "invocation of the Holy Ghost" in the consecration of the eucharist, and the prayer of "oblation" that was used to follow it; the omitting of the rubrick that ordered "water" to be mixed with wine, with several other less material variations. The "habits" also, that were prescribed by the former book, were ordered by this to be laid aside; and, lastly, a rubrick was added at the end of the Communion office to explain the reason of "kneeling" at the Sacrament. The book thus revised and altered was again confirmed in Parliament in the year 1551. It is frequently called the second Book of Edward the Sixth, or the Book of the fifth year of Edward the Sixth; and is very near the same with that which we now use. But both this, and the former Act made in 1548, were repealed in the first year of Queen Mary, as not being agreeable to the Romish superstition, which she was resolved to restore.

But upon the accession of Queen Elizabeth, the Act of repeal was reversed; and, in order to the restoring of the English service, several learned divines were appointed to take another review of King Edward's Liturgies, and to frame from them both a book for the use of the Church of England. The names of those who, Mr. Cambden says, were employed, are these that follow:

Dr. Matthew Parker, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury.

Dr. Richard Cox, afterwards Bishop of Ely.

Dr. May.

Dr. Bill.

Dr. James Pilkington, afterwards Bishop of Durham.

Sir Thomas Smith.

Mr. David Whitehead.

Mr. Edmund Grindall, afterwards Bishop of London, and then Archbishop of Canterbury.

To these, Mr. Strype says, were added Dr. Edwin Sandys, afterwards Bishop of Worcester, and Mr. Edward Guest, a very learned man, who was afterwards Archdeacon of Canterbury, Almoner to the Queen, and Bishop of Rochester, and afterwards of Salisbury. And this last person, Mr. Strype thinks, had the main care of the whole business; being, as he supposes, recommended by Parker to supply his absence. It was debated at first, which of the two books of King Edward should be received; and Secretary Cecil sent several queries to Guest, concerning the reception of some particulars in the first book; as prayers for the dead, the prayer of consecration, the delivery of the sacrament into the mouth of the communicant, &c. But however, the second book of King Edward was pitched upon as the book to be proposed to the Parliament to be established, who accordingly passed and commanded it to be used, "with one alteration or addition of certain lessons to be used on every Sunday in the year, and the form of the Litany altered and corrected, and two sentences added in the delivery of the sacrament to the communicants, and none other, or otherwise."

The alteration of the Litany here mentioned was the leaving out of a rough expression, namely, "From the tyranny of the bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities," which was a part of the last deprecation in both the books of King Edward; and the adding of those words to the first petition of the Queen, "strengthen in the true worshipping of thee, in righteousness and holiness of life," which were not in before. The two sentences added in the delivery of the Sacrament were these, "the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee;" or "the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee; preserve thy body and soul to everlasting life:" which were taken out of King Edward's first book, and were the whole forms then used: whereas in the second book of that King, these sentences were left out, and in the room of them were used, "take, eat," or "drink" this, with what follows; but now in Queen Elizabeth's book both these forms were united.

Though, besides these here mentioned, there are some other variations in this book from the second of King Edward: namely, the first rubrick, concerning the situation of the chancel and the proper place of reading divine service, was altered; the habits enjoined by the first book of King Edward, and forbid by the second, were now restored. At the end of the Litany was added a prayer for the Queen, and another for the Clergy. And lastly, the rubrick that was added at the end of the Communion office, in the second book of King Edward VI., against the notion of our Lord's "real" and "essential" presence in the holy Sacrament, was left out of this. For it being the Queen's design to unite the nation in one faith, it was therefore recommended to the divines to see that there should be no definition made against the aforesaid notion, but that it should remain as a speculative opinion not determined, in which every one was left to the freedom of his own mind.

And in this state the Liturgy continued without any farther alteration, till the first year of King James I.; when the Puritans, who were now a numerous body, having petitioned for a reform of what they termed abuses, the King appointed a conference to be held at Hampton Court, between a select number of bishops and divines of the Established Church on the one side, and the principal leaders among the dissenters on the other, before himself as president, to hear what could be alleged for their nonconformity, and to judge whether an accommodation between the parties would be practicable. The demands of the Puritans were far too unreasonable to be granted, and very soon set aside the hope of agreement: but their objections may have contributed to produce some of the following improvements, which were soon after made in the Liturgy. In the Morning and Evening Prayers a collect, and in the Litany a particular intercession, were appointed for the royal family: the forms of thanksgiving upon several occasions were then added: the questions and answers concerning the Sacraments were subjoined to the Catechism, which before that time ended with the answer to the question immediately following the Lord's Prayer: and the administration of private baptism was by the rubrick expressly confined to a "lawful minister," to prevent midwives or laymen from presuming to baptize. These and some other small additions and improvements were made by the authority of King James I., and universally adopted, although they were not ratified by Parliament. The following is a list of the bishops and other divines of the Church, appointed on this occasion:

Dr. John Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury.
Dr. Richard Bancroft, Bishop of London.
Dr. Tobie Matthews, Bishop of Durham.
Dr. Thomas Bilson, Bishop of Winchester.
Dr. Gervase Babbinton, Bishop of Worcester.
Dr. Anthony Rudd, Bishop of St. David's.
Dr. Anthony Watson, Bishop of Chichester.
Dr. Henry Robinson, Bishop of Carlisle.
Dr. Thomas Dove, Bishop of Peterborough.
Dr. James Mountague, Dean of the Chapel.
Dr. Thomas Ravis, Dean of Christ Church.
Dr. John Bridges, Dean of Sarum.
Dr. Lancelot Andrewes, Dean of Westminster.
Dr. John Overall, Dean of St. Paul's.
Dr. William Barlow, Dean of Chester.
Dr. Giles Thompson, Dean of Windsor.
Dr. John King, Archdeacon of Nottingham.
Dr. Richard Field, after Dean of Gloucester.

There was little done in the English Common Prayer Book in King Charles the First's time: but it may be noticed in passing, that in the Scotch Common Prayer Book there were several improvements made, some of which were taken into the last review, and more might have been so, but that the nation was not disposed to receive them, the distempers of the late times having prejudiced many against it. Some of the most remarkable alterations in this book are: the word "priest" in the rubricks is changed into "presbyter;" the Epistles and Gospels are set down according to the New Translation, as are also the Hymns and Psalms; "Glory be to thee, O Lord," is ordered to be said before the Gospel, and "Thanks be to thee, O Lord," after it.

But to proceed with the account of the English Liturgy; which continued in the state, that has been described, to the time of King Charles the Second, who, immediately after his restoration, at the request of several of the Presbyterian Ministers, was willing to comply to another review, and therefore issued out a commission, dated March 25, 1661, to impower twelve of the bishops, and twelve of the Presbyterian divines, to consider of the objections raised against the Liturgy, and to make such reasonable and necessary alterations as they should jointly agree upon: nine assistants on each side being added, to supply the place of any of the twelve principals who should happen to be absent. The names of them are as follow:

These Commissioners had several meetings at the Savoy, but all to very little purpose; the Presbyterians heaped together all the old scruples that the Puritans had for above a hundred years been raising against the Liturgy, and, as if they were not enough, swelling the number of them with many new ones of their own. To these, one and all, they demanded compliance on the Church side, and would hear of no contradiction even in the minutest circumstances. But the completest piece of assurance was the behaviour of Baxter, who (though the King's commission gave them no farther power, than "to compare the Common Prayer Book with "the most ancient Liturgies that had been used "in the Church in the most primitive and purest "times;" requiring them "to avoid, as much as "possible, all unnecessary alterations of the "Forms and Liturgy, wherewith the people "were altogether acquainted, and had so long "received in the Church of England,") would not so much as allow that our Liturgy was capable of amendment, but confidently pretended to compose a new one of his own, without any regard to any other Liturgy whatsoever, either modern or ancient; which, together with the rest of the Commissioners on the Presbyterian side, he offered to the bishops, to be received and established in the room of the Liturgy. Such usage as this, we may reasonably think, must draw the disdain and contempt of all that were concerned for the Church. So that the conference broke up, without any thing done, except that some particular alterations were proposed by the episcopal divines, which, the May following, were considered and agreed to by the whole Clergy in Convocation. The principal of them were, that several Lessons in the Calendar were changed for others more proper for the days; the "prayers for particular occasions" were disjoined from the Litany; and the two prayers to be used in the Ember-weeks, the prayer for the Parliament, and that for "all conditions of men," and the "general thanksgiving," were added: several of the Collects were altered; the Epistles and Gospels were taken out of the last translation of the Bible, being read before according to the old translation: the office for "Baptism of those of Riper Years," the two psalms prefixed to the lesson in the Burial Service, and the "Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea," for "the Martyrdom of King Charles the First," and for "the Restoration of the Royal Family," were all added. There were also several other less material additions: and through the whole service ambiguities were removed, and various improvements were made; for a more particular account of which the reader is referred to the Preface to the Common Prayer Book. In a word, the whole Liturgy was then brought to that state in which it now stands; and was unanimously subscribed by both Houses of Convocation, of both provinces, on Friday the 20th of December, 1661. And being brought to the House of Lords the March following, both Houses very readily passed an Act for its establishment; and the Earl of Clarendon, then High Chancellor of England, was ordered to return the thanks of the Lords to the Bishops and Clergy of both provinces, for the great care and industry shewn in the review of it. Wheatly, Dr. Nicholls, Bp. Tomline.

Thus has been given a brief historical account of the first compiling of the Book of Common Prayer, and of the several reviews that were afterwards taken of it by our Bishops and Convocations: from which it appears, that our Liturgy was first established by the Convocations or provincial Synods of the realm, and thereby became obligatory "in foro conscientiæ;" and was then confirmed and ratified by the supreme magistrate in Parliament, and so also became obligatory "in foro civili." It has therefore all authority, both ecclesiastical and civil. As it is established by ecclesiastical authority, those, who separate themselves and set up another form of worship, are schismaticks; and consequently are guilty of a grievous sin, which no toleration granted by the civil magistrate can authorize or justify. But, as it is settled by Act of Parliament, the separating from it is only an offence against the state; and as such may be pardoned by the state. The "Act of Toleration" therefore, as it is called, has freed the dissenters from being offenders against the state, notwithstanding their separation from the worship prescribed by the Liturgy: but it by no means excuses, or can excuse, them from the schism they have made in the Church: they are guilty of that sin, and will continue to be guilty of it, as long as they separate, notwithstanding any temporal authority to indemnify them. Wheatly.

To the foregoing historical account of the original and alterations of our Liturgy, are subjoined two excellent and just characters of it, the former by Bishop Jeremy Taylor, in the preface to his "Apology for authorized and set forms of Liturgy;" the latter from Dean Comber's preface to his "Companion to the Temple:" a work to which the present Editor is principally indebted for his annotations; as indeed it is that which has for the most part supplied materials to other commentaries on the Common Prayer.

The Liturgy of the Church of England, saith Bishop Jeremy Taylor, hath advantages so many and so considerable, as not only to raise itself above the devotions of other Churches, but to endear the affections of good people to be in love with Liturgies in general. To the Churches of the Roman Communion we can say, that ours is Reformed: to the Reformed Churches we can say, that it is orderly and decent. For we were freed from the impositions and lasting errors of a tyrannical spirit, and yet from the extravagancies of a popular spirit too. Our Reformation was done without tumult, and yet we saw it necessary to reform: we were zealous to cast away the old errors; but our zeal was balanced with consideration, and the results of authority. We are not like women and children, when they are affrighted with fire in their clothes: we shook off the coal indeed, but not our garments; lest we should have exposed our Church to that nakedness, which the excellent men of our sister Churches complained to be among themselves. And indeed it is no small advantage to our Liturgy, that it was the offspring of all that authority, which was to prescribe in matters of religion. The king and the priest, which are the antistites religionis, and the preservers of both the Tables, joined in this work: and the people, as represented in Parliament, were advised withal, in authorizing the form, after much deliberation. So that it was not only reasonable and sacred; but free both from the indiscretion, and, which is very considerable, even from the scandal, of popularity. That only, in which the Church of Rome had prevaricated against the word of God, or innovated against apostolick tradition, was pared away. Great part of it consisted of the very words of Scripture, as the Psalms, Lessons, Hymns, Epistles, and Gospels: and the rest was in every particular made agreeable to it, and drawn from the Liturgies of the ancient Church. The Rubricks of it were written in the blood of some of the compilers, men famous in their generations; whose reputation and glory of martyrdom hath made it immodest for the best of men now to compare themselves with them. And its composure is so admirable, that the most industrious wits of its enemies can scarce find out an objection, of value enough to make a doubt, or scarce a scruple, in a serious spirit. There is no part of religion but is in the offices of the Church of England. For, if the soul desires to be humbled, she hath forms provided of confession to God before his Church: if she will rejoice and give God thanks for particular blessings, there are forms of thanksgiving for all the solemn occasions, which could be foreseen, and for which provision could by publick order be made: if she will commend to God the publick and private necessities of the Church and single persons, the whole body of collects and devotions supplies them abundantly: and if her devotions be high and pregnant, and prepared to fervency and importunity of congress with God, the Litany is an admirable pattern of devotion, full of circumstances proportionable to a quick and earnest spirit. There are also in the offices forms of solemn absolution and benediction: and, if they be not highly considerable, there is nothing sacred in the evangelical ministry, but the altars themselves are made of unhallowed turf. When the revolution of the anniversary calls on us, to perform our duty of special meditation on, and thankfulness to God for, the glorious benefits of Christ's incarnation, nativity, passion, resurrection, and ascension, &c., then we have the offices of Christmas, the Annunciation, Good-Friday, Easter, and Ascension, &c.; and the offices are so ordered, that, if they be summed up, they will make an excellent creed, and the very design of the day teaches the meaning of an Article. The life and death of the saints, which are very precious in the eyes of God, are so remembered, that, by giving thanks and praise, God may be honoured; the Church instructed by the proposition of their examples; and we give testimony of the honour and love we pay to religion, by our pious veneration and esteem of those holy and beatified persons. To which if we add the advantages of the whole Psalter, which is an intire body of devotion by itself, and hath in it forms to exercise all graces, by way of internal act and spiritual intention; there is not any ghostly advantage, which the most religious can either need or fancy, but what the English Liturgy, in its intire constitution, will furnish us withal. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

Though all Churches in the world have, and ever had, forms of prayer; yet none was ever blessed with so comprehensive, so exact, and so inoffensive a composure as ours: which is so judiciously contrived, that the wisest may exercise at once their knowledge and devotion; and yet so plain, that the most ignorant may pray with understanding; so full, that nothing is omitted which is fit to be asked in publick; and so particular, that it compriseth most things which we would ask in private; and yet so short, as not to tire any that hath true devotion: its doctrine is pure and primitive; its ceremonies so few and innocent, that most of the Christian world agree in them: its method is exact and natural; its language significant and perspicuous; most of the words and phrases being taken out of the holy Scriptures, and the rest are the expressions of the first and purest ages; so that whoever takes exception at these must quarrel with the language of the Holy Ghost, and fall out with the Church in her greatest innocence: and in the opinion of the most impartial and excellent Grotius, (who was no member of, nor had any obligation to, this Church,) the English Liturgy comes so near to the primitive pattern, that none of the reformed Churches can compare with it.

And if any thing external be needful to recommend that which is so glorious within; we may add that the Compilers were [most of them] men of great piety and learning; [and several of them] either martyrs or confessors upon the restitution of Popery; which as it declares their piety, so doth the judicious digesting of these prayers evidence their learning. For therein a scholar may discern close logick, pleasing rhetorick, pure divinity, and the very marrow of the ancient doctrine and discipline; and yet all made so familiar, that the unlearned may safely say Amen. 1 Cor. xiv. 16.

Lastly, all these excellencies have obtained that universal reputation which these prayers enjoy in all the world: so that they are most deservedly admired by the eastern Churches, and had in great esteem by the most eminent Protestants beyond sea, who are the most impartial judges that can be desired. In short, this Liturgy is honoured by all but the Romanist, whose interest it opposeth, and the Dissenters, whose prejudices will not let them see its lustre. Whence it is that they call that, which the Papists hate because it is Protestant, superstitious and popish. But when we consider that the best things in a bad world have the most enemies, as it doth not lessen its worth, so it must not abate our esteem, because it hath malicious and misguided adversaries.

How endless it is to dispute with these, the little success of the best arguments, managed by the wisest men, do too sadly testify; wherefore we shall endeavour to convince the enemies, by assisting the friends of our Church devotions: and by drawing the veil which the ignorance and indevotion of some, and the passion and prejudice of others, have cast over them, represent the Liturgy in its true and native lustre: which is so lovely and ravishing, that, like the purest beauties, it needs no supplement of art and dressing, but conquers by its own attractions, and wins the affections of all but those who do not see it clearly. This will be sufficient to shew, that whoever desires no more than to worship God with zeal and knowledge, spirit and truth, purity and sincerity, may do it by these devout forms. And to this end may the God of peace give us all meek hearts, quiet spirits, and devout affections; and free us from all sloth and prejudice, that we may have full churches, frequent prayers, and fervent charity; that, uniting in our prayers here, we may all join in his praises hereafter, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Dean Comber.

An Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer[a], and Service in the Church, and Administration of the Sacraments

PRIMO ELIZABETHÆ.

WHERE at the death of our late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, there remained one uniform Order of Common Service and Prayer, and of the Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, which was set forth in one Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, Authorized by Act of Parliament, holden in the fifth and sixth years of our said late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments; The which was repealed, and taken away by Act of Parliament, in the first Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lady Queen Mary, to the great decay of the due honour of God, and discomfort to the Professors of the Truth of Christ's Religion:

Be it therefore enacted by the Authority of this present Parliament, That the said Statute of Repeal, and every thing therein contained, only concerning the said Book, and the Service, Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies, contained or appointed in or by the said Book, shall be void and of none effect, from and after the Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next coming: and that the said Book with the Order of Service, and of the Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies, with the Alterations, and Additions therein added and appointed by this Statute, shall stand, and be from and after the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, in full force and effect, according to the tenor and effect of the Statute: Any thing in the foresaid Statute of Repeal to the contrary notwithstanding.

And further be it Enacted by the Queen's Highness, with the assent of the Lords and Commons[b] in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all and singular Ministers in any Cathedral or Parish-Church, or other Place within this Realm of England, Wales, and the Marches of the same or other the Queen's Dominions, shall from and after the Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next coming, be bounden to say and use the Mattins, Even-song, Celebration of the Lord's Supper, and Administration of each of the Sacraments, and all their common and open Prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the said Book, so Authorized by Parliament in the said fifth and sixth Years of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth: with one alteration, or addition of certain Lessons to be used on every Sunday in the Year, and the Form of the Litany altered[c] and corrected, and two Sentences only added in the delivery of the Sacrament to the Communicants, and none other, or otherwise. And that if any manner of Parson, Vicar, or other whatsoever Minister, that ought or should sing or say Common Prayer mentioned in the said Book, or minister the Sacraments, from and after the Feast of the Nativity of St. John Boptist next coming, refuse to use the said Common Prayer, or to minister the Sacraments in such Cathedral or Parish-Church, or other places, as he should use to minister the same, in such order and form, as they be mentioned, and set forth in the said Book; or shall wilfully, or obstinately standing in the same, use any other Rite, Ceremony, Order, Form, or Manner of Celebrating of the Lord's Supper, openly or privily, or Mattins, Evensong, Administration of the Sacraments, or other open Prayers, than is mentioned and set forth in the said Book, [open Prayer in and throughout this Act, is meant that Prayer which is for others to come unto or hear, either in Common Churches, or Private Chapels, or Oratories, commonly called the Service of the Church,] or shall preach, declare or speak any thing in the derogation, or depraving of the said Book, or any thing therein contained, or of any part thereof, and shall be thereof lawfully convicted, according to the laws of this Realm, by verdict of twelve men, or by his own confession, or by the notorious evidence of the fact, shall lose and forfeit to the Queen's Highness, her Heirs and Successors, for his first Offence, the profit of all his Spiritual Benefices, or Promotions, coming or arising in one whole Year next after his Conviction: And also that the Person so convicted, shall for the same Offence suffer Imprisonment by the space of six Months, without Bail or Mainprise. And if any such Person, once convict of any Offence concerning the Premisses, shall after his first conviction eftsoons offend, and be thereof in form aforesaid lawfully convict; That then the same Person shall for his second Offence suffer Imprisonment by the space of one whole Year, and also shall therefore be deprived, ipso facto, of all his Spiritual Promotions, and, that it shall be lawful to all Patrons, or Donors of all and singular the same Spiritual Promotions, or of any of them to present or collate to the same, as though the Person or Persons so offending were dead. And that if any such Person or Persons, after he shall be twice convicted in form aforesaid, shall offend against any of the Premisses the third time, and shall be thereof in form aforesaid lawfully convicted; That then the Person so offending, and convicted the third time, shall be deprived, ipso facto, of all his Spiritual Promotions, and also shall suffer imprisonment during his life. And if the Person that shall offend, and be convicted in form aforesaid, concerning any of the Premisses, shall not be beneficed nor have any Spiritual Promotion, that then the same Person so offending and convict, shall for the first offence suffer imprisonment during one whole Year next after his said Conviction, without Bail or Mainprise. And if any such Person, not having any Spiritual Promotion, after his first Conviction shall eftsoons offend in any thing concerning the Premisses, and shall in form aforesaid be thereof lawfully convicted, that then the same Person shall for his second Offence suffer imprisonment during his life.

And it is Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any Person or Persons whatsoever, after the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next coming, shall in any Enterludes, Plays, Songs, Rhimes, or by other open Words, declare[d] or speak any thing in the derogation, depraving, or despising of the same Book, or of any thing therein contained, or any part thereof: or shall by open fact, deed, or by open threatenings, compel or cause, or otherwise procure or maintain any Parson, Vicar, or other Minister in any Cathedral or Parish-Church, or in Chapel, or in any other place, to sing or say any common or open Prayer, or to minister any Sacrament otherwise, or in any other manner and form than is mentioned in the said Book; or that by any of the said means shall unlawfully interrupt, or let any Parson, Vicar, or other Minister, in any Cathedral or Parish-Church, Chapel, or any other Place, to sing or say common and open Prayer, or to minister the Sacraments, or any of them, in such manner, and form, as is mentioned in the said Book; that then every such Person, being thereof lawfully convicted, in form abovesaid, shall forfeit to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, her Heirs and Successors, for the first Offence, an hundred Marks. And if any Person or Persons, being once convict of any such Offence, eftsoons offend against any of the last recited Offences, and shall in form aforesaid be thereof lawfully convict; that the same Person so offending, and convict, shall for the second Offence forfeit to the Queen our Sovereign Lady, her Heirs and Successors, four hundred Marks. And if any Person, after he in form aforesaid shall have been twice convict of any Offence concerning any of the last recited Offences, shall offend the third time, and be thereof in form abovesaid lawfully convict, that then every Person so offending and convict, shall for his third Offence forfeit to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, all his Goods and Chattels, and shall suffer Imprisonment during his Life. And if any Person or Persons, that for his first Offence concerning the Premisses, shall be convict in form aforesaid, do not pay the Sum to be paid by virtue of his Conviction, in such manner and form, as the same ought to be paid, within six Weeks next after his Conviction; That then every Person so convict, and so not paying the same, shall for the same first Offence, instead of the said Sum, suffer Imprisonment by the space of six Months, without Bail or Mainprise. And if any Person or Persons, that for his second Offence concerning the Premisses, shall be convict in form aforesaid, do not pay the said Sum to be paid by virtue of his Conviction and this Estatute, in such manner and form as the same ought to be paid, within six Weeks next after his said second Conviction; That then every Person so convicted, and not paying the same, shall for the same second Offence, instead of the said Sum, suffer Imprisonment during twelve Months, without Bail or Mainprise. And that from and after the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next coming, all and every Person and Persons inhabiting within this Realm, or any other the Queen's Majesty's dominions, shall diligently and faithfully, having no lawful or reasonable excuse to be absent, endeavour themselves, to resort to their Parish-Church or Chapel accustomed, or upon reasonable let thereof, to some usual place, where Common Prayer, and such Service of God, shall be used in such time of let, upon every Sunday, and other days ordained or used to be kept as Holy-days, and then and there to abide orderly and soberly, during the time of Common Prayer, Preaching, or other Service of God there to be used, and ministered; upon pain of punishment by the Censures of the Church, and also upon pain that every Person so offending, shall forfeit for every such Offence, twelve Pence, to be levied by the Churchwardens of the Parish where such Offence shall be done, to the use of the poor of the same Parish, of the Goods, Lands and Tenements of such Offender, by way of Distress.

And for the due execution hereof, the Queen's most excellent Majesty, the Lords Temporal, and all the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, do in God's name earnestly require and charge all the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they shall endeavour themselves to the uttermost of their knowledges, that the due and true execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceses and Charges, as they will answer before God for such evils and plagues wherewith Almighty God may justly punish his people for neglecting this good and wholesome law. And for their Authority in this behalf, be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular the said Archbishops, Bishops, and other their officers exercising ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, as well in place exempt as not exempt, within their Dioceses, shall have full Power and Authority by this Act, to reform, correct and punish by Censures of the Church, all and singular Persons which shall offend within any of their Jurisdictions, or Dioceses, after the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next coming, against this Act and Statute; any other Law, Statute, Privilege, Liberty or Provision heretofore made, had or suffered to the contrary notwithstanding.

And it is Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Justice of Oyer and Determiner, or Justice of Assize, shall have full Power and Authority in every of their open and general Sessions, to enquire, hear and determine all and all manner of Offences, that shall be committed or done contrary to any Article contained in this present Act, within the limits of the Commission to them directed, and to make Process for the execution of the same, as they may do against any person being indicted before them of Trespass, or lawfully convicted thereof.

Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Archbishop and Bishop, shall or may at all time and times, at his liberty and pleasure, join and associate himself by virtue of this Act, to the said Justices of Oyer and Determiner, or to the said Justices of Assize, at every of the said open and general Sessions to be holden in any place within his Diocese, for and to the enquiry, hearing, and determining of the Offences aforesaid.

Provided also, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Books concerning the said Services, shall at the Costs and Charges of the Parishioners of every Parish and Cathedral Church, be attained and gotten before the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist next following; and that all such Parishes and Cathedral Churches, or other places, where the said Books shall be attained and gotten before the said Feast of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, shall within three Weeks next after the said Books so attained and gotten, use the said Service, and put the same in use according to this Act.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no Person or Persons shall be at any time hereafter impeached, or otherwise molested of, or for any the Offences above mentioned, hereafter to be committed, or done contrary to this Act, unless he or they so offending, be thereof indicted at the next general Sessions, to be holden before any such Justices of Oyer and Determiner, or Justices of Assize, next after any Offence committed or done contrary to the tenor of this Act.

Provided always, and be it Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular Lords of the Parliament, for the third Offence above mentioned, shall be tried by their Peers.

Provided also, and be it Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, that the Mayor of London, and all other Mayors, Bailiffs, and all other Head-Officers of all and singular Cities, Boroughs, and Towns-Corporate within this Realm, Wales, and the Marches of the same, to the which Justices of Assize do not commonly repair, shall have full Power and Authority by virtue of this Act, to enquire, hear, and determine the Offences abovesaid, and every of them, yearly within fifteen Days after the Feast of Easter and St. Michael the Archangel, in like manner and form as Justices of Assize and Oyer and Determiner may do.

Provided always, and be it Ordained and Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and singular Archbishops[e] and Bishops[f] and every of their Chancellors[g], Commissaries[h], Archdeacons[i], and other Ordinaries[k], having any peculiar Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, shall have full Power and Authority, by virtue of this Act, as well to enquire in their Visitation, Synods, and elsewhere within their Jurisdiction, at any other time and place, to take Accusations and Informations of all and every the things above mentioned, done, committed, or perpetrated, within the limits of their Jurisdictions and Authority, and to punish the same by Admonition, Excommunication, Sequestration or Deprivation, and other Censures and Process, in like form, as heretofore hath been used in like Cases by the Queen's Ecclesiastical Laws.

[g] — Chancellors,] The word "chancellor" is not mentioned in the commission, and but rarely in our ancient records: but seemeth to have grown into use in imitation of the like title in the state; inasmuch as the proper office of a chancellor, as such, was to be keeper of the seals of the Archbishop or Bishop, as appears from divers entries in the registry of the Archbishops of Canterbury.

This office, as it is now understood, includeth in it two other offices, which are distinguished in the commission by the titles of "official principal," and "vicar-general." The proper work of an official is, to hear causes between party and party, concerning wills, legacies, marriages, and the like, which are matters of temporal cognizance, but have been granted to the ecclesiastical courts by the concessions of princes. The proper work of a "vicar-general" is the exercise and administration of jurisdiction purely spiritual, by the authority and under the direction of the Bishop; as visitation, correction of manners, granting institutions and the like, with a general inspection of men and things, in order to the preserving of discipline and good government in the Church. Dr. Burn.

[h] — Commissaries,] Commissary is he that is limited by the Bishop, to some certain place of the diocese to assist him: and in most cases hath the authority of official principal and vicar-general within his limits. The Chancellor is not confined to any place of the diocese, nor limited to some certain causes only of jurisdiction: but every where, throughout the whole diocese, he supplieth the Bishop's absence in all matters and causes ecclesiastical within his diocese. But the authority of commissaries, as it is restrained to some certain place of the diocese, so is it also restrained to some certain cause of jurisdiction, limited unto them by the Bishop. Dr. Burn.

Offence eftsoons receive Punishment of the Ordinary: any thing contained in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Provided always, and be it Enacted, That such Ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers thereof, shall be retained, and be used, as was in this Church of England, by Authority of Parliament, in the second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, until other Order shall be therein taken by the Authority of the Queen's Majesty, with the Advice of her Commissioners appointed and authorized under the Great Seal of England for Causes Ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this Realm. And also, that if there shall happen any Contempt or Irreverence to be used in the Ceremonies or Rites of the Church, by the misusing of the Orders appointed in this Book, the Queen's Majesty may, by the like Advice of the said Commissioners or Metropolitan ordain and publish such further Ceremonies or Rites as may be most for the advancement of God's Glory, the edifying of his Church, and the due reverence of Christ's holy Mysteries and Sacraments.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all Laws, Statutes and Ordinances, wherein or whereby any other Service, Administration of Sacraments, or Common Prayer, is limited, established, or set forth to be used within this Realm, or any other the Queen's Dominions or Countries, shall from henceforth be utterly void and of none effect.

An Act for the Uniformity of Publick Prayers, and Administering the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies: And for establishing the Form of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, in the Church of England.

XIV. CAROLI II.

WHEREAS in the first Year of the late Queen Elizabeth, there was one uniform Order of Common Service and Prayer, and of the Administration of Sacraments, Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, (agreeable to the Word of God, and usage of the Primitive Church,) compiled by the Reverend Bishops and Clergy, set forth in one Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England, and enjoined to be used by Act of Parliament, holden in the said first Year of the said late Queen, intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Service in the Church, and Administration of the Sacraments, very comfortable to all good people desirous to live in Christian Conversation, and most profitable to the Estate of this Realm, upon the which the Mercy, Favour and Blessing of Almighty God is in no wise so readily and plentifully poured, as by Common Prayers, due using of the Sacraments, and often preaching of the Gospel, with devotion of the hearers: And yet this notwithstanding, a great number of people in divers parts of this Realm, following their own sensuality, and living without knowledge and due fear of God, do wilfully and schismatically abstain and refuse to come to their Parish-Churches, and other publick places where Common Prayer, Administration of the Sacraments, and Preaching of the Word of God is used upon the Sundays, and other days ordained and appointed to be kept and observed as Holy-days: And whereas by the great and scandalous neglect of Ministers in using the said Order of Liturgy so set forth and enjoined, as aforesaid, great mischiefs and inconveniences, during the time of the late unhappy troubles, have arisen and grown; and many people have been led into Factions and Schisms, to the great decay and scandal of the Reformed Religion of the Church of England, and to the hazard of many Souls: For prevention whereof in time to come, for settling the peace of the Church, and for allaying the present distempers, which the indisposition of the time hath contracted, The King's Majesty (according to his Declaration of the five and twentieth of October, One thousand six hundred and sixty) granted his Commission under the Great Seal[1] of England, to several Bishops, and other Divines, to review the Book of Common Prayer, and to prepare such Alteration and Additions as they thought fit to offer; And afterwards the Convocations of both the Provinces of Canterbury and York, being by His Majesty called and assembled, (and now sitting,) His Majesty hath been pleased to authorize and require the Presidents of the said Convocations, and other the Bishops and Clergy of the same, to review the said Book of Common Prayer, and the Book of the Form and Manner of the Making and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons: And that after mature consideration, they should make such Additions and Alterations in the said Books respectively, as to them should seem meet and convenient; and should exhibit and present the same to His Majesty in writing, for his further Allowance or Confirmation: Since which time, upon full and mature deliberation, they the said Presidents, Bishops and Clergy of both Provinces, have accordingly reviewed the said Books, and have made some Alterations which they think fit to be inserted to the same; and some

[1] —granted his Commission under the Great Seal] Which bore date March 25, 1661, and was directed to twelve bishops, and twelve presbyterian divines: with nine assistants on each side, to supply the places of the principals, when they should be occasionally absent. additional Prayers to the said Book of Common Prayer, to be used upon proper and emergent occasions; and have exhibited and presented the same unto His Majesty in writing, in one Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England; together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons: All which His Majesty having duly considered, hath fully approved and allowed the same, and recommended to this present Parliament, that the said Books of Common Prayer, and the Form of Ordination and Consecration of Bishops, Priests and Deacons with the Alterations and Additions, which have been so made and presented to His Majesty by the said Convocations, be the Book, which shall be appointed to be used by all that officiate in all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches and Chapels, and in all Chapels of Colleges and Halls in both the Universities, and the Colleges of Eton and Winchester, and in all Parish-Churches and Chapels, within the Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, and by all that Make or Consecrate Bishops, Priests or Deacons, in any of the said places, under such Sanctions and Penalties as the Houses of Parliament shall think fit. Now in regard that nothing conduceth more to the settling of the Peace of this Nation (which is desired of all good men) nor to the honour of our Religion, and the propagation thereof, than an universal agreement in the Public Worship of Almighty God; and to the intent that every Person within this Realm, may certainly know the rule, to which he is to conform in Publick Worship and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and the manner how, and by whom, Bishops, Priests and Deacons are, and ought to be Made, Ordained and Consecrated;

Be it Enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by the advice, and with the consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and of the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all and singular Ministers, in any Cathedral, Collegiate or Parish-Church or Chapel, or other place of Publick Worship within this realm of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, shall be bound to say and use the Morning Prayer, Evening Prayer, Celebration and Administration of both the Sacraments, and all other the Publick and Common Prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the said Book annexed and joined to this present Act, and intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England: together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons: And that the Morning and Evening Prayers therein contained, shall upon every Lord's Day, and upon all other days and occasions, and at the times therein appointed, be openly and solemnly read by all and every Minister or Curate, in every Church, Chapel, or other place of Publick Worship [m] within this Realm of England, and places aforesaid.

And to the end that Uniformity in the Publick Worship of God (which is so much desired) may be speedily effected; Be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every Parson[n], Vicar[o], or other Minister[p] whatsoever, who now hath, and enjoyeth any Ecclesiastical Benefice or Promotion, within this Realm of England, or places aforesaid, shall in the Church, Chapel or place of Publick Worship belonging to his said Benefice or Promotion, upon some Lord's Day before the Feast of St. Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord God One thousand six hundred sixty and two, openly, publickly and solemnly read the Morning and Evening Prayer appointed to be read by, and according to the said Book of Common Prayer, at the times thereby appointed; and after such reading thereof, shall openly and publickly, before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned assent and consent to the Use of all things in the said Book contained and prescribed, in these words and no other;

'I A. B. Do hereby declare my unfeigned assent and 'consent to all and every thing contained and pre-'scribed in and by the Book intituled, The Book of Com-'mon Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and 'other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to 'the Use of the Church of England: together with the 'Psalter or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be 'sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of m — or other place of Publick Worship] By the 22nd George II. chap. 33, All commanders, captains, and officers at sea, shall cause the publick worship of Almighty God, according to the Liturgy of the Church of England, to be performed in their respective ships: and prayers and preachings by the chaplains shall be performed diligently. And by the rubrick, before the service at sea, The Morning and Evening service, to be used daily at sea, shall be the same which is appointed in the Book of Common Prayer. Dr. Burn.

n — every Parson,] "Parson," persona, properly signifies the Rector of a parish church; because, during the time of his incumbency, he represents the Church, and in the eye of the law sustains the "person" thereof, as well in suing, as in being sued, in any action touching the same. Dr. Burn. The word was peculiarly applied in England to denote the Rector of a parish, who had the principal charge of the souls, in contradistinction to the Vicar or Curate, who was under him. Dr. Nicholls.

o — Vicar,] A Vicar is a person in holy Orders, who, under the Rector, or in his absence, or in case the great tithes of a church are impropriate, has the care of the souls of a parish committed to him. Dr. Nicholls.

p — or other Minister] The signification of the word "minister," both in our statutes, canons, and rubricks in the Book of Common Prayer, is equivocal. Oftentimes it is made to express the person officiating in general, whether priest or deacon: at other times it denoteth the priest alone, as contradistinguished from the deacon, as particularly in the statute of the 13th of Elizabeth, chap. 12, which ordains that "none shall be made minister, being under the age of four and twenty years;" and in the 31st Canon, which limits the times in which "deacons or ministers may be made or ordained." And in such cases the determination thereof can be ascertained only from the connection and circumstances. Dr. Burn.

And that all and every such person, who shall (without some lawful Impediment, to be allowed and approved of by the Ordinary of the place) neglect or refuse to do the same within the time aforesaid, or (in case of such Impediment) within one Month after such Impediment removed, shall, ipso facto, be deprived of all his Spiritual Promotions: and that from thenceforth it shall be lawful to and for all Patrons, and Donors of all and singular the said Spiritual Promotions, or of any of them, according to their respective Rights and Titles, to present or collate to the same, as though the person or persons so offending or neglecting were dead.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every person who shall hereafter be presented or collated, or put into any Ecclesiastical Benefice or Promotion, within this Realm of England, and places aforesaid, shall in the Church, Chapel or place of Publick Worship, belonging to his said Benefice or Promotion, within two Months next after that he shall be in the actual possession of the said Ecclesiastical Benefice or Promotion, upon some Lord's Day, openly, publickly and solemnly, read the Morning and Evening Prayers, appointed to be read by, and according to the said Book of Common Prayer, at the times thereby appointed; and after such reading thereof, shall openly and publickly, before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned assent and consent to the use of all things therein contained and prescribed, according to the form before appointed: And that all and every such person, who shall (without some lawful Impediment to be allowed and approved by the Ordinary of the Place) neglect or refuse to do the same within the time aforesaid, (or in case of such Impediment, within one Month after such Impediment removed) shall, ipso facto, be deprived of all his said Ecclesiastical Benefices and Promotions: And that from thenceforth it shall and may be lawful to, and for all Patrons and Donors of all and singular the said Ecclesiastical Benefices and Promotions, or any of them, according to their respective Rights and Titles, to present or collate to the same, as though the person or persons, so offending or neglecting, were dead.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in all places, where the proper Incumbent of any Patronage, or Vicarage, or Benefice with Cure, doth reside on his Living, and keep a Curate, the Incumbent himself in person (not having some lawful Impediment to be allowed by the Ordinary of the place) shall once (at the least) in every Month, openly and publickly read the Common Prayers and Service, in and by the said Book prescribed; and (if there be occasion) administer each of the Sacraments, and other Rites of the Church, in the Parish Church or Chapel of or belonging to the same Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, in such order, manner, and form, as in, and by the said Book is appointed, upon pain to forfeit the sum of five pounds to the use of the Poor of the Parish for every offence, upon conviction by confession, or proof of two credible witnesses upon Oath, before two Justices of the Peace of the County, City, or Town-Corporate where the Offence shall be committed, (which Oath the said Justices are hereby impowered to administer,) and in default of payment within ten days, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, by the Warrant of the said Justices, by the Church-wardens, or Overseers of the Poor of the said Parish, rendering the surplusage to the party.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That every Dean[q], Canon, and Prebendary[r] of every Cathedral, or Collegiate-Church, and all Masters, and other Heads, Fellows, Chaplains, and Tutors of or in any College, Hall, House of Learning, or Hospital, and every publick Professor and Reader in either of the Universities, and in every College elsewhere, and every Parson, Vicar, Curate, Lecturer[s], and every other person in holy Orders, and every School-master keeping any q — every Dean] Tho word "Dean" comes from the Latin "Decanus," which signifies the governor or inspector over ten persons; or rather the chief of the ten, who was to keep the rest in good order. The word was first used among the soldiers, ten of whom made a party, that lodged together in one tent, or were quartered together in one place. After the institution of monks the name was adopted among them, to signify a chief monk in a fraternity, who was to superintend nine or ten of his bretbren, and keep them in good order. The secular clergy made use of the same sort of government: for the Archi-presbyter, who had the inspection over about ten parish-priests, was called the "Decanus ruralis," or the "rural dean." And so the collegiate churches, or colleges of secular priests, generally instituted their governor by the name of Dean, because the body did, for the most part, consist of about ten or twelve. Dr. Nicholls.

r — Canon, and Prebendary] The name "canon" probably comes from the Latin word "canon," which signifies a dole, an allowance, or stated quantity of provisions, either to be received or delivered out. And thus it is used by Cicero and others. Afterwards, when Christianity prevailed, the word was adapted to an ecclesiastical use; and those clergymen, who had the "canon," taken from the common bank of the church offerings, delivered out to them for their maintenance, came to be called "Canonici." A "Prebendary" is so called from the "præbenda" or income he has, as being member of a cathedral church. For in the ages of the barbarous Latinity "præbenda" was used, to signify the revenue of such a preferment. In process of time, when the cathedral churches were well endowed, they left off receiving the income of their lands into one common bank; and, in lieu thereof, parcelled out their lands into several shares, appropriating them for the maintenance of each single clergyman, who resided about the cathedral church, calling it "præbenda," or "corpus præbendæ," the "corps of the præbend." Hence arose the difference between a Prebend and a Canonry; that a Canonry was a right, which a person had in a church, to be deemed a brother, or member thereof, to have the right of a stall therein, and of giving a vote in the chapter: but a Prebend was a right to receive certain revenues appropriated to the place. Dr. Nicholls.

The books generally confound the two words "prebend" and "prebendary:" whereas the former signifieth the office, or the emolument annexed to the office; and the latter signifieth the officer, or person who executeth the office and enjoyeth the emolument. A "canonry" also is a name of office; and a canon is the officer. Dr. Burn.

s — Lecturer,] In the popish times there were divinity lectures read publickly in the universities: but these were chiefly formed from the Schoolmen, and consisted for the most part in comments upon the sentences. The first that deserved the name of lectures in divinity, as being expositions of the holy Scriptures, were begun in Cambridge about the year 1524 by one Stafford, who was university preacher; that is, one of the publick or private School, and every person instructing or teaching any Youth in any House or private Family, as a Tutor or School-master, who upon the first Day of May, which shall be in the Year of our Lord God One thousand six hundred sixty-two, or at any time thereafter, shall be Incumbent, or have possession of any Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professor's place, or Reader's place, Parsonage, Vicarage, or any other Ecclesiastical Dignity or Promotion, or of any Curate's place, Lecture or School; or shall instruct or teach any youth, as Tutor or School-master, shall before the Feast-day of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord One thousand six hundred sixty-two, or at or before his, or their respective admission, to be Incumbent, or have possession aforesaid, subscribe the Declaration or Acknowledgement following, scilicet:

'I A. B. Do declare, That it is not lawful upon any 'pretence whatsoever to take arms against the 'King; and that I do abhor that traiterous Position of 'taking Arms by his Authority against his Person, or 'against those that are commissioned by him; and that 'I will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of England, 'as it is now by Law established. And I do declare, 'That I do hold there lies no obligation upon me, or on 'any other person, from the Oath, commonly called 'The Solemn League and Covenant, to endeavour any 'change, or alteration of Government either in Church 'or State; and that the same was in itself an unlawful 'Oath, and imposed upon the Subjects of this Realm 'against the known Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom.'

Which said Declaration and Acknowledgement shall be subscribed by every of the said Masters, and other Heads, Fellows, Chaplains, and Tutors of or in any College, Hall or House of Learning, and by every publick Professor and Reader in either of the Universities, before the Vice Chancellor of the respective Universities for the time being, or his Deputy: And the said Declaration or Acknowledgement shall be subscribed before the Respective Archbishop, Bishop, or Ordinary of the Diocese by every other person hereby enjoined to subscribe the same; upon pain, that all and every of the persons aforesaid failing in such subscription, shall lose and forfeit such respective Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professor's place, Reader's place, Parsonage, Vicarage, Ecclesiastical Dignity or Promotion, Curate's place, Lecture and School, and shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same: And that every such respective Deanry, Canonry, Prebend, Mastership, Headship, Fellowship, Professor's place, Reader's place, Parsonage, Vicarage, Ecclesiastical Dignity or Promotion, Curate's place, Lecture and School, shall be void, as if such person so failing were naturally dead.

And if any School-master, or other person, instructing or teaching Youth in any private House or Family, as a Tutor or School-master, shall instruct or teach any Youth, as a Tutor or School-master, before Licence obtained from his respective Archbishop, Bishop, or Ordinary of the Diocese, according to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm (for which he shall pay twelve-pence only) and before such Subscription and Acknowledgement made, as aforesaid; Then every such School-master, and other, instructing and teaching, as aforesaid, shall for the first offence suffer three Months Imprisonment without Bail or Mainprise; and for every second and other such offence, shall suffer three Months Imprisonment without Bail or Mainprise, and also forfeit to his Majesty the Sum of five pounds.

And after such Subscription made, every such Parson, Vicar, Curate, and Lecturer, shall procure a Certificate under the hand and seal of the respective Archbishop, Bishop or Ordinary of the Diocese (who are hereby enjoined and required upon demand to make and deliver the same) and shall publickly and openly read the same, together with the Declaration or Acknowledgement aforesaid, upon some Lord's Day within three Months then next following, in his Parish Church, where he is to officiate, in the presence of the Congregation there assembled, in the time of Divine Service; upon pain that every person failing therein, shall lose such Parsonage, Vicarage or Benefice, Curate's place, or Lecturer's place respectively, and shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same; and that the said Parsonage, Vicarage or Benefice, Curate's place, or Lecturer's place, shall be void, as if he was naturally dead.

Provided always, That from and after the twenty-fifth Day of March, which shall be in the Year of our Lord God One thousand six hundred eighty-two, there shall be omitted in the said Declaration, or Acknowledgement so to be subscribed and read, these words following, scilicet:

twelve whom the university had the power of licensing by a grant from the Pope. And as these lectures were profitable for the students there, so we find a like method of instruction was introduced into the convents, where persons were licensed by the Bishop to read divinity. And the theological lectures in cathedral churches were of the same sort; that is, intended for the use of parsons, vicars, and chantry priests, who are injoined to attend the said lectures. And thus far they are sufficiently distinguished from sermons or popular discourses.

But when they came to be introduced into parish churches, in the great and populous towns, either upon the settlement of a stipend to support the Lecturer, or upon the voluntary contributions of the inhabitants under the licence of the Bishop, it was natural to expect they would by degrees be converted into such practical discourses as the preachers generally made. And so it hath proved in the event. For, though the name of "lectures" is still retained, yet they are become in effect one and the same thing with preaching; this difference only remaining, that a lecture is a sermon extra ordinem, performed by a stipendiary preacher, as being no part of the duty incumbent on the minister of the parish; and on such days, or at such hours, as that they do not interfere with his offices and ministrations. What indeed comes nearest to the old design of lectures, are those that are appointed to be read yearly on particular subjects; as Mr. Boyle's and Lady Moyer's Lectures, and likewise such catechetical lectures as are kept up by the Clergy in some large and populous towns. Archdeacon Sharp.

'Covenant, to endeavour any change or alteration of 'Government either in Church or State; and that the 'same was in itself an unlawful Oath, and imposed upon 'the Subjects of this Realm against the known Laws 'and Liberties of this Kingdom.'

So as none of the persons aforesaid shall from thenceforth be at all obliged to subscribe or read that part of the said Declaration or Acknowledgement.

Provided always, and be it Enacted, That from and after the Feast of St. Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord One thousand six hundred sixty and two, no person, who now is Incumbent, and in possession of any Parsonage, Vicarage, or Benefice, and who is not already in holy Orders by Episcopal Ordination, or shall not before the said Feast-day of St. Bartholomew be ordained Priest or Deacon, according to the form of Episcopal Ordination, shall have, hold, or enjoy the said Parsonage, Vicarage, Benefice with Cure, or other Ecclesiastical Promotion within this Kingdom of England, or the Dominion of Wales, or Town of Berwick upon Tweed; but shall be utterly disabled, and ipso facto deprived of the same; and all his Ecclesiastical Promotions shall be void, as if he was naturally dead.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no Person whatsoever shall thenceforth be capable to be admitted to any Parsonage, Vicarage, Benefice, or other Ecclesiastical Promotion or Dignity whatsoever, nor shall presume to consecrate and administer the holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, before such time as he shall be ordained Priest, according to the Form and Manner in and by the said Book prescribed, unless he have formerly been made Priest by Episcopal Ordination, upon pain to forfeit for every Offence the sum of one hundred pounds; one moiety thereof to the King's Majesty, the other moiety thereof to be equally divided between the Poor of the Parish where the Offence shall be committed, and such Person or Persons as shall sue for the same by Action of Debt, Bill, Plaint or Information, in any of his Majesty's Courts of Record, wherein no Essoign, Protection or Wager of Law shall be allowed, and to be disabled from taking, or being admitted into the Order of Priest, by the space of one whole Year then next following.

Provided, That the Penalties in this Act shall not extend to the Foreigners or Aliens of the Foreign Reformed Churches allowed, or to be allowed by the King's Majesty, his Heirs and Successors in England.

Provided always, That no Title to confer, or present by Lapse, shall accrue by any avoidance or deprivation ipso facto by virtue of this Statute, but after six Months notice of such avoidance or deprivation given by the Ordinary to the Patron, or such Sentence of deprivation openly and publickly read in the Parish Church of the Benefice, Parsonage or Vicarage becoming void, or whereof the Incumbent shall be deprived by virtue of this Act.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no Form or Order of Common Prayers, Administration of Sacraments, Rites or Ceremonies shall be openly used in any Church, Chapel, or other public Place of or in any College or Hall in either of the Universities, the Colleges of Westminster, Winchester, or Eton; or any of them, other than what is prescribed, and appointed to be used in and by the said Book; and that the present Governor, or Head of every College and Hall in the said Universities, and of the said Colleges of Westminster, Winchester, and Eton, within one Month after the Feast of St. Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord One thousand six hundred sixty and two; and every Governor or Head of any of the said Colleges or Halls hereafter to be elected or appointed, within one Month next after his Election or Collation, and Admission into the same Government or Headship, shall openly and publickly in the Church, Chapel, or other publick place of the same College or Hall, and in the presence of the Fellows and Scholars of the same, or the greater part of them then resident, subscribe unto the Nine and thirty Articles of Religion, mentioned in the Statute made in the thirteenth Year of the reign of the late Queen Elizabeth, and unto the said Book, and declare his unfeigned Assent and Consent unto, and approbation of the said Articles, and of the same Book, and to the use of all the Prayers, Rites, and Ceremonies, Forms and Orders in the said Book prescribed and contained, according to the Form aforesaid; and that all such Governors, or Heads of the said Colleges or Halls, or any of them, as are, or shall be in holy Orders, shall once (at least in every quarter of the year, not having a lawful Impediment) openly and publickly read the Morning Prayer, and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be read in the Church, Chapel, or other publick place of the same College or Hall; upon pain to lose, and be suspended of and from all the Benefits and Profits belonging to the same Government or Headship, by the space of six Months, by the Visitor or Visitors of the same College or Hall; and if any Governor or Head of any College or Hall, suspended for not subscribing unto the said Articles and Book, and for not reading of the Morning Prayer and Service, as aforesaid, shall not at, or before the end of six Months next after such Suspension, subscribe unto the said Articles and Book, and declare his Consent thereunto, as aforesaid, or read the Morning Prayer and Service, as aforesaid, then such Government or Headship shall be ipso facto void.

Provided always, That it shall and may be lawful to use the Morning and Evening Prayer, and all other Prayers and Service prescribed in and by the said Book, in the Chapels or other publick places of the respective Colleges and Halls in both the Universities, in the Colleges of Westminster, Winchester, and Eton, and in the Convocations of the Clergies of either Province, in Latin; any thing in this Act contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That no person shall be, or be received as a Lecturer, or permitted, suffered, or allowed to preach as a Lecturer, or to preach, or read any Sermon or Lecture in any Church, Chapel, or other place of publick Worship, within this Realm of England, or the Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, unless he be first approved and thereunto licensed by the Archbishop of the Province, or Bishop of the Diocese, or (in case the See be void) by the Guardian of the Spiritualities, under his Seal; and shall in the presence of the same Archbishop, or Bishop, or Guardian, read the Nine and thirty Articles of Religion mentioned in the statute of the Thirteenth year of the late Queen Elizabeth, with Declaration of his unfeigned Assent to the same; and that every person and persons, who now is, or hereafter shall be licensed, assigned, appointed, or received as a Lecturer, to preach upon any Day of the Week, in any Church, Chapel, or place of publick Worship within this Realm of England, or places aforesaid, the first time he preacheth (before his Sermon) shall openly, publickly, and solemnly read the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be read for that time of the day, and then and there publickly and openly declare his Assent unto, and Approbation of the said Book, and to the Use of all the Prayers, Rites, and Ceremonies, Forms and Orders therein contained and prescribed, according to the Form before appointed in this Act; and also shall upon the first Lecture-day of every Month afterwards, so long as he continues Lecturer, or Preacher there, at the place appointed for his said Lecture or Sermon, before his said Lecture or Sermon, openly, publickly, and solemnly read the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be read for that time of the day, at which the said Lecture or Sermon is to be preached, and after such reading thereof, shall openly and publickly, before the Congregation there assembled, declare his unfeigned Assent and Consent unto, and Approbation of the said Book, and to the Use of all the Prayers, Rites, and Ceremonies, Forms and Orders, therein contained and prescribed, according to the Form aforesaid; and that all and every such person or persons who shall neglect or refuse to do the same, shall from thenceforth be disabled to preach the said, or any other Lecture or Sermon in the said, or any other Church, Chapel, or place of publick Worship, until such time as he and they shall openly, publickly, and solemnly read the Common Prayers and Service appointed by the said Book, and conform in all points to the things therein appointed and prescribed, according to the purport, true intent, and meaning of this Act.

Provided always, That if the said Sermon or Lecture be to be preached or read in any Cathedral or Collegiate Church or Chapel, it shall be sufficient for the said Lecturer, openly at the time aforesaid, to declare his Assent and Consent to all things contained in the said Book, according to the Form aforesaid.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any person, who is by this Act disabled to preach any Lecture or Sermon, shall during the time that he shall continue and remain so disabled, preach any Sermon or Lecture; that then for every such offence, the person and persons so offending shall suffer three Months imprisonment in the common Gaol without Bail or Mainprise; and that any two Justices of the Peace of any County of this Kingdom and places aforesaid, and the Mayor or other chief Magistrate of any City or Town-Corporate within the same, upon Certificate from the Ordinary of the place made to him or them of the offence committed, shall and are hereby required to commit the person or persons so offending, to the Gaol of the same County, City, or Town-Corporate accordingly.

Provided always, and be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That at all and every time and times when any Sermon or Lecture is to be preached, the Common Prayers and Service in and by the said Book appointed to be read for that time of the day, shall be openly, publickly and solemnly read by some Priest or Deacon, in the Church, Chapel or place of publick Worship where the said Sermon or Lecture is to be preached; and the Lecturer then to preach shall be present at the reading thereof.

Provided nevertheless, That this Act shall not extend to the University Churches in the Universities of this Realm, or either of them, when or at such times as any Sermon or Lecture is preached or read in the same Churches, or any of them, for, or as the publick University Sermon or Lecture; but that the same Sermons and Lectures may be preached or read in such sort and manner as the same have been heretofore preached or read; this Act, or any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the several good Laws, and Statutes of this Realm, which have been formerly made, and are now in force for the Uniformity of Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, within this Realm of England, and places aforesaid, shall stand in full force and strength, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, for the establishing and confirming of the said Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England: together with the Psalter or Psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, herein before mentioned to be joined and annexed to this Act; and shall be applied, practised, and put in use for the punishing of all offences contrary to the said Laws, with relation to the Book aforesaid, and no other.

Provided always, and be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in all those Prayers, Litanies, and Collects, which do any way relate to the King, Queen, or Royal Progeny, the Names be altered and changed from time to time, and fitted to the present occasion, according to the direction of lawful Authority[t].

[t] — according to the direction of lawful Authority.] Authority of Parliament is not what is here intended, it being in the power of the Parliament to make such alterations as to them should seem meet: but what is intended is, that it should be in the power of the Crown to alter the names: from which it appears, that no alteration, nor addition can be made in the service, not even of names, by authority either of the Crown or of the Ordinary, unless expressly provided for in the Act or Rubricks. Dr. Nicholls.

Provided also, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That a true printed Copy of the said Book, intituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the Use of the Church of England: together with the Psalter or Psalms of David pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, shall at the Costs and Charges of the Parishioners of every Parish Church and Chapelry, Cathedral Church, College and Hall, be attained and gotten before the Feast-day of St. Bartholomew, in the Year of our Lord One thousand six hundred sixty and two, upon pain of forfeiture of three pounds by the month, for so long time as they shall then after be unprovided thereof, by every Parish, or Chapelry, Cathedral Church, College and Hall, making default therein.

Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Bishops of Hereford, Saint David's, Asaph, Bangor, and Llandaff, and their Successors, shall take such Order among themselves, for the souls' health of the Flocks committed to their charge within Wales, that the Book hereunto annexed be truly and exactly translated into the British or Welsh Tongue; and that the same so translated, and being by them, or any three of them at the least, viewed, perused and allowed, be imprinted to such number at least, so that one of the said Books so translated and imprinted, may be had for every Cathedral, Collegiate and Parish Church, and Chapel of Ease in the said respective Dioceses and Places in Wales, where the Welsh is commonly spoken or used, before the first Day of May, One thousand six hundred sixty-five: and that from and after the imprinting and publishing of the said Book so translated, the whole Divine Service shall be used and said by the Ministers and Curates throughout all Wales within the said Dioceses where the Welsh Tongue is commonly used, in the British or Welsh Tongue, in such manner and form as is prescribed according to the Book hereunto annexed to be used in the English Tongue, differing nothing in any Order or Form from the said English Book; for which Book so translated and imprinted, the Church-wardens of every of the said Parishes shall pay out of the Parish-Money in their hands for the use of the respective Churches, and be allowed the same on their Account; and that the said Bishops and their Successors, or any three of them at the least, shall set and appoint the price for which the said Book shall be sold: And one other Book of Common Prayer in the English Tongue, shall be bought and had in every Church throughout Wales, in which the Book of Common Prayer in Welsh is to be had by force of this Act, before the first Day of May, One thousand six hundred sixty and four; and the same Book to remain in such convenient places, within the said Churches, that such as understand them may resort at all convenient times to read and peruse the same, and also such as do not understand the said language, may, by conferring both Tongues together, the sooner attain to the Knowledge of the English Tongue; any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithstanding: And until printed Copies of the said Book, so to be translated, may be had and provided, the Form of Common Prayer established by Parliament, before the making of this Act, shall be used as formerly in such parts of Wales where the English Tongue is not commonly understood.

And to the end that the true and perfect Copies of this Act, and the said Book hereunto annexed, may be safely kept, and perpetually preserved, and for the avoiding of all Disputes for the time to come; Be it therefore Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the respective Deans and Chapters of every Cathedral or Collegiate Church within England and Wales, shall at their proper Costs and Charges, before the twenty-fifth Day of December, One thousand six hundred sixty-two, obtain under the Great Seal of England, a true and perfect printed Copy of this Act, and of the said Book annexed hereunto, to be by the said Deans and Chapters, and their Successors, kept and preserved in safety for ever, and to be also produced, and shewed forth in any Court of Record, as often as they shall be thereunto lawfully required; and also there shall be delivered true and perfect Copies of this Act, and of the same Book, into the respective Courts at Westminster, and into the Tower of London, to be kept and preserved for ever among the Records of the said Courts, and the Records of the Tower, to be also produced and shewed forth in any Court as need shall require: which said Books, so to be exemplified under the Great Seal of England, shall be examined by such persons as the King's Majesty shall appoint, under the Great Seal of England, for that purpose, and shall be compared with the Original Book hereunto annexed, and shall have power to correct and amend in Writing any error committed by the Printer in the printing of the same Book, or of any thing therein contained, and shall certify in Writing under their Hands and Seals, or the Hands and Seals of any three of them, at the end of the same Book, that they have examined and compared the same Book, and find it to be a true and perfect Copy; which said Books, and every one of them so exemplified under the Great Seal of England, as aforesaid, shall be deemed, taken, adjudged and expounded to be good and available in the Law, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and shall be accounted as good Records as this Book itself hereunto annexed; any Law or Custom to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

Provided also, That this Act, or any thing therein contained, shall not be prejudicial or hurtful unto the King's Professor of Law within the University of Oxford, for or concerning the Prebend of Shipton within the Cathedral Church of Sarum, united and annexed unto the Place of the same King's Professor for the Time being, by the late King James of blessed memory.

Provided always, That whereas the Six and thirtieth Article of the Nine and thirty Articles agreed upon by the Archbishops and Bishops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy in the Convocation holden at London, in the Year of our Lord One thousand five hundred sixty-two, for the avoiding of Diversities of Opinions, and for establishing of Consent touching true Religion, is in these words following, viz.

That the Book of Consecration of Archbishops and Bishops, and Ordaining of Priests and Deacons, lately set forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, and confirmed at the same time by Authority of Parliament, doth contain all things necessary to such Consecration and Ordaining, neither hath it any thing that of itself is superstitious and ungodly: and therefore whosoever are Consecrated or Ordered according to the Rites of that Book since the second Year of the aforenamed King Edward unto this time, or hereafter shall be Consecrated or Ordered according to the same Rites; We decree all such to be rightly, orderly, and lawfully Consecrated and Ordered;

It be Enacted, and be it therefore Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all Subscriptions hereafter to be had or made unto the said Articles by any Deacon, Priest, or Ecclesiastical person, or other person whatsoever, who by this Act, or any other Law now in force is required to subscribe unto the said Articles, shall be construed, and taken to extend, and shall be applied (for and touching the said Six and thirtieth Article) unto the Book containing the Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, in this Act mentioned, in such sort and manner as the same did heretofore extend unto the Book set forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, mentioned in the said Six and thirtieth Article; any thing in the said Article or in any Statute, Act or Canon heretofore had or made, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding.

Provided also, That the Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, together with the Form and Manner of Ordaining and Consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons, heretofore in use, and respectively established by Act of Parliament in the First and Eighth Years of Queen Elizabeth, shall be still used and observed in the Church of England, until the Feast of Saint Bartholomew, which shall be in the Year of our Lord God One thousand six hundred sixty and two.

THE PREFACE[u].

IT hath been the wisdom of the Church of England, ever since the first compiling of her publick Liturgy, to keep the mean between the two extremes, of too much stiffness in refusing, and of too much easiness in admitting any variation from it. For, as on the one side common experience sheweth, that where a change hath been made of things advisedly established (no evident necessity so requiring) sundry inconveniences have thereupon ensued; and those many times more and greater than the evils, that were intended to be remedied by such change: So on the other side, the particular Forms of Divine worship, and the Rites and Ceremonies appointed to be used therein, being things in their own nature indifferent, and alterable[x], and so acknowledged; it is but reasonable, that upon weighty and important considerations, according to the various exigency of times and occasions, such changes and alterations should be made therein, as to those that are in place of Authority should from time to time seem either necessary or expedient. Accordingly we find, that in the Reigns of several Princes of blessed memory since the Reformation, the Church, upon just and weighty considerations her thereunto moving, hath yielded to make such alterations in some particulars, as in their respective times were thought convenient: Yet so, as that the main Body and Essentials of it (as well in the chiefest materials, as in the frame and order thereof) have still continued the same unto this day, and do yet stand firm and unshaken, notwithstanding all the vain attempts and impetuous assaults made against it, by such men as are given to change, and have always discovered a greater regard to their own private fancies and interests, than to that duty they owe to the publick.

By what undue means, and for what mischievous purposes the use of the Liturgy (though enjoined by the Laws of the Land, and those Laws never yet repealed) came, during the late unhappy confusions, to be discontinued, is too well known to the world, and we are not willing here to remember. But when, upon His Majesty's happy Restoration, it seemed probable, that, amongst other things, the use of the Liturgy would also return of course (the same having never been legally abolished) unless some timely means were used to prevent it; those men who under the late usurped powers had made it a great part of their business to render the people disaffected thereunto, saw themselves in point of reputation and interest concerned (unless they would freely acknowledge themselves to have erred, which such men are very hardly brought to do) with their utmost endeavours to hinder the restitution thereof. In order whereunto divers Pamphlets were published[y] against the Book of Common Prayer, the old objections mustered up, with the addition of some new ones, more than formerly had been made, to make the number swell. In fine, great importunities were used to His Sacred Majesty[z], that the said Book might be revised, and such Alterations therein, and Additions thereunto made, as should be thought requisite for the ease of tender Consciences: whereunto His Majesty, out of his pious inclination to give satisfaction (so far as could be reasonably expected) to all his subjects of what persuasion soever, did graciously condescend.

In which review we have endeavoured to observe the like moderation, as we find to have been used in the like case in former times. And therefore of the sundry alterations proposed unto us, we have rejected all such as were either of dangerous consequence (as secretly [u] The Preface.] This Preface was written after the review of the Common Prayer in 1661; concerning which see above, page ix. It is said to have been drawn up by Dr. Sanderson, then Bishop of Lincoln; and it should seem by the style to be his. However no mention of his being the author of it is made in the Acts of the Upper House of Convocation. It is there only said, that, "on Monday the 2nd of December, The Preface or Introduction to the Common Prayer Book was brought in and read." It was referred to a committee of the Upper House the same day to consider of it: who were Dr. Matthew Wrenn, bishop of Ely; Dr. Robert Skinner, bishop of Oxon; Dr. Humphrey Henchman, bishop of Sarum; and Dr. George Griffith, bishop of St. Asaph. On the 13th of that month the Acts say, some amendments were made to the Preface. Dr. Nicholls.

[x] — being things in their own nature indifferent, and alterable,] It is inconceivable what difficulties the bishops at that time had to contend with, about making the alterations. They were not only to conquer their own former resentments and the quick remembrance of their sufferings, together with the unreasonable demands of the Presbyterian party; but they had the Court to deal with likewise, who pushed on to all acts of severity, but were willing to let the odium thereof remain with the clergy. And by the management of some great persons, then in power, the minds of the episcopal clergy and zealous conformists were so wrought up, upon the talk of these alterations, that the bishops, who were concerned in them, found it a difficult matter to manage the temper of their own friends. This was the occasion of this apologetical expression in the Preface, for the alterations they had made. And the assertion, that "ceremonies in their own nature are indifferent and alterable," is grounded on the doctrine of the 34th Article of our Church. Dr. Nicholls.

[y] — divers Pamphlets were published] The pamphlets, here pointed at, seem to be, "The Exceptions against the Common Prayer," London, 1661; and the "Reply to the Bishops' Answer to the Exceptions." Dr. Nicholls.

[z] — great importunities were used to His Sacred Majesty.] What these were, is to be seen in the two "Papers of Proposals, concerning the discipline and ceremonies of the Church of England, humbly presented to his Majesty, by the reverend ministers of the Presbyterian persuasion;" London, printed in the year 1661. Dr. Nicholls.

striking at some established Doctrine, or laudable Practice of the Church of England, or indeed of the whole Catholic Church of Christ) or else of no consequence at all, but utterly frivolous and vain. But such Alterations as were tendered to us (by what persons, under what pretences, or to what purpose soever tendered) as seemed to us in any degree requisite or expedient, we have willingly, and of our own accord assented unto: not enforced so to do by any strength of Argument, convincing us of the necessity of making the said Alterations: For we are fully persuaded in our judgments (and we here profess it to the world) that the Book, as it stood before established by Law, doth not contain in it any thing contrary to the Word of God, or to sound Doctrine, or which a godly man may not with a good Conscience use and submit unto, or which is not fairly defensible against any that shall oppose the same; if it shall be allowed such just and favourable construction as in common equity ought to be allowed to all human Writings, especially such as are set forth by Authority, and even to the very best translations of the holy Scripture itself.

Our general aim therefore in this undertaking was, not to gratify this or that party in any their unreasonable demands; but to do that, which to our best understandings we conceived might most tend to the preservation of Peace and Unity in the Church; the procuring of Reverence, and exciting of Piety and Devotion in the publick Worship of God; and the cutting off occasion from them that seek occasion of cavil or quarrel against the Liturgy of the Church. And as to the several Variations from the former Book, whether by Alteration, Addition, or otherwise, it shall suffice to give this general account, That most of the Alterations were made, either first, for the better direction of them that are to officiate in any part of Divine Service: which is chiefly done in the Calendars and Rubricks[a]: or secondly, for the more proper expressing of some words or phrases of ancient usage in terms more suitable to the language of the present times, and the clearer explanation of some other words and phrases, that were either of doubtful signification, or otherwise liable to misconstruction: or thirdly, for a more perfect rendering of such portions of holy Scripture, as are inserted into the Liturgy; which, in the Epistles and Gospels especially, and in sundry other places, are now ordered to be read according to the last Translation: and that it was thought convenient, that some Prayers and Thanksgivings, fitted to special occasions, should be added in their due places; particularly for those at Sea, together with an office for the Baptism of such as are of riper years: which, although not so necessary when the former Book was compiled, yet by the growth of Anabaptism, through the licentiousness of the late times crept in amongst us, is now become necessary, and may be always useful for the baptizing of Natives in our Plantations, and others converted to the Faith. If any man, who shall desire a more particular account of the several Alterations in any part of the Liturgy, shall take the pains to compare the present Book with the former; we doubt not but the reason of the change may easily appear.

And having thus endeavoured to discharge our duties in this weighty affair, as in the sight of God, and to approve our sincerity therein (so far as lay in us) to the consciences of all men: although we know it impossible (in such variety of apprehensions, humours, and interests, as are in the world) to please all; nor can expect that men of factious, peevish, and perverse spirits should be satisfied with any thing that can be done in this kind by any other than themselves[b]: Yet we have good hope, that what is here presented, and hath been by the Convocations of both Provinces with great diligence examined and approved, will be also well accepted and approved by all sober, peaceable, and truly conscientious Sons of the Church of England.

[a] — Rubricks:] Rubricks are the rules or orders, directing how, when, and where all things in divine service are to be performed: which for distinction were formerly printed in a red character, as now in an Italick, and therefore called "Rubricks," from Rubrica, which in Latin signifies a red colouring, vermilion, &c. Dr. Bisse. The Rubricks of the Missal and other Romish offices are still printed in red characters. In our older Books of Common Prayer the Rubricks are distinguished from the text by appearing in a smaller type. In the books of the 17th century the Rubricks are generally printed in Roman letters, while the Liturgy itself remains in the old English or the black letter. In this manner are printed the Sealed Books, and the larger editions of 1662, &c.; but in all modern legitimate editions, the whole of the offices, except the responses, is, I believe, universally printed in the Roman character, and the Rubricks in the Italick. Shepherd.

Concerning the duty of the clergy, to be regulated in their ministrations by the Rubricks, the reader is requested to refer to page 699, note c; and to page 794, note x.

[b] — should be satisfied with any thing that can be done in this kind by any other than themselves:] This stricture seems to be levelled against the new prayers drawn up by Mr. Baxter, by appointment of the Presbyterian commissioners, in the "Reformation of the Liturgy;" published together with the "Petition for Peace," London, 1661. Dr. Nicholls.

CONCERNING THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH [c].

THERE was never any thing by the wit of man so well devised, or so sure established, which in continuance of time hath not been corrupted: As, among other things, it may plainly appear by the Common Prayers in the Church, commonly called Divine Service. The first original and ground whereof [d] if a man would search out by the ancient Fathers, he shall find, that the same was not ordained but of a good purpose, and for a great advancement of godliness. For they so ordered the matter, that all the whole Bible (or the greatest part thereof) should be read over once every year; intending thereby that the Clergy, and especially such as were Ministers in the Congregation, should (by often reading, and meditation in God's word) be stirred up to godliness themselves, and be more able to exhort others by wholesome Doctrine, and to confute them that were adversaries to the truth; and further, that the people (by daily hearing of holy Scripture read in the church) might continually profit more and more in the knowledge of God, and be the more inflamed with the love of his true Religion.

But these many years past, this godly and decent order of the ancient Fathers hath been so altered [e], broken, and neglected, by planting in uncertain Stories, and Legends [f], with multitude of Responds [g], Verses [h], vain Repetitions, Commemorations [i], and Synodals [k], that commonly when any book of the Bible was begun, after three or four Chapters were read out, all the rest were unread. And in this sort the Book of Isaiah was begun in Advent, and the Book of Genesis in Septuagesima; but they were only begun, and never read through: After like sort were other Books of holy Scripture used. And moreover, whereas St. Paul would have such language spoken to the people in the Church, as they might understand, and have profit by hearing the same; The Service in this Church of England these many years hath been read in Latin to the people, which they understand not; so that they have heard with their ears only, and their heart, spirit, and mind, have not been edified thereby. And furthermore, notwithstanding that the ancient Fathers have divided the Psalms into seven portions, whereof every one was called a Nocturn [l]: Now of late time a few of them have been daily said, and the rest utterly omitted. Moreover, the number and hardness of the Rules called the Pie [m], and the manifold changings of the Service, was

[c] Concerning the Service of the Church.] This preface was composed by the original compilers of the Common Prayer; only the two last paragraphs are not in the 1st Book of Edward VI. Dr. Nicholls.

[d] — The first original and ground whereof &c.] These words are to shew, that the Latin service, which had been of late years defiled by the mixture of a great many foul and popish errors, did however retain in it many ancient forms, received in the Church in the best times; and that some parts thereof are still to be found in the writings of the ancient Fathers, who mention many of these offices in their books. Dr. Nicholls.

[e] — this godly and decent order of the ancient Fathers hath been so altered, &c.] The Scriptures are ordered to be read in the Roman service in so confused a method, that, if they were not read in an unknown tongue, the people could not receive any benefit therefrom. For there are not more than three or four verses to be read at one time; and then follows a response or short anthem to be sung; and then three or four verses of the same chapter again; and then another response: after this rate breaking the chapter into ten or twelve lessons; sometimes mixing parts of another chapter; at other times some of Saint Austin's or Saint Ambrose's Homilies, or passages out of worse books. Dr. Nicholls.

[f] — planting in uncertain Stories, and Legends,] These legendary stories are chiefly read upon the saints' days; but every day in the year being dedicated to some odd saint or other, there is hardly a day free from having some of these idle tales mixed in the service thereof. And indeed there is such an incongruous mixture of Scripture and monkish fiction together, as is calculated to make all wise and conscientious Christians to nauseate and abominate their service. This is remarkable, not only in the lessons upon their modern saints' days, concerning whom one would expect nothing else but such stories; but even upon the festivals of the Apostles themselves. Dr. Nicholls.

[g] — Responds,] A respond is a short anthem, brought into the middle of a chapter, which is interrupted by it: and, when the respond is done, the chapter proceeds. This is called the short response. The long responses are used at the close of a lesson. Dr. Nicholls.

[h] — Verses,] Either the verses, which follow after the respond in the Roman Breviary: or else those hymns which are proper to every Sunday and holiday; which are many of them a despicable parcel of monkish Latin verses, composed in the most illiterate ages of Christianity: only some few of them being taken from parts of a better character, are pretty tolerable. Dr. Nicholls.

[i] — Commemorations,] These were the recital of the names of famous martyrs and confessors, patriarchs, bishops, kings, great orthodox writers, munificent benefactors, which recitation at the altar took up much time; and these names were anciently wont to be read out of Diptychs, or folded tables; and tedious quarrels have been anciently, about dispunging some names out of the Diptychs, which have run into schisms. Bp. Sparrow.

[k] — Synodals,] These were synodical constitutions, or the canons made by provincial synods, which were wont to be read in the parish churches on Sundays, to the great waste of time. Bp. Sparrow, Dr. Nicholls.

[l] — Nocturn:] So called from the ancient Christians rising in the night to perform them. Dr. Burn.

[m] — the Rules called the Pie,] "The Pie" is a table or rule in the old Roman offices, shewing in a technical way how to find out the service which is to be read upon each day: which, consisting of numerous particulars, by the intermixing of the several offices, which sometimes fall in together to be read, makes it difficult to be understood. As to the meaning of the name; what was called "The Pie" by the Clergy before the Reformation, was called by the Greeks Πινάξ, (Pinax,) or the index: for, that word signifying metaphorically a painted table or picture; and the indexes, or tables of books, being formed into square figures resembling pictures, or painted tables, hung up in a frame; these likewise were called Πίνακες, (Pinakes;) or, being marked only with the first letter of the word, Πί'ς, or "Pies." This was probably the origin of the term. But these tables being generally made with initial letters of red, and likewise some other remarkable letters or words thereof being of the same colour, it was thought that the table was called "Pie" from the party-coloured letters whereof it did consist. And upon this account, when they put it into Latin, they called it Pica. Thus in former times some of the friars, from their party-coloured habits, were called "Pies." Afterwards, when printing came into use, those letters, which were of a moderate size, not so big as the large text hand in the manuscripts, but were of the bigness only of those in the comments and tables, were called Pica letters. Dr. Nicholls.

the cause, that to turn the Book only was so hard and intricate a matter, that many times there was more business to find out what should be read, than to read it when it was found out.

These inconveniences therefore considered, here is set forth such an Order, whereby the same shall be redressed. And for a readiness in this matter, here is drawn out a Calendar for that purpose, which is plain and easy to be understood; wherein (so much as may be) the reading of holy Scripture is so set forth, that all things shall be done in order, without breaking one piece from another. For this cause be cut off Anthems, Responds, Invitatories[n], and such like things as did break the continual course of the reading of the Scripture.

Yet, because there is no remedy, but that of necessity, there must be some Rules; therefore certain Rules are here set forth; which as they are few in number, so they are plain and easy to be understood. So that here you have an Order for Prayer, and for the reading of the holy Scripture, much agreeable to the mind and purpose of the old Fathers, and a great deal more profitable and commodious, than that which of late was used. It is more profitable, because here are left out many things, whereof some are untrue, some uncertain, some vain and superstitious: and nothing is ordained to be read, but the very pure Word of God, the holy Scriptures, or that which is agreeable to the same[o]; and that in such a language and Order as is most easy and plain for the understanding both of the Readers and Hearers. It is also more commodious, both for the shortness thereof, and for the plainness of the Order, and for that the Rules be few and easy.

And whereas heretofore there hath been great diversity in saying and singing in Churches within this Realm; some following Salisbury Use[p], some Hereford Use, and some the Use of Bangor, some of York, some of Lincoln; now from henceforth all the whole Realm shall have but one Use.

And forasmuch as nothing can be so plainly set forth, but doubts may arise in the use and practice of the same; to appease all such diversity (if any arise) and for the resolution of all doubts, concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in this Book; the parties that so doubt, or diversely take any thing, shall alway resort to the Bishop of the Diocese, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and appeasing of the same; so that the same order be not contrary to any thing contained in this Book[q]. And if the Bishop of the Diocese be in doubt, then he may send for the resolution thereof to the Archbishop.

THOUGH it be appointed, that all things shall be read and sung in the Church in the English Tongue, to the end that the congregation may be thereby edified[r]; yet it is not meant, but that when men say

[n] — Invitatories,] Some text of Scripture, adapted and chosen for the occasion of the day, and used before the "Venite," which also itself is called the invitatory Psalm. Dr. Burn. See page 17, note b.

[o] — the very pure Word of God,—or that which is agreeable to the same;] By the latter words are understood the Apocrypha; which books our Church elsewhere declares that she doth use, "for example of life, and instruction of manners, but yet doth not apply them to establish any doctrine," Art. vi. And this practice of the Church of England is agreeable to that of the ancient Church. Dr. Nicholls. See the notes on the latter part of the 6th Article: also page 21, note l.

[p] — some following Salisbury Use, &c.] No wonder the use of Sarum, York, Lincoln, Hereford, Bangor, is mentioned. For the Missals and Breviaries of the Roman Church were of diverse models, in several countries and several dioceses. The Tridentine Council first endeavoured to bring them all into one shape: yet that order was not obeyed till the year 1568, under Pope Pius the Fifth; yea, is not observed to this day; the Spaniards in some places keeping the Mozarabick form, the Præmonstratenses another, and sundry besides. Nay, that Church hath altered the Breviaries of Pius V.: and new corrections have come forth under Clement VIII. in the year 1598: and what hath been done since, I know not. But why the use of those five churches? Perhaps that was accidental, that the diversities of them were more signal than others. Some historians mention Osmundus, the Bishop of Salisbury, and Chancellor, for the compiler of the use of Sarum, about 1070, or after; yet since we read of no use of Canterbury, Winton, Ely, perhaps those places observed the true Roman Breviaries, and the other five mentioned were discrepant dialects from the original Breviary. However, they are called uses and customs, not appointments from provincial Synods. Bp. Sparrow.

Lindwood, speaking of "the use of Sarum," says, that almost the whole province of Canterbury followeth this use: and adds, as one reason of it, that the Bishop of Sarum is precentor in the college of Bishops; and at those times, when the Archbishop of Canterbury solemnly performeth divine service in the presence of the college of Bishops, he ought to govern the quire by usage and ancient custom.

In the northern parts was generally observed "the use of" the Archiepiscopal church of "York;" in South Wales, "the use of Hereford;" in North Wales, "the use of Bangor;" and in other places, the use of other of the principal sees, as particularly that "of Lincoln."

The rule, laid down for church musick in England almost 1000 years ago, was, that they should observe a plain and devout melody, according to the custom of the Church. And the rule prescribed by Queen Elizabeth in her injunctions was, that there should be a modest and distinct song, so used in all parts of the common prayer of the Church, that the same may be as plainly understood, as if it were read without singing. Of the want of which grave, serious, and intelligible way, the reformatio legum had complained before. And whether some regulations may not now be necessary, to render church musick truly useful to the ends of devotion, and to guard against indecent levities, seemeth, as Bishop Gibson says, to require some consideration. Dr. Burn.

[q] — so that the same order be not contrary to any thing contained in this Book.] It appears from this, that in all points, where the rubricks are plain and express, the ordinary has no authority to release any minister from that obedience which he owes the Church in what she commands in her rubricks. For, though the ordinary is allowed to interpret and determine the sense of the rubrick for us in all doubtful cases; yet it is with this proviso, that he shall not order or determine any thing "that is contrary to what is contained in the service book;" that is, in points that are clearly expressed the ordinary is as much prohibited from making innovations, as the meanest parochial minister. Archdeacon Sharp.

[r] — in the English Tongue, to the end that the congregation may be thereby edified;] See the 24th Article, and the notes there. The pretence of the Papists to lock up the Scriptures, and to have the Common Prayer of the Church in an unknown

Morning and Evening Prayer privately, they may say the same in any language that they themselves do understand.

And all Priests and Deacons are to say daily the Morning and Evening Prayer either privately or openly [s], not being let by sickness, or some other urgent cause.

And the Curate that ministereth in every Parish-Church or Chapel, being at home, and not being otherwise reasonably hindered, shall say the same in the Parish-Church or Chapel where he ministereth, and shall cause a Bell to be tolled thereunto a convenient time before he begin, that the people may come to hear God's Word, and to pray with him.

¶ OF CEREMONIES [t], WHY SOME BE ABOLISHED, AND SOME RETAINED.

OF such Ceremonies as be used in the Church, and have had their beginning by the institution of man, some at the first were of godly intent and purpose devised, and yet at length turned to vanity and superstition: some entered into the Church by undiscreet devotion, and such a zeal as was without knowledge; and for because they were winked at in the beginning, they grew daily to more and more abuses, which not only for their unprofitableness, but also because they have much blinded the people, and obscured the glory of God, are worthy to be cut away, and clean rejected; other there be, which although they have been devised by man, yet it is thought good to reserve them still, as well for a decent order in the Church, (for the which they were first devised,) as because they pertain to edification, whereunto all things done in the Church (as the Apostle teacheth) ought to be referred.

And although the keeping or omitting of a Ceremony, in itself considered, is but a small thing; yet the wilful and contemptuous transgression and breaking of a common order and discipline is no small offence before God. Let all things be done among you, saith Saint Paul, in a seemly and due order: The appointment of the which order pertaineth not to private men; therefore no man ought to take in hand, nor presume to appoint or alter any publick or common Order in Christ's Church, except he be lawfully called and authorized thereunto.

And whereas in this our time, the minds of men are so diverse, that some think it a great matter of conscience to depart from a piece of the least of their Ceremonies, they be so addicted to their old customs; and again on the other side, some be so new-fangled, that they would innovate all things, and so despise the old, that nothing can like them, but that is new: it was thought expedient, not so much to have respect how to please and satisfy either of these parties, as how to please God, and profit them both. And yet lest any man should be offended, whom good reason might satisfy, here be certain causes rendered, why some of the accustomed Ceremonies be put away, and some retained and kept still.

Some are put away, because the great excess and multitude of them hath so increased in these latter days, that the burden of them was intolerable; whereof Saint Augustine in his time complained, that they were grown to such a number, that the estate of Christian people was in worse case concerning that matter, than were the Jews. And he counselled that such yoke and burden should be taken away, as time would serve quietly to do it. But what would Saint Augustine have said, if he had seen the Ceremonies of late days used among us; whereunto the multitude used in his time was not to be compared? This our excessive multitude of Ceremonies was so great, and many of them so dark, that they did more confound and darken, than declare and set forth Christ's benefits unto us. And besides this, Christ's Gospel is not a Ceremonial Law (as much of Moses' Law was) but it is a religion to serve God, not in bondage of tongue, are two of the most impudent crimes, of all those many which that religion abounds with. Therefore, that a stop may be put to this unreasonable tyranny of the Church of Rome over men's souls, Archbishop Cranmer so dealt with Henry VIII., that first the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and Decalogue, should be published in English, in the year of our Lord 1536; after this a translation of the Bible came out in 1540: the order of the Communion, in the beginning of King Edward the Sixth's reign, March 8, 1548: and the first Common Prayer Book, 1549. Dr. Nicholls.

The Latin services, as they had been used in England before, continued in all King Henry the Eighth's reign without any alteration; save some razures of collects for the Pope, and for the office of Thomas Becket and of some other saints, whose days were by the King's Injunctions no more to be observed: but those raznres or deletions were so few, that the old mass books, breviaries, and other rituals, did still serve without new impressions. Dr. Burn.

[s] —say daily the Morning and Evening Prayer, either privately or openly,] By the rules of the Roman Church, even before the Reformation and the Council of Trent, the clergy were obliged to recite the "canonical hours," or the offices of the several hours of day and night, which are in the breviary, either publickly in a church or chapel, or privately by themselves. Wherefore our reformers chose that the ministers of the Church should be as diligent in using the English Liturgy, as the papists were the Latin: and though they thought it right that the mumbling over of the prayers in private should be laid aside, they would not exonerate the clergy from the constant repetition of the publick devotions; and therefore they changed the private recital of the Morning and Evening Service, which was before performed by each clergyman alone by himself, into family prayer, when a congregation could not be procured at church. Dr. Nicholls.

[t] Of Ceremonies,] This preface, as far as it regards the defence of ceremonies, is more applicable to the service book, for which it was first written, namely, the first book of King Edward the Sixth, than to our present Common Prayer Book; which has nothing to do with several ceremonies which were injoined in King Edward's first book, but are not now retained. Dr. Nicholls.

the figure or shadow, but in the freedom of the Spirit; being content only with those Ceremonies which do serve to a decent Order and godly discipline, and such as be apt to stir up the dull mind of man to the remembrance of his duty to God, by some notable and special signification, whereby he might be edified. Furthermore, the most weighty cause of the abolishment of certain Ceremonies was, That they were so far abused, partly by the superstitious blindness of the rude and unlearned, and partly by the unsatiable avarice of such as sought more their own lucre, than the glory of God, that the abuses could not well be taken away, the thing remaining still.

But now as concerning those persons, which peradventure will be offended, for that some of the old Ceremonies are retained still: If they consider that without some Ceremonies it is not possible to keep any Order, or quiet Discipline in the Church, they shall easily perceive just cause to reform their judgments. And if they think much that any of the old do remain, and would rather have all devised anew: then such men granting some Ceremonies convenient to be had, surely where the old may be well used, there they cannot reasonably reprove the old only for their age, without bewraying of their own folly. For in such a case they ought rather to have reverence unto them for their antiquity, if they will declare themselves to be more studious of unity and concord, than of innovations and new-fangleness, which (as much as may be with true setting forth of Christ's Religion) is always to be eschewed. Furthermore, such shall have no just cause with the Ceremonies reserved to be offended. For as those be taken away which were most abused, and did burden men's consciences without any cause; so the other that remain, are retained for a discipline and order, which (upon just causes) may be altered and changed, and therefore are not to be esteemed equal with God's Law. And moreover, they be neither dark nor dumb Ceremonies, but are so set forth, that every man may understand what they do mean, and to what use they do serve. So that it is not like that they in time to come should be abused as other have been. And in these our doings we condemn no other Nations, nor prescribe any thing but to our own people only: For we think it convenient that every Country should use such Ceremonies as they shall think[u] best to the setting forth of God's honour and glory, and to the reducing of the people to a most perfect and godly living, without error or superstition; and that they should put away other things, which from time to time they perceive to be most abused, as in men's ordinances it often chanceth diversely in divers countries.

¶ THE ORDER HOW THE PSALTER IS APPOINTED TO BE READ.

THE Psalter shall be read through once every Month, as it is there appointed, both for Morning and Evening Prayer. But in February it shall be read only to the twenty-eighth, or twenty-ninth day of the month.

And, whereas January, March, May, July, August, October, and December have One-and-thirty days apiece; It is ordered, that the same Psalms shall be read the last day of the said months, which were read the day before: So that the Psalter may begin again the first day of the next Month ensuing.

And, whereas the 119th Psalm is divided into twenty-two portions, and is over-long to be read at one time; It is so ordered, that at one time shall not be read above four or five of the said portions.

And at the end of every Psalm, and of every such part of the 119th Psalm, shall be repeated this Hymn,

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

Note, that the Psalter followeth the Division of the Hebrews[x], and the Translation of the great English Bible, set forth and used in the time of King Henry the Eighth, and Edward the Sixth.

¶ THE ORDER HOW THE REST OF HOLY SCRIPTURE IS APPOINTED TO BE READ.

THE Old Testament is appointed for the first Lessons at Morning and Evening Prayer; so as the most part thereof will be read every year once, as in the Calendar is appointed.

[u] — every Country should use such Ceremonies as they shall think best &c.] This expression of our Church is consonant to the avowed opinion of all Protestant Churches, as appears from their several confessions: as well as to declarations of pious persons many ages before in the ancient Church. Dr. Nicholls. See the 34th Article, and the notes there.

[x] — the Psalter followeth the Division of the Hebrews,] "Which varieth in number from the common Latin translation," as expressed in a table of rules prefixed to the first book of Edward VI: "And the translation of the great English Bible:" so called because it was printed in a very bulky volume; which was published by authority in King Henry the Eighth's time, having been translated by Tyndal and Coverdale, and revised by Archbishop Cranmer. (Concerning the merits of this translation of the Psalter, see page 447.) In the title-page of the Common Prayer Book, the Psalms are said to be "pointed as they are to be sung or said in churches:" the points which are here spoken of, are (:); which are always set down towards the middle of the verse, to denote a stop or pause in the musick there. Dr. Nicholls.

The New Testament is appointed for the second Lessons at Morning and Evening Prayer, and shall be read over orderly every year thrice, besides the Epistles and Gospels; except the Apocalypse, out of which there are only certain proper Lessons appointed upon divers Feasts.

And to know what Lessons shall be read every day, look for the day of the Month in the Calendar following[y], and there ye shall find the Chapters that shall be read for the Lessons both at Morning and Evening Prayer[z]; except only the Moveable Feasts, which are not in the Calendar, and the Immoveable, where there is a blank left in the Column of Lessons, the Proper Lessons for all which days are to be found in the Table of Proper Lessons[a].

And note, that whensoever Proper Psalms or Lessons are appointed; then the Psalms and Lessons of ordinary course appointed in the Psalter and Calendar (if they be different) shall be omitted for that time.

Note also, that the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, appointed for the Sunday[b] shall serve all the week after[c], where it is not in this Book otherwise ordered.

[y] — in the Calendar following,] The word Calendar is derived from the Calendæ, the first day of the Roman month. Dr. Nicholls. Our Calendar consists of several columns. The first shews the days of the month in their numerical order: the second contains the letters of the alphabet, affixed to the several days of every week: the third, as printed in the larger Common Prayer Books, has the Calends, Nones, and Ides, which was the method of computation used by the old Romans and primitive Christians, and is still useful to those, who read either ecclesiastical or profane history. The four last columns contain the course of Lessons for Morning and Evening Prayer for ordinary days throughout the year. The intermediate column, namely, the fourth, contains, together with the holydays observed by the Church of England, such popish holydays as it was thought best to retain. The reasons, why the names of these saints' days and holydays were resumed into the Calendar, are various. Some of them being retained upon account of our Courts of Justice, which usually make their returns on these days, or else upon the days before or after them, which are called in the writs, Vigil. Fest. or Crast. as in Vigil. Martin; Fest. Martin; Crast. Martin; and the like. Others are probably kept in the Calendar for the sake of such tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and others, as are wont to celebrate the memory of their tutelar saints: as the Welchmen do of St. David, the shoemakers of St. Crispin, &c. And again, churches being in several places dedicated to some or other of these saints, it has been the usual custom in such places to have Wakes or Fairs kept upon those days: so that the people would probably be displeased, if, either in this, or the former case, their favourite saint's name should be left out of the Calendar. Besides, the histories which were writ before the Reformation do frequently speak of transactions happening upon such a holyday, or about such a time, without mentioning the month; relating one thing to be done at Lammas-tide, and another about Martinmas, &c.; so that were these names quite left out of the Calendar, we might be at a loss to know when several of these transactions happened. For this and the foregoing reasons our second reformers under Queen Elizabeth (though all those days had been omitted in both books of King Edward VI. excepting St. George's day, Lammas day, St. Laurence and St. Clement, which two last were in his second book) thought convenient to restore the names of them to the Calendar, though not with any regard of being kept holy by the Church. For this they thought prudent to forbid, as well upon the account of the great inconveniency brought into the Church in the times of popery, by the observation of such a number of holydays, to the great prejudice of labouring and trading men: as by reason that many of those saints they then commemorated were oftentimes men of none of the best characters. Besides, the history of these saints, and the accounts they gave of the other holydays, were frequently found to be feigned and fabulous. In the short account of each of these holydays, given in the notes on the Calendar, the reader will not suppose that all the stories are intended to be imposed upon him as truths; although nothing will be set down but what some or other of the Romanists superstitiously believe. Wheatly.

[z] — at Morning and Evening Prayer:] So we now generally call the two offices, sometimes called "Mattins and Evensong." Wheatly.

[a] — in the Table of Proper Lessons.] It is well known to what uncertainties the clergy are left in the use of this "Table of Proper Lessons," and in the appointment of Epistles and Gospels, when Sundays and holydays coincide. The consequence is, that they differ in their practice, and use the service appropriate to that festival, to which in their private opinion they give the preference. Some there are who choose to intermix them, using the collects appointed to each, and preferring the first Lesson that is taken out of a canonical book, if the other first Lesson happens to be appointed in the Apocrypha.

Other rubricks might be specified, where the directions are defective, or not sufficiently clear and express. Upon all which it may be observed in general, that where the rubricks are defective, or capable of two senses, or of doubtful interpretation, there is no stating a minister's obligation to observe them; nor is uniformity in practice to be expected; because every minister must be allowed a liberty of judgment, and consequently of practice, in cases not sufficiently clear or capable of various constructions, so as he make no breach upon those rubricks that are plain and express. In this, and several of the other points alluded to above, the clergy take different ways: and they may safely and honestly do so, for there is no room to say that any of them do wrong, since there is not evidence enough, which of those ways are right. Something may perhaps be pleaded for all. But then, whatsoever is pleaded, as it is only upon the foot of private sentiments, we remain still at liberty to follow our own judgment and discretion in those points, till they, who have authority, do settle a rule for us concerning them. And if, in the mean time, any of us have real scruples upon those points, our proper recourse is to the Ordinary of the diocese for satisfaction: because his determination in all doubtful cases, as stated in the Preface, "concerning the service of the Church," is authoritative, safe, and legal; and is granted as a supply for all the deficiencies we meet with in the letter of the rubrick. Archdeacon Sharp.

[b] — appointed for the Sunday] One day in seven seems from the very beginning to have been sanctified by God, Gen. ii. 3, and commanded to be set apart for the exercise of religious duties. All the mysteries of it perhaps are beyond our comprehension: but to be sure one design of it was, that men, by thus sanctifying the seventh day, after they had spent six in labour, might shew themselves to be worshippers of that God only, who rested the seventh day, after He had finished the heavens and the earth in six.

The reasons why the Jews were commanded to observe the seventh day, or the Saturday, in particular for their sabbath, were peculiar and proper to themselves: it was on this day God had delivered them from their Egyptian bondage, and overwhelmed Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea: so that no day could be more properly set apart to celebrate the mercies and goodness of God, than that, on which He Himself chose to confer upon them the greatest blessing they enjoyed.

But the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt by the ministry of Moses was only intended for a type and pledge of a spiritual deliverance which was to come by Christ: their Canaan also was no more than a type of that heavenly Canaan, which the redeemed by Christ do look for. Since therefore the shadow is made void by the coming of the substance, the relation is changed; and God is no more to be worshipped and believed in, as a God foreshewing and assuring by types, but as a God who hath performed the substance of what He promised. The Christians indeed, as well as the Jews, are to observe the moral equity of the fourth Commandment, and, after six days spent in their own works, are to sanctify the seventh: but in the designation of the particular day, they may and ought to differ. For if the Jews were to sanctify the seventh day, only because they had on that day a temporal deliverance as a pledge of a spiritual one; the Christians surely have much greater reasons to sanctify the first, since on that very day God redeemed us from this spiritual thraldom, by raising Jesus Christ our Lord from the dead, and begetting us, instead "of an earthly Canaan, to an inheritance incorruptible in the heavens." And accordingly we have the concurrent testimonies both of Scripture and antiquity, that the first day of the week, or Sunday, hath ever been the stated and solemn time of the Christians meeting for their publick worship and service. Acts ii. 1; xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; Rev. i. 10.

In the East indeed, where the Gospel chiefly prevailed among the Jews, who retained a great reverence for the Mosaick rites, the Church thought fit to indulge the humour of the Judaizing Christians so far, as to observe the Saturday as a festival day of devotions, and thereon to meet for the exercise of religious duties; as is plain from several passages of the ancients. But however, to prevent giving any offence to others, they openly declared, that they observed it in a Christian way, and not as a Jewish sabbath. And this custom was so far from being universal, that at the same time all over the West, except at Milan in Italy, Saturday was kept as a fast, (as being the day on which our Lord lay dead in the grave,) and is still, for the same reason, appointed for one of the fast days in the Ember-weeks by the Church of England; which, in imitation both of the Eastern and Western churches, always reserves to the Sunday the more solemn acts of publick worship and devotion.

But besides the weekly return of Sunday, (whereon we celebrate God's goodness and mercies set forth in our creation and redemption in general,) the Church hath set apart some days yearly for the more particular remembrance of some special acts and passages of our Lord in the redemption of mankind; such as are his "Incarnation" and "Nativity, Circumcision, Manifestation to the Gentiles, Presentation in the Temple;" his "Fasting, Passion, Resurrection," and "Ascension;" the "sending of the Holy Ghost," and the "Manifestation of the sacred Trinity." That the observation of such days is requisite, is evident from the practice both of Jews and Gentiles: nature taught the one, and God the other, that the celebration of solemn festivals was a part of the public exercise of religion. Besides the feast of the Passover, of Weeks, and of Tabernacles, which were all of divine appointment, the Jews celebrated some of their own institution, namely, the feast of "Purim," Esther ix., and the "Dedication of the Temple," 1 Mac. iv. 59, the latter of which even our blessed Saviour Himself honoured with his presence, John x. 22.

But these festivals being instituted in remembrance of some signal mercies granted in particular to the Jews; the Christians, who were chiefly converted from the heathen world, were no more obliged to observe them, than they were concerned in the mercies thereon commemorated. And this is the reason that when the Judaizing Christians would have imposed upon the Galatians the observation of the Jewish festivals, as necessary to salvation, St. Paul looked upon it as a thing so criminal, that he was afraid the labour he had bestowed upon them to set them at liberty in the freedom of the Gospel had been "in vain," Gal. iv. 10, 11: not that he thought the observation of festivals was a thing in itself unlawful, but because they thought themselves still obliged by the Law to observe those days and times, which being only shadows of things to come, were made void by the coming of the substance.

As to the celebration of Christian festivals, they thought themselves as much obliged to observe them as the Jews were to observe theirs. They had received greater benefits, and therefore it would have been the highest degree of ingratitude to have been less zealous in commemoratiog them. And accordingly we find that in the very infancy of Christianity some certain days were yearly set apart, to commemorate the "Resurrection" and "Ascension" of Christ, the "coming of the Holy Ghost," &c., and to glorify God, by an humble and grateful acknowledgement of these mercies granted to them at those times. Which laudable and religious custom so soon prevailed over the universal Church, that in five hundred years after our Saviour, we meet with them distinguished by the same names we now call them by; such as, "Epiphany, Ascension-day, Whit-Sunday," &c., and appointed to be observed on those days, on which the Church of England now observes them.

But besides the more solemn festivals, whereon they were wont to celebrate the mysteries of their redemption, the primitive Christians had their "Memoriæ Martyrum," or certain days set apart yearly in commemoration of the great heroes of the Christian religion, the blessed Apostles and Martyrs, who had attested the truth of these mysteries with their blood: at whose graves they constantly met once a year, to celebrate their virtues, and to bless God for their exemplary lives and glorious deaths; as well to the intent that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, as also that virtue, even in this world, might not wholly lose its reward: a practice doubtless very ancient, and probably founded upon that exhortation to the Hebrews, "to remember those who had had the rule over them, and who had spoken unto them the word of God," and had sealed it with their blood, Heb. xiii. 7. In which place the author of that Epistle is thought chiefly to hint at the martyrdom of St. James the first Bishop of Jerusalem, who, not long before had laid down his life for the testimony of Jesus. And we find that those who were eye-witnesses of the sufferings of St. Ignatius, published the day of his martyrdom, that the church of Antioch might meet together at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combatant and martyr of Christ. After this we read of the church of Smyrna's giving an account of St. Polycarp's martyrdom, (which was in the year of our Lord 147,) and of the place where they had entombed his bones, and withal professing that they would assemble in that place, and celebrate the "birth-day of his martyrdom" with joy and gladness. (Where we may observe, by the way, that the days of the martyrs' deaths were called their birth-days; because they looked upon those as the days of their nativity, whereon they were freed from the pains and sorrows of a troublesome world, and born again to the joys and happiness of an endless life.) These solemnities, as we learn from Tertullian, were yearly celebrated, and were afterwards observed with so much care and strictness, that it was thought profaneness to be absent from the Christian assemblies upon those occasions.

The following ages were as forward as those we have already spoken of, in celebrating the festivals of the martyrs and holy men of their time. Insomuch that at the last the observation of holydays became both superstitious and troublesome; a number of dead men's names, not over eminent in their lives either for sense or morals, crowding the Calendar, and jostling out the festivals of the first saints and martyrs. But at the Reformation of the Church, all these modern martyrs were thrown aside, and no festivals retained in the Calendar as days of obligation, but such as were dedicated to the honour of Christ, &c., or to the memory of those that were famous in the Gospels. Such as were, in the first place, the twelve apostles, who being constant attendants on our Lord, and advanced by Him to that high order, have each of them a day assigned to their memory. St. John the Baptist and St. Stephen have the same honour done to them; the first because he was Christ's forerunner; the other upon account of his being the first martyr. St. Paul and St. Barnabas are commemorated upon account of their extraordinary call; St. Mark and St. Luke for the service they did Christianity by their Gospels; the Holy Innocents, because they are the first that suffered upon our Saviour's account, as also for the greater solemnity of Christmas: the birth of Christ being the occasion of their deaths. The memory of all other pious persons is celebrated together upon the festival of All Saints: and that the people may know what benefits Christians receive by the ministry of angels, the feast of St. Michael and all Angels is for that reason solemnly observed in the Church.

These days were constantly observed in the Church of England, from the time of the Reformation to the great Rebellion, when it could not be expected that any thing that carried an air of religion or antiquity could bear up against such irresistible inundation of impiety and confusion. But at the Restoration our holydays were again revived, together with our ancient Liturgy, which appoints proper Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, for each of them; and orders the "curate to declare unto the people, on the Sunday before, what holydays or fasting-days are in the week following to be observed." Rubrick after the Nicene Creed. And the preface to the Act of Uniformity intimates it to be schismatical to refuse to come to church on those days. And by the first of Elizabeth, which is declared by the Uniformity Act to be in full force, "all persons, having no lawful or reasonable excuse to be absent, are obliged to resort to their parish-church on holydays, as well as Sundays, and there to abide orderly and soberly during the time of divine service, upon pain of punishment by the censures of the Church, and also upon pain of twelve pence for every offence, to be levied by distress."

In relation to the concurrence of two holydays together, we have no directions either in the rubrick or elsewhere, which must give place, or which of the two services must be used. According to what I can gather from the rubricks in the Roman Breviary and Missal, (which are very intricate and difficult,) it is the custom of that church, when two holydays come together, that the office for one only be read, and that the office for the other be transferred to the next day; excepting that some commemoration of the transferred holyday be made upon the first day, by reading the hymns, verses, &c. which belong to the holyday that is transferred. But our Liturgy has made no such provision. For this reason some ministers, when a holyday happens upon a Sunday, take no notice of the holyday, (except that sometimes they are forced to use the second Lesson for such holyday, there being a gap in the column of second Lessons in the Calendar,) but use the service appointed for the Sunday; alleging that the holyday, which is of human institution, should give way to the Sunday, which is allowed to be of divine. But this is an argument which I think not satisfactory: for though the observation of Sunday be of divine institution, yet the service we use on it is of human appointment. Nor is there any thing in the services appointed to be used on the ordinary Sundays, that is more peculiar to, or tends to the greater solemnity of the Sunday, than any of the services appointed for the holydays. What slight therefore do we shew to our Lord's institution, if when we meet on the day that He has set apart for the worship of Himself, we particularly praise Him for the eminent virtues that shined forth in some saint, whose memory that day happens to bring to our mind? Such praises are so agreeable to the duty of the day, that I cannot but esteem the general practice to be preferable, which is to make the lesser holyday give way to the greater: as an ordinary Sunday, for instance, to a saint's day; a saint's day to one of our Lord's festivals; and a lesser festival of our Lord to a greater: except that some, if the first Lesson for the holyday be out of the Apocrypha, will join the first Lesson of the Sunday to the holyday service: as observing that the Church, by always appointing canonical Scripture upon Sundays, seems to countenance their use of a canonical lesson even upon a holyday, that has a proper one appointed out of the Apocrypha, if that holyday should happen upon a Sunday. But what if the Annunciation should happen in Passion-week; or either that or St. Mark upon Easter Monday or Tuesday? or what if St. Barnabas should fall upon Whit-Monday or Tuesday? or what if St. Andrew and Advent Sunday both come together? In any of these concurrences I do not doubt but the service would be differently performed in different churches. And therefore I take this to be a case, in which the bishops ought to be consulted, they having a power vested in them "to appease all diversity, (if any arise,) and to resolve all doubt concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in the Book of Common Prayer." See the Preface concerning the Service of the Church. Wheatly.

[c] — shall serve all the week after,] This is so appointed, for that the Epistle and Gospel are to be read every day of the week, as every day there should be a communion. If people be married on a week-day, at that time by this book they are injoined to receive: and so when women after child-birth are churched; or when men in cathedral churches, where they are injoined it every Sunday at least, shall desire to have the Communion on the week-day; that then the Collect, Epistle, and Gospel shall be used, which was appointed for the Sunday. *Bp. JANUARY.

The account of the Romish saints in this and the following months is taken from Wheatly. With respect to its authenticity the reader is requested to refer to page xxxiii, note y.

8. Lucian, Priest and Martyr.] Lucian, to whose memory the eighth day of this month was dedicated, is said by some to have been a disciple of St. Peter, and to have been sent by him with St. Dennys into France, where, for preaching the Gospel, he suffered martyrdom. Though others relate that he was a learned presbyter of Antioch, well versed in the Hebrew tongue, taking a great deal of pains in comparing and amending the copies of the Bible. Being long exercised in the sacred discipline, he was brought to the city of the Nicomedians, when the Emperor Galerius Maximianus was there; and having recited an apology for the Christian Religion, which he had composed, before the governor of the city, he was cast into prison; and having endured incredible tortures, was put to death.

13. Hilary, Bishop and Confessor.] Hilary, Bishop of Poictiers in France, (commemorated on the thirteenth of this month,) was a great champion of the Catholick doctrine against the Arians; for which he was persecuted by their party, and banished into Phrygia, about the year 356, where, after much pains taken in the controversy, and many troubles underwent, he died about the year 367.

18. Prisca, Roman Virgin and Martyr.] Prisca, a Roman lady, commemorated on the eighteenth, was early converted to Christianity: but refusing to abjure her religion, and to offer sacrifice when she was commanded, was horribly tortured, and afterwards beheaded under the Emperor Claudius, in the year of our Lord 47.

20. Fabian, Bishop and Martyr.] Fabian was Bishop of Rome about fourteen years, namely, from the year of our Lord 239 to 253, and suffered martyrdom under the Emperor Decius.

21. Agnes, Roman Virgin and Martyr.] Agnes, a young Roman lady of a noble family, suffered martyrdom in the tenth general persecution under the Emperor Dioclesian, in the year of our Lord 306. She was by the wicked cruelty of the judge condemned to be debauched in a public stew before her execution; but was miraculously preserved by lightning and thunder from heaven. She underwent her persecution with wonderful readiness, and though the executioner hacked and hewed her body most unmercifully with the sword, yet she bore it with incredible constancy, singing hymns all the time, though she was then no more than thirteen or fourteen years old.

About eight days after her execution, her parents going to lament and pray at her tomb, where they continued watching all night, it is reported that there appeared unto them a vision of angels, arrayed with glittering and glorious garments; among whom they saw their own daughter apparelled after the same manner, and a lamb standing by her as white as snow (which is the reason why the painters picture her with a lamb by her side). Ever after which time the Roman ladies went every year (as they still do) to offer and present her on this day the two best and purest white lambs they could procure. These they offered at St. Agnes's altar, (as they call it,) and from thence the pope gives orders to have them put into the choicest pasture about the city, till the time of sheep-shearing come; at which season they are clipt, and the wool is hallowed, whereof a fine white cloth is spun and woven, and consecrated every year by the pope himself, for the palls which he used to send to every archbishop; and which till they have purchased at a most extravagant price, they cannot exercise any metropolitical jurisdiction.

22. Vincent, a Dean of Spain and Martyr.] Vincent, a deacon of the Church in Spain, was born at Oscard, now Huezza, a town in Arragon. He was instructed in divinity by Valerius, Bishop of Saragosa; but by reason of an impediment in his speech, never took upon him the office of preaching. He suffered martyrdom in the Dioclesian persecution, about the year 303, being laid all along upon burning coals, and, after his body was broiled there, thrown upon heaps of broken tiles.

FEBRUARY.

3. Blasius, Bishop and Martyr.] Blasius was Bishop of Sebaste in Armenia, reported to have been a man of great miracles and power, put to death in the same city by Agricolaus the president, under Dioclesian the Emperor, in the year 289. His name is not put down in some editions of the Common Prayer Book, but it occurs in the most authentick.

5. Agatha, a Sicilian Virgin and Martyr.] Agatha, a virgin honourably born in Sicily, suffered martyrdom under Decius the Emperor at Catanea. Being very beautiful, Quintianus, the prætor or governor of the province, was enamoured with her: but not being able to work his ill design upon her, ordered her to be scourged, and then imprisoned, for not worshipping the heathen gods. After which, she, still persisting constant in the faith, was put upon the rack, burnt with hot irons, and had her breast cut off. And then being remanded back to prison, she had several divine comforts afforded her: but the prætor sending for her again, being half dead, she prayed to God to receive her soul; with which petition she immediately expired; it being the fifth of February, in the year of our Lord 253.

14. Valentine, Bishop and Martyr.] Valentine was an ancient presbyter of the Church; he suffered martyrdom under Claudius at Rome. Being delivered into the custody of one Asterius, he wrought a miracle upon his daughter; whom, being blind, he restored to sight; by which means he converted the whole family to Christianity, who all of them afterwards suffered for their religion. Valentine, after a year's imprisonment at Rome, was beheaded in the Flaminian-way about the year 271, and was enrolled among the martyrs of the Church; his day being established before the times of Gregory the Great. He was a man of most admirable parts, and so famous for his love and charity, that the custom of "choosing Valentines" upon his festival (which is still practised) took its rise from thence.

The Numbers here prefixed to the several Days, between the Twenty-first Day of March and the Eighteenth Day of April, both inclusive, denote the Days upon which those full Moons do fall, which happen upon or next after the Twenty-first Day of March, in those Years, of which they are respectively the Golden Numbers; and MARCH.

1. David, Archbishop of Menevia.] David, to whose memory the first of this month was formerly dedicated, was descended from the royal family of the Britons, being uncle to the great King Arthur, and son of Xanthus Prince of Wales, by one Melearia, a Nun. He was a man very learned and eloquent, and of incredible austerity in his life and conversation. By his diligence Pelagianism was quite rooted out, and many earnest professors of the same converted unto the truth. He was made Bishop of Caerleon in Wales, which see he afterwards removed to Menevia; from him ever since called St. David's. He sat long, namely, sixty-five years, and (having built twelve monasteries in the country thereabouts) died in the year 642: being, as Bale writes out of the British histories, a hundred and forty-six years old. He was buried in his own cathedral church, and canonized by Pope Calixtus II. about five hundred years afterwards. Many things are reported of him incredible; as that his birth was foretold thirty years beforehand; and that he was always attended by angels, who kept him company; that he bestowed upon the waters at Bath that extraordinary heat they have; and that whilst he was once preaching to a great multitude of people at Brony, the ground swelled under his feet into a little hill; with several other such stories not worth rehearsing.

2. Cedde, or Chad, Bishop of Litchfield.] Cedde was, in the absence of Wilfride Archbishop of York, who was gone to Paris for consecration, and gave no hopes of a speedy return, enforced by Egfrid King of Northumberland to accept of that see. But Wilfride being returned, Cedde was persuaded by Theodorus Archbishop of Canterbury to resign the see to him: after which for some time he lived a monastical life at Lestingeag; till, by the means of the same Theodorus, he was made Bishop of Litchfield, under Wolfhere, King of Mercia, whom he is said to have converted. He died March 2, in the year of our Lord 672.

7. Perpetua, a Mauritanian Martyr.] Perpetua was a lady of quality, who suffered martyrdom in Mauritania, under the Emperor Severus, about the year 205. She is often very honourably mentioned by Tertullian and St. Austin; the last of whom lets us know that the day of her martyrdom was settled into a holy-day in his time; and remarks of her, that she gave suck to a young child at the time of her sufferings.

12. Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome and Confessor.] Gregory the Great, who stands next in the Calendar, was descended from noble parents. He very early addicted himself to study and piety, giving all his estate to the building and maintaining of religious houses. He was consecrated Pope about the year 590, but vigorously opposed the title of "universal bishop" (which the bishops of Constantinople did then, and the bishops of Rome do now, assume) as blasphemous, antichristian, and diabolical. Among other his glorious and Christian deeds, his memory was annually celebrated here in England, for his devout charity to our nation, in sending Austin the monk, with forty other missionaries, to convert the Saxons, (who had testified their desire to embrace Christianity,) which in a short time they happily achieved. Having held the popedom fourteen years, he died about the year 604, leaving many learned books behind him, which are still extant.

18. Edward, King of the West Saxons.] Edward was descended from the West Saxon kings, and the son of King Edgar, who first reduced the Heptarchy into one kingdom: after whose death, in the year 975, this Edward succeeded to the crown at twelve years of age, but did not enjoy it above two or three years. For paying a visit to Elfrida his mother-in-law at Corfe-castle, in Dorsetshire, he was by her order stabbed in the back, (whilst he was drinking a cup of wine,) to make way for her son Etheldred, his half-brother. His favour to the monks made his barbarous murder to be esteemed a martyrdom; the day of which was appointed to be kept festival by Pope Innocent IV. in the year of our Lord 1245.

21. Benedict, Abbot.] Benedict was born in Norcia, a town in Italy, of an honourable family. Being much given to devotion, he set up an order of monks, which bears his name, about the year 529. He was very remarkable for his mortification; and the monks of his own order relate, that he would often roll himself in a heap of briars, to check any carnal desires that he found to arise in himself. St. Gregory tells us of a very famous miracle wrought upon his account, namely, that the Goths, when they invaded Italy, came to burn his cell; and being set on fire, it burnt round him in a circle, not doing him the least hurt: at which the Goths being enraged, threw him into a hot oven, stopping it up close: but coming the next day, they found him safe, neither his flesh scorched, nor his clothes singed. He died on the twenty-first of March, in the year of our Lord 542.

3. Richard, Bishop of Chichester.] Richard, surnamed de Wiche, from a place so called in Worcestershire, where he was born, was brought up at the Universities of Oxford and Paris. Being come to man's estate, he travelled to Bononia; where, having studied the canon law seven years, he became publick reader of the same. Being returned home, he was, in the vacancy of the see of Chichester, chosen bishop by that chapter: which the king opposing, (he having nominated another,) Richard appealed to Rome, and had his election confirmed by the Pope, who consecrated him also at Lyons, in the year 1245. He was very much reverenced for his great learning and diligent preaching, but especially for his integrity of life and conversation. Strange miracles are told of him: as that, by his blessing, he increased a single loaf of bread to satisfy the hunger of three thousand poor people; and that in his extreme old age, whilst he was celebrating the Eucharist, he fell down with the chalice in his hand, but the wine was miraculously preserved from falling to the ground. About seven or eight years after his death, he was canonized for a saint by Pope Urban IV. in the year of our Lord 1261.

4. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan.] St. Ambrose was born about the year 340. His father was Prætorian Prefect of Gaul, in whose palace St. Ambrose was educated. It is reported, that in his infancy a swarm of bees settled upon his cradle; which was a prognostication, as was supposed, of his future eloquence. After his father's death, he went with his mother to Rome, where he studied the laws, practised as an advocate, and was made governor of Milan and the neighbouring cities. Upon the death of Auxentius, Bishop of Milan, there being a great contest in the election of a new bishop, this good father, in an excellent speech, exhorted them to peace and unanimity; which so moved the affections of the people, that they immediately forgot the competitors whom they were so zealous for before, and unanimously declared that they would have their governor for their bishop; who, after several endeavours by flight and other artifices to avoid that burden, was at last compelled to yield to the importunities of the people, and to be consecrated bishop. From which time he gave all his money to pious uses, and settled the reversion of his estate upon the church. He governed that see with great piety and vigilance for more than twenty years, and died in the year 396, being about fifty-seven years old: having first converted St. Augustin to the faith; at whose baptism he is said miraculously to have composed that divine hymn, so well known in the Church by the name of "Te Deum."

19. Alphege, Archbishop of Canterbury.] Alphege was an Englishman, of a most holy and austere life, which was the more admirable in him, because he was born of great parentage, and began that course of life in his younger years. He was first Abbot of Bath, then Bishop of Winchester in the year 984, and twelve years afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury. But in the year 1012, the Danes being disappointed of a certain tribute which they claimed as due to them, they fell upon Canterbury, and spoiled and burnt both the city and church: nine parts in ten of the people they put to the sword, and after seven months' miserable imprisonment, stoned the good Archbishop to death at Greenwich; who was thereupon canonized for a saint and martyr, and had the nineteenth of April allowed him as his festival.

23. St. George, Martyr.] St. George, the famous patron of the English nation, was born in Cappadocia, and suffered for the sake of his religion, in the year of our Lord 290, under the Emperor Diocletian, (in whose army he had before been a colonel,) being supposed to have been the person that pulled down the edict against the Christians, which Diocletian had caused to be affixed upon the church doors. The legends relate several strange stories of him, which are so common they need not here be related: I shall only give a short account how he came to be so much esteemed of in England.

When Robert Duke of Normandy, son to William the Conqueror, was prosecuting his victories against the Turks, and laying siege to the famous city of Antioch, which was like to be relieved by a mighty army of the Saracens; St. George appeared with an innumerable army coming down from the hills all in white, with a red cross in his banner, to reinforce the Christians; which occasioned the infidel army to fly, and the Christians to possess themselves of the town. This story made St. George extraordinarily famous in those times, and to be esteemed a patron, not only of the English, but of Christianity itself. Not but that St. George was a considerable saint before this, having had a church dedicated to him by Justinian the Emperor.

MAY.

3. Invention of the Cross.] The third of this month is celebrated as a festival by the church of Rome, in memory of the "Invention of the Cross," which is said to be owing to this occasion. Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, being admonished in a dream to search for the cross of Christ at Jerusalem, took a journey thither with that intent: and having employed labourers to dig at Golgotha, after opening the ground very deep, (for vast heaps of rubbish had purposely been thrown there by the spiteful Jews or heathens,) she found three crosses, which she presently concluded were the crosses of our Saviour and the two thieves who were crucified with Him. But being at a loss to know which was the cross of Christ, she ordered them all three to be applied to a dead person. Two of them, the story says, had no effect; but the third raised the carcase to life, which was an evident sign to Helena, that that was the cross she looked for. As soon as this was known, every one was for getting a piece of the cross; insomuch that in Paulinus's time (who, being a scholar of St. Ambrose, and Bishop of Nola, flourished about the year 420) there was much more of the reliques of the cross, than there was of the original wood. Whereupon that father says, "it was miraculously increased; it very kindly afforded wood to men's importunate desires, without any loss of its substance."

6. St. John Evang. ante Port. Lat.] The sixth of this month was anciently dedicated to the memory of St. John the Evangelist's miraculous deliverance from the persecution of Domitian: to whom, being accused as an eminent assertor of atheism and impiety, and a public subverter of the religion of the empire, he was sent for to Rome, where he was treated with all the cruelty that could be expected from so bloody and barbarous a prince; for he was immediately put into a cauldron of boiling oil, or rather oil set on fire, before the gate called "Porta Latina," in the presence of the senate. But his Master and Lord, who favoured him when on earth above all the Apostles, so succoured him here, that he felt no harm from the most violent rage; but, as if he had been only anointed, like the athletæ of old, he came out more vigorous and active than before: the same divine Providence, that secured the three children in the fiery furnace, bringing the holy man safe out of this, one would think, inevitable destruction; and so vouchsafing him the honour of martyrdom, without his enduring the torments of it.

19. Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury.] Dunstan, of whom we are next to speak, was well extracted, being related to King Athelstan. He was very well skilled in most of the liberal arts, and among the rest in refining metals and forging them: which being qualifications much above the genius of the age he lived in, first gained him the name of a conjuror, and then of a saint. He was certainly a very honest man, and never feared to reprove vice in any of the kings of the West Saxons, of whom he was confessor to four successively. But the monks (to whom he was a very great friend, applying all his endeavours to enrich them and their monasteries) have filled his life with several nonsensical stories: such as are, his making himself a cell at Glastenburg all of iron at his own forge; his harp's playing of itself, without a hand; his taking a she-devil, who tempted him to lewdness under the shape of a fine lady, by the nose with a pair of red-hot tongs; and several other such ridiculous relations, not worth repeating. He was promoted by King Edgar, first to the bishoprick of Worcester, soon after to London, and two years after that to Canterbury; where, having sat twenty-seven years, he died May 19, in the year of our Lord 988.

26. Augustin, first Archbishop of Canterbury.] Augustin was the person we have already mentioned, as sent by Pope Gregory the Great to convert the Saxons, from whence he got the name of "the Apostle of the English." Whilst he was over here, he was made Archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 596. He had a contest with the monks of Bangor, about submission to the see of Rome, who refused any subjection but to God, and the bishop of Caerleon. Soon after this difference, Ethelfride, a pagan king of Northumberland, invaded Wales, and slaughtered a hundred and fifty of these monks, who came in a quiet manner to mediate a peace: which massacre is by some writers (but without just grounds) imputed to the instigation of Austin, in revenge for their opposition to him. After he had sat some time in the see of Canterbury, he deceased the twenty-sixth of May, about the year 610.

27. Venerable Bede.] Bede was born at Yarrow, in Northumberland, in the year of our Lord 673, and afterwards well educated in Greek and Latin studies, in which he made a proficiency beyond most of his age. He is author of several learned philosophical and mathematical tracts, as also of comments upon the Scripture: but his most valuable piece is his Ecclesiastical History of the Saxons. Being a monk, he studied in his cell: where spending more hours, and to better purpose, than the monks were wont to do, a report was raised that he never went out of it. However, he would not leave it for preferment at Rome, which the Pope had often invited him to.

His learning and piety gained him the surname of "Venerable." Though the common story which goes about that title's being given him, is this: his scholars having a mind to fix a rhyming title upon his tombstone, as was the custom in those times, the poet wrote,

HAC SUNT IN FOSSA, BEDÆ OSSA.

Placing the word OSSA at the latter end of the verse for the rhyme, but not able to think of any proper epithet that would stand before it. The monk, being tired in this perplexity to no purpose, fell asleep; but when he awaked, he found his verse filled up by an angelick hand, standing thus in fair letters upon the tomb:

HAC SUNT IN FOSSA,
BEDÆ VENERABILIS OSSA.

JUNE.

1. Nicomede, a Roman Priest and Martyr.] Nicomede was scholar to St. Peter, and was discovered to be a Christian by his honourably burying one Felicula, a martyr. He was beat to death with leaden plummets for the sake of his religion, in the reign of Domitian.

5. Boniface, Bishop of Mentz, and Martyr.] Boniface was a Saxon Presbyter, born in England, and at first called Winfrid. He was sent a missionary by Pope Gregory II. into Germany, where he converted several countries, and from thence got the name of "the Apostle of Germany." He was made Bishop of Mentz in the year 745. He was one of the most considerable men of his time, (most ecclesiastical matters going through his hands, as appears by his letters,) and was also a great friend and admirer of Bede. Carrying on his conversions in Frisia, he was killed by the barbarous people near Utrecht, in the year of our Lord 755.

17. St. Alban, Martyr.] St. Alban was the first Christian martyr in this island, about the middle of the third century. He was converted to Christianity by one Amphialus, a priest of Caerleon in Wales, who, flying from persecution into England, was hospitably entertained by St. Alban at Verulam in Hertfordshire, now called from him St. Albans. When, by reason of a strict search made for Amphialus, St. Alban could entertain him safe no longer, he dressed him in his own clothes, and by that means gained him an opportunity of escaping. But this, being soon found out, exposed St. Alban to the fury of the Pagans; who summoning him to do sacrifice to their gods, and he refusing, they first miserably tormented him, and then put him to death. The monks have fathered several miracles upon him, which it is not worth while here to relate.

20. Translation of Edward, King of the West Saxons.] Edward King of the West Saxons being barbarously murdered by his mother-in-law, was first buried at Warham without any solemnity; but after three years was carried by Duke Alferus to the minster of Shaftesbury, and there interred with great pomp. To the memory of which the twentieth of June has been since dedicated.

JULY.

2. Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.] About the year 1338, there was a terrible schism in the church of Rome between two anti-popes, Urban VI. and Clement VII., the first chosen by the Italian, the other by the French faction among the Cardinals. Upon this several disorders happened. To avert which for the future, Pope Urban instituted a feast to the memory of that famous journey, which the mother of our Lord took into the mountains of Judea, to visit the mother of John the Baptist; that by this means the intercession of the blessed Virgin might be obtained for the removal of those evils. The same festival was confirmed by the decree of Boniface IX., though it was not universally observed until the Council of Basil: by decree of which council in their forty-third session, upon July 1, 1441, it was ordered that this holy-day, called the "Visita-" tion of the blessed Virgin Mary," should be celebrated in all Christian churches, that "she, being " honoured with this solemnity, might reconcile her " Son by her intercession, who is now angry for the " sins of men; and that she might grant peace and " unity among the faithful."

4. Translation of St. Martin, Bishop and Confessor.] St. Martin was born in Pannonia, and for some time lived the life of a soldier, but at last took orders, and was made Bishop of Tours in France. He was very diligent in breaking down the heathen images and altars, which were standing in his time. He died in the year 400, after he had sat bishop twenty-six years. The French had formerly such an esteem for his memory, that they carried his helmet with them into their wars, either as an ensign to encourage them to bravery, or else as a sort of charm to procure them victory. His feast-day is celebrated on the eleventh of November. The fourth of this month is dedicated only to the memory of the translating or removing of his body from the place where it was buried, to a more noble and magnificent tomb; which was performed by Perpetuus, one of his successors in the see of Tours.

15. Swithun, Bishop of Winchester, translated.] Swithun was first a monk, and afterwards a prior, of the convent of Winchester. Upon the death of Helinstan, bishop of that see, by the favour of King Ethelwolph, he was promoted to succeed him in that bishoprick, in the year of our Lord 852, and continued in it eleven years, to his death. He would not be buried within the church, as the bishops then generally were, but in the cemetery, or church-yard. Many miracles being reported to be done at his grave, there was a chapel built over it: and a solemn translation made in honour of him, which in the popish times was celebrated on the fifteenth of July.

20. Margaret, Virgin and Martyr at Antioch.] Margaret was born at Antioch, being the daughter of an heathen priest. Olybius, President of the East under the Romans, had an inclination to marry her; but finding she was a Christian, deferred it till he could persuade her to renounce her religion. But not being able to accomplish his design, he first put her to unmerciful torments, and then beheaded her. She has the same office among the papists, as Lucina has among the heathens; namely, to assist women in labour Her holy-day is very ancient, not only in the Roman, but also in the Greek church, who celebrate her memory under the name of Marina. She suffered in the year 278.

22. St. Mary Magdalene.] By the first Common Prayer Book of King Edward VI., the twenty-second of July was dedicated to the memory of St. Mary Magdalene. In the service for the day, Prov. xxxi. 10, to the end, was appointed for the Epistle; and the Gospel was taken out of St. Luke vii. 36, to the end. But upon a stricter enquiry, it appearing dubious to our Reformers, as it doth still to many learned men, whether the woman mentioned in the Scripture, that was appointed for the Gospel, were Mary Magdalene or not; they thought it more proper to discontinue the festival. However, as I have mentioned the other parts of the service, I will also give the reader the Collect that was appointed, which he will observe was very apt and suitable to the Gospel.

"Merciful Father, give us grace that we never " presume to sin through the example of any crea-" ture: but if it shall chance us at any time to offend " thy divine Majesty, that then we may truly repent " and lament the same, after the example of Mary " Magdalene, and by a lively faith obtain remission " of all our sins, through the only merits of thy Son " our Saviour Christ. Amen."

26. St. Anne, mother to the blessed Virgin Mary.] St. Anne was the mother of the blessed Virgin Mary and the wife of Joachim her father. An ancient piece of the sacred genealogy, set down formerly by Hippolitus the martyr, is preserved in Nicephorus. "There were three sisters of Bethlehem, daughters " of Matthan the priest, and Mary his wife, under the " reign of Cleopatra and Casopares King of Persia, " before the reign of Herod, the son of Antipater: " the eldest was Mary, the second was Sobe, the " youngest's name was Anne. The eldest, being " married in Bethlehem, had for daughter Salome " the midwife: Sobe the second likewise married in " Bethlehem, and was the mother of Elizabeth; last " of all the third married in Galilee, and brought " forth Mary the mother of Christ."

AUGUST.

1. Lammas-day.] The first day of this month is commonly called "Lammas-day," though in the Roman church it is generally known by the name of the feast of "St. Peter in the fetters," being the day of the commemoration of St. Peter's imprisonment. For Eudoxia, the wife of Theodosius the Emperor, having made a journey to Jerusalem, was there presented with the fetters which St. Peter was loaded with in prison; which she presented to the pope, who afterwards laid them up in a church built by Theodosius in honour of St. Peter. Eudoxia, in the mean time, having observed that the first of August was celebrated in memory of Augustus Cæsar, (who had on that day been saluted Augustus, and had upon that account given occasion to the changing of the name of the month from Sextilis to August,) she thought it not reasonable that a holyday should be kept in memory of a heathen prince, which would better become that of a godly martyr; and therefore obtained a decree of the Emperor, that this day for the future should be kept holy in remembrance of St. Peter's bonds.

The reason of its being called Lammas-day, some think was a fond conceit the popish people had, that St. Peter was patron of the lambs, from our Saviour's words to him, "Feed my lambs." Upon which account they thought the mass of this day very beneficial to make their lambs thrive. Though Somner's account of it is more rational and easy, namely, that it is derived from the old Saxon Dlaf mæſſe, that is, Loaf-mass, it having been the custom of the Saxons to offer on that day an oblation of loaves made of new wheat, as the first fruits of their new corn.

6. Transfiguration of our Lord.] The festival of our Lord's "Transfiguration" in the mount is very ancient. In the church of Rome indeed it is but of late standing, being instituted by Pope Calixtus in the year 1455; but in the Greek church it was observed long before.

7. Name of Jesus.] The seventh of August was formely dedicated to the memory of Afra, a courtezan of Crete; who, being converted to Christianity by Narcissus bishop of Jerusalem, suffered martyrdom, and was commemorated on this day: how it came afterwards to be dedicated to the "Name of Jesus," I do not find.

10. St. Laurence, Archdeacon of Rome and Martyr.] St. Laurence was by birth a Spaniard, and treasurer of the church of Rome, being deacon to Sixtus the pope about the year 259. When his bishop was haled to death by the soldiers of Valerian the Emperor, St. Laurence would not leave him, but followed him to the place of execution, expostulating with him all the way, "O father, where do you go "without your son? You never were wont to offer "sacrifice without me." Soon after which, occasion being taken against him by the greedy Pagans, for not delivering up the church-treasury, which they thought was in his custody, he was laid upon a gridiron, and broiled over a fire; at which time he behaved himself with so much courage and resolution, as to cry out to his tormentors, that "he was rather "comforted than tormented;" bidding them withal "turn him on the other side, for that was broiled "enough." His martyrdom was so much esteemed in after-times, that Pulcheria the empress built a temple to his honour, which was either rebuilt or enlarged by Justinian. Here was the gridiron on which he suffered laid up, where (if we may believe St. Gregory the Great, who was too credulous in such kind of matters) it became famous for many miracles.

28. St. Augustin, Bishop of Hippo.] St. Augustin, or Austin, was born at Togaste, a town in Numidia in Africa, in the year 354. He applied himself at first only to human learning, such as poetry and plays, rhetorick and philosophy; being professor at Rome first, and afterwards at Milan. At the last of these places St. Ambrose became acquainted with him, who instructed him in divinity, and set him right as to some wrong notions which he had imbibed. He returned into Africa about the year 388, and three years afterwards was chosen bishop of Hippo. He was a great divine, and the most voluminous writer of all the fathers. He died in the year 430, at seventy-seven years of age.

29. Beheading of Saint John Baptist.] The twenty-ninth of this month, as Durandus says, was formerly called "Festum collectionis S. Johan. Baptistæ," or the feast of gathering up "St. John the Baptist's "relicks;" and afterwards by corruption, "Festum "decollationis," the feast of his beheading. For the occasion of the honours done to this Saint are said to be some miraculous cures performed by his relicks in the fourth century; for which Julian the Apostate ordered them to be burnt, but some of them were privately reserved. His head was found after this, in the Emperor Valens's time, and reposited as a precious relick in a church at Constantinople.

SEPTEMBER.

1. Giles, Abbot and Confessor.] Giles, or Ægidius, was one who was born at Athens, and came into France, in the year of our Lord 715, having first disposed of his patrimony to charitable uses. He lived two years with Cæsarius Bishop of Arles, and afterwards took an hermetical life, till he was made Abbot of an abbey at Nismes, which the king, who had found him in his cell by chance as he was hunting, and was pleased with his sanctity, built for his sake. He died in the year 795.

7. Enurchus, Bishop of Orleans.] Enurchus, otherwise called Evortius, was Bishop of Orleans, in France, being present at the Council of Valentia, in the year of our Lord 375. The circumstances of his election to this see were very strange. Being sent by the church of Rome into France, about redeeming some captives, at the time when the people of Orleans were in the heat of an election of a bishop; a dove lighted upon his head, which he could not, without great difficulty, drive away. The people, observing this, took it for a sign of his great sanctity, and immediately thought of choosing him bishop: but not being willing to proceed to election, till they were assured that the lighting of the dove was by the immediate direction of Providence, they prayed to God, that, if He in his goodness designed him for their bishop, the same dove might light upon him again, which immediately happening after their prayers, he was chosen bishop by the unanimous suffrages of the whole city. Besides this, several other miracles are attributed to him; as the quenching a fire in the city by his prayers; his directing the digging of the foundation of a church, in such a place, where the workmen found a pot of gold, almost sufficient to defray the charges of the building; his converting seven thousand infidels to Christianity within the space of three days; and lastly, his foretelling his own death, and in a sort of prophetical manner naming Arianus for his successor.

8. Nativity of the blessed Virgin Mary.] The eighth of this month is dedicated to the memory of the "blessed Virgin's Nativity," a concert of angels having been heard in the air to solemnize that day as her birth-day. Upon which account the day itself was not only kept holy in after-ages, but it was also honoured by Pope Innocent IV. with an octave, in the year of our Lord 1244, and by Gregory XI. with a vigil in the year 1370.

14. Holy-cross day.] The fourteenth of this month is called "Holy-cross day," a festival deriving its beginning about the year 615, on this occasion: Cosroes King of Persia having plundered Jerusalem, (after having made great ravages in other parts of the Christian world,) took away from thence a great piece of the cross, which Helena had left there: and, at the times of his mirth, made sport with that and the holy Trinity. Heraclius the emperor giving him battle, defeated the enemy, and recovered the cross: but bringing it back with triumph to Jerusalem, he found the gates shut against him, and heard a voice from heaven, which told him, that the King of kings did not enter into that city in so stately a manner, but "meek and lowly, and riding upon an ass." With that the emperor dismounted from his horse, and went into the city not only afoot, but barefooted, and carrying the wood of the cross himself. Which honour done to the cross gave rise to this festival.

17. Lambert, Bishop and Martyr.] Lambert was Bishop of Utrecht in the time of King Pepin I. But reproving the king's grandson for his lewd amours, he was, by the contrivance of one of his concubines, barbarously murdered. Being canonized, he at first only obtained a commemoration in the Calendar; till Robert Bishop of Leeds in a general chapter of the Cistercian order procured a solemn feast to his honour, in the year of our Lord 1240.

26. St. Cyprian, Archbishop of Carthage, and Martyr.] St. Cyprian was by birth an African, of a good family and education. Before his conversion he taught rhetorick; but by the persuasion of one Cæcilius, a priest, (from whom he had his surname,) he became a Christian. And giving all his substance to the poor, he was elected Bishop of Carthage in the year 248. He behaved himself with great prudence in the Decian persecution, persuading the people to constancy and perseverance; which so enraged the heathen, that they made proclamation for his discovery in the open theatre. He suffered martyrdom September 14, in the year of our Lord 258, under Valerianus and Gallienus, having foretold that storm long before, and disposed his flock to bear it accordingly.

But the Cyprian in the Roman Calendar celebrated on this day, as appears by the Roman Breviary, is not the same with St. Cyprian of Carthage, but another Cyprian of Antioch, who of a conjuror was made a Christian, and afterwards a deacon and a martyr. He happened to be in love with one Justina, a beautiful young Christian; whom trying, without success, to debauch, he consulted the devil upon the matter, who frankly declared he had no power over good Christians. Cyprian, not pleased with this answer of the devil, quitted his service, and turned Christian. But as soon as it was known, both he and Justina were accused before the heathen governor, who condemned them to be fried in a frying-pan with pitch and fat, in order to force them to renounce their religion, which they notwithstanding with constancy persisted in. After their tortures they were beheaded, and their bodies thrown away unburied, till a kind mariner took them up, and conveyed them to Rome, where they were deposited in the church of Constantine. They were martyred in the year 272.

30. St. Jerom, Priest, Confessor, and Doctor.] St. Jerom was the son of one Eusebius, born in a town called Stridon, in the confines of Pannonia and Dalmatia. Being a lad of pregnant parts, he was sent to Rome to learn rhetorick under Donatus and Victorinus, two famous Latin criticks. There he got to be secretary to Pope Damasus, and was afterwards baptized. He studied divinity with the principal divines of that age, namely, Gregory Nazianzen, Epiphanius, and Didymus. And to perfect his qualifications this way, he learned the Hebrew tongue from one Barraban a Jew. He spent most of his time in a monastery at Bethlehem, in great retirement and hard study; where he translated the Bible. He died in the year 422, being fourscore years old.

OCTOBER.

1. Remigius, Bishop of Rhemes.] Remigius was born at Landen, where he kept himself so close to his studies, that he was supposed to have led a monastick life. After the death of Bennadius, he was chosen Bishop of Rhemes, for his extraordinary learning and piety. He converted to Christianity King Clodoveus, and good part of his kingdom; for which reason he is by some esteemed the apostle of France. After he had held his bishoprick seventy-four years, he died at ninety-six years of age, in the year of our Lord 535. The cruse which he made use of is preserved in France to this day, their kings being usually anointed out of it at their coronation.

6. Faith, Virgin and Martyr.] Faith, a young woman so called, was born at Pais de Gavre in France. She suffered martyrdom and very cruel torments under the presidentship of Dacianus, about the year 290.

9. St. Denys, Areop. Bishop and Martyr.] St. Denys, or Dionysius the Areopagite, was converted to Christianity by St. Paul, as is recorded in the seventeenth of the Acts. He was at first one of the judges of the famous court of the Areopagus, but was afterwards made bishop of Athens, where he suffered martyrdom for the sake of the Gospel. There are several books which bear his name; but they seem all of them to have been the product of the sixth century. He is claimed by the French as their tutelar saint, by reason that, as they say, he was the first that preached the Gospel to them. But it is plain that Christianity was not preached in that nation till long after St. Dionysius's death. Among several foolish and incoherent stories, which they relate of him, this is one: that, after several grievous torments undergone, he was beheaded by Fescennius the Roman governor at Paris; at which time he took up his head, after it was severed from his body, and walked two miles with it in his hands, to a place called the Martyrs-hill, and there laid down to rest.

13. Translation of King Edward the Confessor.] The thirteenth of this month is dedicated to the memory of King Edward the Confessor's Translation. He was the youngest son of King Etheldred; but, all his elder brothers being dead, or fled away, he came to the crown of England in the year 1042. His principal excellency was his gathering together a body of all the most useful laws which had been made by the Saxon and Danish kings. The name of Confessor is supposed to have been given him by the Pope, for settling what was then called Rome-Scot; but is now better known by the name of Peter-Pence. The monks have attributed so many miracles to him, that even his vestments are by them reputed holy. His crown, chair, staff, spurs, &c. are still made use of in the coronation of our English kings.

17. Etheldreda, Virgin.] Etheldreda, or Etheldred, was daughter of Anna, a king of the East-Angles, who was first married to one Tonbert, a great lord in Lincolnshire, &c. and after him to King Egfrid about the year 671, with both which husbands she still continued a virgin, upon pretence of great sanctity. And staying at court twelve years, and continuing this moroseness, she got leave to depart to Coldingham Abbey, where she was a nun under Ebba, the daughter of King Ethelfrida, who was abbess. Afterward she built an abbey at Ely, which she was abbess of herself, and there died and was buried, being recorded to posterity by the name of St. Audry.

25. Crispin, Martyr.] Crispinus and Crispianus were brethren, and born at Rome: from whence they travelled to Soissons in France, about the year 303, in order to propagate the Christian religion. But because they would not be chargeable to others for their maintenance, they exercised the trade of shoemakers. But the governor of the town, discovering them to be Christians, ordered them to be beheaded about the year 303. From which time the shoemakers made choice of them for their tutelar saints.

NOVEMBER.

2. All-Souls' day.] The second of this month is called "All-Souls' day," being observed in the church of Rome upon this occasion. A monk having visited Jerusalem, and passing through Sicily as he returned home, had a mind to see Mount Ætna, which is continually belching out fire and smoke, and upon that account by some thought to be the mouth of hell. Being there, he heard the devils within complain, that many departed souls were taken out of their hands by the prayers of the Cluniac monks. This, when he came home, he related to his abbot Odilo, as a true story; who thereupon appointed the second of November to be annually kept in his monastery, and prayers to be made there for all departed souls: and in a little time afterwards the monks got it to be made a general holy-day by the appointment of the pope; till in ours and other reformed churches it was deservedly abrogated.

6. Leonard, Confessor.] Leonard was born at Le Nans, a town in France, bred up in divinity under Remigius Bishop of Rhemes, and afterwards made Bishop of Limosin. He obtained of King Clodoveus a favour, that all prisoners whom he went to see should be set free. And therefore whencver he heard of any persons being prisoners for the sake of religion, or any other good cause, he presently procured their liberty this way. But the monks have improved this story, telling us, that if any one in prison had called upon his name, his fetters would immediately drop off, and the prison doors fly open: insomuch that many came from far countries, brought their fetters and chains, which had fallen off by his intercession, and presented them before him in token of gratitude. He died in the year 500, and has always been implored by prisoners as their saint.

11. St. Martin, Bishop and Confessor.] St. Martin's account has already been given on July 4.

13. Britius, Bishop.] Britius, or St. Brice, was successor to St. Martin in the bishoprick of Tours. About the year 432, a great trouble befel him: for his laundress proving with child, the uncharitable people of the town fathered it upon Brice. After the child was born, the censures of the people increased, who were then ready to stone their bishop. But the bishop having ordered the infant to be brought to him, adjured him by Jesus the Son of the living God, to tell him whose child he was. The child being then but thirty days old, replied, "You are not my father." But this was so far from mending matters with Brice, that it made them much worse; the people now accusing him of sorcery likewise. At last being driven out of the city, he appealed to Rome, and after a seven years' suit, got his bishoprick again. This story is told of him by Gregory Turonensis, his successor in his see at Tours.

15. Machutus, Bishop.] Machutus, otherwise called Maelovius, was a bishop in Bretagne in France, of that place which is from him called St. Maloes. He lived about the year 500, and was famous for many miracles, if the acts concerning him may be credited.

17. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln.] Hugh was born in a city of Burgundy, called Gratianopolis. He was first a Regular canon, and afterwards a Carthusian monk. Being very famous for his extraordinary abstinence and austerity of life, King Henry II. having built a house for Carthusian monks at Witteham in Somersetshire, sent over Reginald bishop of Bath to invite this holy man to accept the place of the prior of this new foundation. Hugh, after a great many intreaties, assented, and came over with the bishop, and was by the same king made bishop of Lincoln: where he gained an immortal name for his well governing that see, and new building the cathedral from the foundation. In the year 1200, upon his return from Carthusia, the chief and original house of their order, (whither he had made a voyage,) he fell sick of a quartan ague at London, and there died on November the seventeenth. His body was presently conveyed to Lincoln, and happening to be brought thither when John King of England and William King of Scots had an interview there, the two kings, out of respect to his sanctity, assisted by some of their lords, took him upon their shoulders, and carried him to the cathedral. In the year 1220, he was canonized at Rome; and his body being taken up October 7, 1282, was placed in a silver shrine. The monks have ascribed several miracles to him.

20. Edmund, King and Martyr.] Edmund was a king of the East-Angles, who, being assaulted by the Danes (after their irruption into England) for their possession of his country, and not being able to hold out against them, offered his own person, if they would spare his subjects. But the Danes, having got him under their power, endeavoured to make him renounce his religion: which he refusing to do, they first beat him with bats, then scourged him with whips, and afterwards, binding him to a stake, shot him to death with their arrows. His body was buried in a town where Sigebert, one of his predecessors, had built a church; and where afterwards (in honour of his name) another was built more spacious, and the name of the town, upon that occasion, called St. Edmund's Bury.

22. Cæcilia, Virgin and Martyr.] Cæcilia was a Roman lady, who, refusing to renounce her religion when required, was thrown into a furnace of boiling water, and scalded to death: though others say she was stifled by shutting out the air of a bath, which was a death sometimes inflicted in those days upon women of quality who were criminals. She lived in the year 225.

23. St. Clement I. Bishop of Rome and Martyr.] St. Clement I. was a Roman by birth, and one of the first bishops of that place: which see he held, according to the best accounts, from the year 64 or 65 to the year 81, or thereabouts; and during which time he was most undoubtedly author of one, and is supposed to have been of two very excellent epistles, the first of which was so much esteemed by the primitive Christians, that for some time it was read in the churches for canonical Scripture. He was for the sake of his religion first condemned to hew stones in the mines; and afterwards, having an anchor tied about his neck, was drowned in the sea.

25. Catherine, Virgin and Martyr.] St. Catherine was born at Alexandria, and bred up to letters. About the year 305, she was converted to Christianity, which she afterwards professed with great courage and constancy; openly rebuking the heathen for offering sacrifice to their idols, and upbraiding the cruelty of Maxentius the Emperor, to his face. She was condemned to suffer death in a very unusual manner, namely, by rolling a wheel stuck round with iron spikes, or the points of swords, over her body.

DECEMBER.

6. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra in Lycia.] Nicholas was born at Patara, a city of Lycia, and was afterwards, in the time of Constantine the Great, made Bishop of Myra. He was remarkable for his great charity; as a proof of which this instance may serve. Understanding that three young women, daughters of a person who had fallen to decay, were tempted to take lewd courses for a maintenance, he secretly conveyed a sum of money to their father's house, sufficient to enable him to provide for them in a virtuous way.

8. Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary.] The feast of the "Conception" of the Virgin Mary was instituted by Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury, upon occasion of William the Conqueror's fleet being in a storm, and afterwards coming safe to shore. But the Council of Oxford, held in the year 1222, left people at liberty whether they would observe it or not. But it had before this given rise to the question ventilated so warmly in the Roman church concerning the Virgin Mary's immaculate conception; which was first started by Peter Lombard about the year 1160.

13. Lucy, Virgin and Martyr.] Lucy was a young lady of Syracuse, who, being courted by a gentleman, but preferring a religious single life before marriage, gave all her fortune away to the poor, in order to stop his farther applications. But the young man, enraged at this, accused her to Paschasius, the heathen judge, for professing Christianity; who thereupon ordered her to be sent to the stews: but she, struggling with the officers who were to carry her, was, after a great deal of barbarous usage, killed by them. She lived in the year 305.

16. O Sapientia.] The sixteenth of December is called "O Sapientia," from the beginning of an anthem in the Latin service, which used to be sung in the Church (for the honour of Christ's advent) from this day till Christmas Eve.

31. Silvester, Bishop of Rome.] Silvester succeeded Miltiades in the papacy of Rome, in the year of our Lord 314. He is said to have been the author of several rites and ceremonies of the Romish church, as of Asylums, Unctions, Palls, Corporals, Mitres, &c. He died in the year 334.

TABLES AND RULES

FOR

THE MOVEABLE AND IMMOVEABLE FEASTS;

Together with the Days of Fasting and Abstinence, through the whole Year.

Rules to know when the Moveable Feasts and Holy-Days begin.

EASTER-DAY (on which the rest depend [a]) is always the First Sunday after the Full Moon which happens upon, or next after the Twenty-first Day of March; and if the Full Moon happens upon a Sunday, Easter-Day is the Sunday after.

Advent Sunday is always the nearest Sunday to the Feast of St. Andrew, whether before or after.

Septuagesima, Sexagesima, Quinquagesima, Quadragesima } Sunday is { Nine, Eight, Seven, Six } Weeks before Easter.

Rogation-Sunday, Ascension-Day, Whit-Sunday, Trinity-Sunday } is { Five Weeks, Forty Days, Seven Weeks, Eight Weeks } after Easter.

[a] Easter-day (on which the rest depend) &c.] To shew upon what occasion this rule was framed, it is to be observed, that in the first ages of Christianity there arose a great difference between the churches of Asia, and other churches, about the day whereon Easter ought to be celebrated.

The churches of Asia kept their Easter upon the same day on which the Jews celebrated their passover, namely, upon the fourteenth day of their first month Nisan (which month began at the new moon next to the vernal equinox), and this they did upon what day of the week soever it fell; and were from thence called "Quartodecimans," or such as keep Easter upon the fourteenth day after the Φάσις, or appearance of the moon; whereas the other churches, especially those of the West, did not follow this custom, but kept their Easter on the Sunday following the Jewish passover; partly the more to honour the day, and partly to distinguish between Jews and Christians. Both sides pleaded apostolical tradition: these latter pretending to derive their practice from St. Peter and St. Paul: whilst the others, namely, the Asiaticks, said they imitated the example of St. John.

This difference for a considerable time continued with a great deal of Christian charity and forbearance; but at length became the occasion of great bustles in the church; which grew to such a height at last, that Constantine thought it time to use his interest and authority to allay the heat of the opposite parties, and to bring them to a uniformity of practice. To which end he got a canon to be passed in the great general council of Nice, "That every where the great feast of Easter should be observed upon one and the same day; and that not on the day of the Jewish passover, but, as had been generally observed, upon the Sunday afterwards." And that this dispute might never arise again, these paschal canons were then also established, namely,

1. "That the twenty-first day of March shall be accounted the vernal equinox.

2. "That the full moon happening upon or next after the twenty-first day of March, shall be taken for the full moon of Nisan.

3. "That the Lord's day next following that full moon be Easter-day.

4. "But if the full moon happen upon a Sunday, Easter-day shall be the Sunday after."

Agreeable to these is the Rule for finding Easter, still appointed by the Church. Wheatly. It may be here convenient to observe, that our Church does not reckon the full moons according to the rules of the modern almanacks, but that she governs herself therein by the ancient synodical determinations, and paschal cycles of the Church. Dr. Nicholls. Also, that it was enacted by the 24th of George the Second, chap. 23, that "whereas a kalendar, and also certain tables and rules for the fixing the true time of the celebration of the feast of Easter, and the finding the times of the full moons on which the same dependeth, so as the same shall agree as nearly as may be with the decree of the said general council (of Nice), and also with the practice of foreign countries, have been prepared, and are hereunto annexed:" therefore "the said feast of Easter, or any of the moveable feasts thereon depending, shall be no longer kept or observed according to the tables," which had been till then prefixed to the Common Prayer Books, but had been found considerably erroneous; but "that the said new kalendar, tables, and rules hereunto annexed, shall be prefixed to all future editions of the said book in the room and stead" of the former: and that "the said feast of Easter, and all other moveable feasts thereon depending, shall be observed according to the said new kalendar, tables, and rules hereunto annexed, in that part of Great Britain called England, and in all the dominions and countries aforesaid, wherein the Liturgy of the Church of England now is, or hereafter shall be used." The tables and rules to find Easter and the other moveable feasts, which are now prefixed to the Common Prayer Book, as indeed they have been ever since the year 1752, are the tables and rules specified in the above extract; and, as such, are evidently part of the law of the land: by which, it will have been remarked, that provision is made, not only for "the celebration of the feast of Easter" on a day to be regulated by a certain full [b] A Table of all the Feasts &c.] By the fifth and sixth of Edward VI, chap. 3, it was enacted, that all the days therein mentioned should be kept holydays, and none other. This Act was repealed in the first year of Queen Mary: and in the first of Queen Elizabeth a bill to revive the same was brought into Parliament, but passed not; so that the repeal of Queen Mary remained upon this Act till the first year of King James the First, when this repeal was taken off. In the mean while, the Calendar before the Book of Common Prayer had directed what holydays should be observed; and in the Articles published by Queen Elizabeth, the seventh year of her reign, one was, that there be none other holydays observed, besides the Sundays, but only such as be set out for holydays as in the said statute of the fifth and sixth of Edward the Sixth, and in the new Calendar authorized by the Queen's Majesty: who appears in other instances, as she did probably in this, to have greatly disliked the Parliament's intermeddling in matters of religion, the ordering of which she reckoned one great branch of the royal supremacy.

In this table it is observable, that all the same days are repeated as "feasts," which were enacted to be "holydays" by the aforesaid statute: and also these two were added, namely, "the Conversion of St. Paul," and "St. Barnabas," which perhaps were omitted out of the statute, because St. Paul and St. Barnabas were not accounted of the number of the twelve. But in the rubrick, which prescribeth the lessons proper for "holydays," those two festivals are specified under the denomination also of "holydays." But their eves are not appointed by the Calendar, as the eves of others are, to be fasting days. Dr. Burn.

It was upon very good grounds, that the last Revisers of the Common Prayer added these two new holydays: for St. Paul and St. Barnabas being apostles of the same power and dignity with the other twelve, there was all the reason in the world that we should commemorate, and give God thanks for them as well as for the others. But to distinguish them from the others, the eves or vigils of these days are not appointed to be observed so as those of the others are. Bp. Beveridge.

For observations upon each of the feasts in this table, as also upon the different Sundays in the foregoing table, the reader is referred to the notes on them as they severally occur in the order of Collects.

[c] A Table of the Vigils, &c.] They were called "vigils," because the Christians in the primitive times used to be up all night before the great festivals of the year, Christmas, Easter, &c. exercising themselves in fasting and praying, as we read in Tertullian. But about the year 420, a little after St. Jerome's time, the nocturnal vigils were totally abolished, and were turned into preparation fasts, to precede some of the principal festivals of the Church. Dr. Nicholls. The most probable cause of this practice was the necessity which Christians were under of meeting in the night and before day, for the exercise of their publick devotions, by reason of the malice and persecution of their enemies, who endeavoured the destruction of all that appeared to be Christians. And when this first occasion ceased, by the Christians having liberty given them to perform their devotions in a more publick manner, they still continued these night watches before certain festivals, in order to prepare their minds for a due observation of the ensuing solemnity. But afterwards, when these night meetings came to be so far abused, that no care could prevent several disorders and irregularities, the Church thought fit to abolish them; so that the nightly watchings were laid aside, and the fasts only retained, but still keeping the former name of Vigils.

It is observable that some of the festivals have these vigils assigned to them by the Church of England, and some have not. The reason why the latter have no vigils before them, is, because they generally happen either between Christmas and the Purification, or between Easter and Whitsuntide; which were always esteemed such seasons of joy, that the Church did not think fit to intermingle them with any days of fasting and humiliation. They, that fall between Christmas and the Purification, are the feasts of St. Stephen, St. John the Evangelist, the Holy Innocents, the Circumcision, and the Conversion of St. Paul. The others, that may happen between Easter and Whitsuntide, are St. Mark, St. Philip and St. James, and St. Barnabas. It is true, indeed, the festival of our Lord's Ascension, which is always ten days before Whit-Sunday, has a vigil before it; but it may be worth enquiring, whether there was any vigil prefixed to it before the institution of the Rogation Fasts, which were appointed upon the three days that precede this festival. There are two holy-days not yet named, that have no vigils, though they do not happen in either of the above-mentioned seasons: the one is in September, namely, the Feast of St. Michael and all Angels; the other in October, namely, the festival of St. Luke. Upon the first of these, one reason for the institution of vigils ceaseth, which was to conform us to the example of the saints we commemorate, and to remind us that they passed through sufferings and mortifications before they entered into the joy of their Master; whereas those ministering spirits, for whose protection and assistance we return God thanks on that day, were at first created in full possession of bliss. The reason why the latter, namely, St. Luke, has no vigil, is because the eve of that saint was formerly itself a celebrated holy-day in the Church of England, namely, the feast of St. Etheldred; but that reason being now removed, I suppose every one is left to his own liberty, as to his private devotions, whether he will observe the eve as a vigil or not.

All Sundays in the year being appointed by the Church to be observed as festivals, no vigil is allowed to be kept upon any of those days: there being a particular rubrick to order, "that if any of the feast-days that have a vigil fall upon a Monday, then the vigil or fast-day shall be kept upon the Saturday, and not upon the Sunday next before it." But from hence a query ariseth, namely, on which evening service the Collect for the festival is to be used: the rubrick, indeed, relating to this matter seems to be worded very plainly, namely, "That the Collect appointed for every Sunday, or for any holy-day that hath a vigil or eve, shall be said at the evening service next before;" but then this rubrick seems to suppose that the day before is the vigil or eve; and makes no provision in case the festival falls upon the Monday, when we are directed by the rubrick above cited to keep the vigil or fast upon the Saturday. Here then we are left at an uncertainty, nor can we get any light by comparing our present Liturgy with any former Common Prayer Book, because both these rubricks, together with the table of vigils or eves, were first added at the last review. Wheatly.

[d] Note, that if any of these Feast-Days fall upon a Monday, &c.] It is uncertain, as the directions now stand, whether the Collect for a holy-day that hath a vigil, supposing the Sunday to intervene between the vigil and the festival, shall be read "on the eve," on which the vigil is ordered to be observed; or "in the evening immediately before" the festival, according to the rubrick prefixed to the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels. They, whose rule it is to act closely up to the letter of the rubrick, must separate the Collect from the vigil. But they, who plead the supposed intention and reason of both the rubricks, think that they may dispense with the letter of that rubrick which orders the Collect to be read on the evening before the holy-day, and use the Collect on the vigil in compliance with the supposed design of the other rubrick. In either case conformity to rubrick is aimed at, though diversity of practice necessarily prevents uniformity. The general observation concerning rubricks of doubtful interpretation, see above, page xxxiii. note a, is applicable to this particular case. Archdeacon Sharp.

It may be observed on this point, that whenever the Collect of a Sunday or holy-day is read at the evening service before, the weekly Collect that had been in course must be omitted and give place. And the same rule, as I take it, should be observed upon the holy-day itself, upon which no other Collect ought to be used, but the proper one for the day. For the rubrick, at the end of "the order how the rest of the service is appointed to be read," directs, that "the Collect, &c. for the Sunday shall serve all the week after, where it is not otherwise ordered;" which supposes, that in some places it is otherwise ordered, which must be (as it was worded in all the old Common Prayer Books) when "there falls some feast that hath its proper," that is, when any day falls that hath a proper or peculiar Collect, &c. to itself: upon which occasions the rubrick plainly supposes, that the Collect for the Sunday shall be left out and omitted: the Church never designing to use two Collects at once, except within the octaves of Christmas, and during Advent and Lent; when, for the greater solemnity of those solemn seasons, she particularly orders the Collects of the principal days to be used continually after the ordinary Collects. Wheatly.

[e] Days of Fasting, or Abstinence.] That fasting or abstinence from our usual sustenance is a proper means to express sorrow and grief, and a fit method to dispose our minds towards the consideration of any thing that is serious, nature seems to suggest; and therefore all nations, from ancient times, have used fasting as a part of repentance, and as a means to avert the anger of God. This is plain in the case of the Ninevites, Jonah iii. 5, whose notion of fasting, to appease the wrath of God, seems to have been common to them with the rest of mankind. In the Old Testament, besides the examples of private fasting by David, Ps. lxix. 10, and Daniel, Dan. ix. 3, and others; we have instances of publick fasts observed by the whole nation of the Jews at once upon solemn occasions. See Lev. xxiii. 26, &c.; 2 Chron. xx. 3; Ezra viii. 21; Jer. xxxvi. 9; Zech. viii. 19; Joel i. 14. It is true, indeed, in the New Testament we find no positive precept, that expressly requires and commands us to fast: but our Saviour mentions fasting with almsgiving and prayer; which are unquestionable duties; and the directions He gave concerning the performance of it sufficiently suppose its necessity. And He Himself was pleased before He entered upon his ministry, to give us an extraordinary example in his own person, by fasting forty days and forty nights, Matt. iv. 2. He excused indeed his disciples from fasting, so long as He, "the Bridegroom, was with them;" because that being a time of joy and gladness, it would be an improper season for tokens of sorrow; but then He intimates at the same time, that though it was not fit for them then, it would yet be their duty hereafter: for "the days," says He, "will come, when the Bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then they shall fast," Matt. ix. 15. And accordingly we find, that after his ascension, the duty of fasting was not only recommended, 1 Cor. vii. 5; but practised by the apostles, as any one may see by the texts of Scripture here referred to, Acts xiii. 2, and xiv. 23; 1 Cor. ix. 27; 2 Cor. vi. 5, and xi. 27. After the apostles, we find the primitive Christians very constant and regular in the observation of both their annual and weekly fasts. Their weekly fasts were kept on Wednesdays and Fridays, because on the one our Lord was betrayed, on the other crucified. The chief of their annual fasts was that of Lent, which they observed by way of preparation for their feast of Easter.

In the church of Rome, fasting and abstinence admit of a distinction, and different days are appointed for each of them. But I do not find that the Church of England makes any difference between them. It is true in the title of the table of Vigils, &c. she mentions "fasts and days of abstinence" separately: but when she comes to enumerate the particulars, she calls them all "days of fasting or abstinence," without distinguishing the one from the other. The times she sets apart are such as she finds to have been observed by the earliest ages of the church. Wheatly.

THIS Table contains so much of the Calendar as is necessary for the determining of Easter; to find which, look for the Golden Number of the Year in the first Column of the Table, against which stands the Day of the Paschal Full Moon; then look in the Third Column for the Sunday Letter, next after the Day of the Full Moon, and the Day of the Month standing against that Sunday Letter is Easter-Day. If the Full Moon happens upon a Sunday, then (according to the first Rule) the next Sunday after is Easter-Day.

To find the Golden Number, or Prime, add one to the Year of our Lord, and then divide by 19; the Remainder, if any, is the Golden Number; but if nothing remaineth, then 19 is the Golden Number.

To find the Dominical or Sunday Letter, according to the Calendar, until the Year 1799 inclusive, add to the Year of our Lord its fourth Part, omitting Fractions; and also the Number 1: Divide the sum by 7; and if there is no Remainder, then A is the Sunday Letter: But if any Number remaineth, then the Letter standing against that Number in the small annexed Table, is the Sunday Letter.

Note, that in a Bissextile or Leap Year, the Number of Sundays after Epiphany will be the same, as if Easter-Day had fallen One Day later than it really does. And for the same Reason, One Day must, in every Leap Year, be added to the Day of the Month given by the Table for Septuagesima Sunday: And the like must be done for the First Day of Lent (commonly called Ash-Wednesday) unless the Table gives some Day in the Month of March for it; for in that Case, the Day given by the Table is the right Day.

TABLE to find Easter, from the Year 1900 to 2199 inclusive.

THE Golden Numbers in the foregoing Calendar will point out the Days of the Paschal Full Moons, till the Year of our Lord 1900; at which Time, in order that the Ecclesiastical Full Moons may fall nearly on the same Days with the real Full Moons, the Golden Numbers must be removed to different Days of the Calendar, as is done in the annexed Table, which contains so much of the Calendar then to be used, as is necessary for finding the Paschal Full Moons, and the Feast of Easter, from the Year 1900 to the Year 2199 inclusive. This Table is to be made use of, in all respects, as the First Table before inserted, for finding Easter till the Year 1899.

TO find the Dominical or Sunday Letter for any given Year of our Lord, add to the Year its Fourth Part, omitting Fractions, and also the Number, which in Table I. standeth at the Top of the Column, wherein the Number of Hundreds contained in that given year is found: Divide the Sum by 7, and if there is no Remainder, then A is the Sunday Letter; but if any Number remaineth, then the Letter, which standeth under that number at the Top of the Table, is the Sunday Letter.

TO find the Month and Days of the Month to which the Golden Numbers ought to be prefixed in the Calendar, in any given Year of our Lord, consisting of entire Hundred Years, and in all the intermediate Years betwixt that and the next Hundredth Year following, look in the Second Column of Table II. for the given Year consisting of entire Hundreds, and Note the Number or Cypher which stands against it in the Third Column; then, in Table III. look for the same Number in the Column under any given Golden Number, which when you have found, guide your Eye Side-ways to the Left Hand, and in the First Column you will find the Month and Day to which that Golden Number ought to be prefixed in the Calendar, during that Period of One Hundred Years.

The Letter B prefixed to certain Hundredth Years in Table II. denotes those Years which are still to be accounted Bissextile or Leap Years in the New Calendar; whereas all the other Hundredth Years are to be accounted only common Years.

¶ THE ORDER FOR

MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER[k]

DAILY TO BE SAID AND USED THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

THE Morning and Evening Prayer shall be used in the accustomed Place[l] of the Church[m], Chapel[n], or Chancel[o]; except it shall be otherwise determined by the Ordinary of the Place. And the Chancels shall remain as they have done in times past.

[k] The Order for Morning and Evening Prayer &c.] The two times of worshipping God in publick among the Jews were morning and evening, and that by God's own appointment: the morning and evening sacrifice drawing the people together for that purpose. "Thou shalt offer upon the altar two lambs of the first year day by day continually; the one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning, and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even," Exod. xxix. 38, 39. Which precept was constantly observed as long as the city and polity of the Jews stood. Upon which account the primitive Christians constantly observed these two solemn times of prayer: to which they very early added a third. For, as some devout Jews had a third hour, which they devoted to prayer, namely, our twelve o'clock, when they retired to some closet or other secret place, as we see in the example of St. Peter, "who went upon the house-top to pray, about the sixth hour," Acts x. 9; so the primitive Christians turned this hour, which was formerly voluntary, into a settled hour of public devotion: for so it was settled in the times of St. Cyprian and Clement of Alexandria; as we find from passages in their works. Soon after the monks, who desired to be more devout than common Christians, added other hours of stated prayer; and, in St. Basil's time, had increased them to seven. At last these were established by decree of pope Pelagius the Second; and the psalms appointed for each hour, which was the rise of what they call "Canonical hours" in the church of Rome. But our Church in her Reformation has brought back the solemn times of prayer to the most ancient institution, and injoined only morning and evening prayer to be used. Dr. Nicholls. At the same time, to make the duty as practicable and easy both to the minister and people as possible, she hath left the particular hours to the ministers that officiate: who, considering every one his own and his people's circumstances, may appoint such hours for morning and evening prayer as he shall judge to be most proper and convenient. Wheatly.

In the Law it was appointed by God, that there should be both morning and evening service, day by day; and that upon the sabbath there should be twice as long service as upon other days, Numb. xxviii. 9, 10; 1 Chron. xxiii. 30; where we read, that the office of the Levites was to stand every morning to give thanks, and to praise the Lord likewise at even. Bp. Overall.

[l] — shall be used in the accustomed Place &c.] In the first book of King Edward the Sixth, all the rubrick relating to the place in the church, where morning and evening prayer should be used, was only one at the beginning of Morning Prayer, which ordered "the priest, being in the quire, to begin, with a loud voice, the Lord's Prayer, called Paternoster;" with which the morning and evening service then began. So that then it was the custom for the minister to perform divine service, that is, Morning and Evening Prayer, as well as the Communion office, at the upper end of the choir, near the altar: towards which, whether standing or kneeling, he always turned his face in the prayers; though, whilst he was reading the lessons, he turned to the people. Objections being made to this practice, this following rubrick was introduced into Edward's second book in the room of the old one: namely, "The Morning and Evening Prayer shall be used in such places of the church, chapel, or chancel, and the minister shall turn him, as the people may best hear. And if there be any controversy therein, the matter shall be referred to the ordinary, and he or his deputy shall appoint the place."

This alteration caused great contentions, some kneeling one way, some another, though still keeping in the chancel; whilst others left the accustomed place, and performed all the services in the body of the church amongst the people. For the appeasing of this strife and diversity, it was thought fit, when the English service was again brought into the Church, at the accession of Queen Elizabeth to the throne, that the rubrick should be corrected, and put into the same form in which we now have it; namely, that the "Morning and the Evening Prayer shall be used in the accustomed place of the church, chapel, or chancel;" by which for the generality must be meant the "choir," or "chancel," which was the "accustomed place" before the second Common Prayer Book of King Edward. For it cannot be supposed, that this second book, which lasted only one year and a half, could establish a custom. However, a dispensing power was left to the ordinary, who might determine it otherwise, if he saw just cause.

Pursuant to this rubrick, the Morning and Evening service was again, as formerly, read in the chancel or choir. But because in some churches the too great distance of the chancel from the body of the church, occasioned sometimes by the interposition of a belfry, hindered the minister from being heard distinctly by the people; therefore the bishops, at the solicitations of their inferior clergy, allowed them in several places to supersede their former practice, and to have desks,

And here is to be noted, that such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof[p], at all times of their Ministration, shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this Church of England, by the Authority of Parliament, in the Second Year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth.

or reading-pews, in the body of the church, where they might with more ease to themselves, and greater convenience to the people, perform the daily Morning and Evening service. Which dispensation, began at first by some few ordinaries, and recommended by them to others, grew by degrees to be more general, till at last it came to be an universal practice: insomuch that the convocation, in the beginning of King James the First's reign, ordered, that in every church there should be "a convenient seat made for the minister to read service in." Canon 82. And this being almost threescore years before the Restoration of King Charles the Second, (at which time the last review of the Common Prayer was made,) it is very probable, that when they continued this rubrick, they intended the desk or reading-pew should be understood by "the accustomed place" for reading prayers. And what makes this the more likely, is a rubrick at the beginning of the Communion, which expressly mentions a reading-pew, and seems to suppose one in every church. Wheatly.

It should be noted here, that the power of the ordinaries was limited and restrained to the reading of Morning and Evening Prayer only: so that the Communion Service was by this very law and order here reserved to the chancel; neither had any ordinary liberty or power given him to bring it, or give leave to have it brought into the body of the church. Bp. Cosin.

[m] — the Church] The ancient Saxon word is cyrce, the Danish kircke, the Belgick kercke, the Cimbrick kirkia or kurk; probably from the Greek word Κυριακὸν (Kyriakon), belonging to the Lord, or Κυρίου οἶκος (Kyriou oikos), the Lord's house: so that we have lost the ancient pronunciation of the word, except in the northern parts of England, and in Scotland, by softening the letters c or ch, as we have done in many cases: which letters the ancient Greeks and Romans always pronounced hard, as the letter k. Dr. Burn.

[n] — Chapel,] We have softened in English the pronunciation of the initial letters of this word, as we have done in many like instances, for it is evidently the same with the Latin word capella: the Danish word is kapel, the Belgick capelle, the Spanish capilla. But from whence they have their derivation, seemeth not to have been satisfactorily accounted for. Dr. Burn.

[o] — Chancel,] Chancel, cancellus, seemeth properly to be so called a cancellis, from the lattice-work partition betwixt the quire and the body of the church, so formed as to separate the one from the other, but not to intercept the sight.

It is here ordered, that "the chancels shall remain as they have done in times past:" that is to say, distinguished from the body of the church in manner aforesaid: against which distinction Bucer, at the time of the Reformation, inveighed vehemently, as tending only to magnify the priesthood: but though the king and parliament yielded so far, as to allow the daily service to be read in the body of the church, if the ordinary thought fit; yet they would not suffer the chancel itself to be taken away or altered. Dr. Burn.

The chancel was to be distinguished from the body of the church by a frame of open work, and furnished with a row of chairs or stools on either side: and, if there were formerly any steps up to the place where the altar or table stood, they were to be suffered to continue so still, and not to be taken down and laid level with the lower ground, as lately they have been by violence and disorder, contrary to law and custom. Bp. Cosin.

[p] — such Ornaments of the Church, and of the Ministers thereof, &c.] Without which, as common reason and experience teacheth us, the majesty of Him that owneth it, and the work of his service there, will prove to be of a very common and low esteem. Bp. Cosin.

There was one sentence at the end of this rubrick, left out at the Restoration, which would have explained it more fully. The words were these, "according to the Act of Parliament set in the beginning of the book." And these words will lead us to the proper limitation of this rubrick. For, if we look into the first Act of Uniformity by Queen Elizabeth, we shall find the words of this rubrick taken verbatim from that Act, and to be only a part of a clause whereby the Queen expressly reserved to herself a power of "ordering both the ornaments of the church and of the ministers thereof" otherwise hereafter: which power she did afterwards actually make use of, though not perhaps just in the method prescribed in that Act, yet so effectually, that our habits "at the times of our ministration" stand regulated by her injunctions to this day.

Now putting these things together, that the rubrick hath an immediate reference to the Act: and that the Act is made with an express reservation to the Queen's future appointments; and that the Queen, pursuant to this power given her, did, in the year 1564, publish her "Advertisements," as they are called, "concerning the habit of ministers to be worn by them in time of divine service:" it will appear that her injunctions thus set forth are authentic limitations of this rubrick.

The rubrick then, thus limited by the Queen's "Advertisements" in 1564: and limited to the like sense by her Canons in the year 1571; as likewise by the 58th Canon of the year 1603, in the reign of her successor, King James the First: obliges the ministers of the Church, at the times of their parish ministration, to the use of no other ornaments but surplices, and hoods agreeable to their degrees.

Since however some ritualists are of opinion, that this rubrick does not admit of the foregoing limitation, but is to be understood as still prescribing the use of all the ancient ministerial habits injoined by the first book of King Edward the Sixth; it may be convenient to remark, that from the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign down to our times, the disuse of some of those ornaments has been, and is now, so notoriously and universally allowed of by the ordinaries; that although it could not in strictness be reconciled with the letter of the rubrick, yet we are not bound, at this time, to make any alteration in our practice. For, whatever our governours in the church do openly and constantly permit, and consequently by a fair construction approve of, whether it will be admitted as a good interpretation of ecclesiastical laws or not, yet there is no doubt it is a sufficient dispensation for the continuance of the usage, till further order be taken therein; and more especially in all doubtful or disputable cases, the resolution of which is left to the ordinary. Archdeacon Sharp, Dr. Bennet.

As to the "ornaments of the church," mentioned in this rubrick, it may be observed, that among others then in use, there were "two lights" injoined by the injunctions of King Edward the Sixth, (which injunctions were also ratified by the Act of Uniformity that passed soon after the Reformation,) to be set upon the altar, as a significant ceremony to represent the light which Christ's Gospel brought into the world. And this too was ordered by the very same injunction, which prohibited all other lights and tapers, that used to be superstitiously set before images or shrines, &c. And these lights, used time out of mind in the church, are still continued in most, if not all, cathedral and collegiate churches and chapels, so often as divine service is performed by candle-light; and ought also, by this rubrick, to be used in all parish churches and chapels at the same times.

To this section we might also refer the pulpit-cloth, cushions, coverings for the altar, &c. and all other ornaments used in the church, and prescribed by the first book of King Edward the Sixth. Bishop Cosin, Wheatly.

THE ORDER FOR

MORNING PRAYER,

DAILY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

¶ At the beginning of Morning Prayer[a] the Minister shall read with a loud voice[b] some one or more of these Sentences of the Scriptures that follow. And then he shall say that which is written after the said Sentences[c].

WHEN the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive. Ezekiel xviii. 27.

[a] At the beginning of Morning Prayer, &c] Prayer is the lifting up of the soul to converse with God, and a means of obtaining all blessings. It is an high honour to us, and a great advantage: but it is at the same time difficult to be performed, requiring so much attention and serenity of mind, that it can never be well done without some preceding preparation: for which reason, when the Jews enter into their synagogues to pray, they stand silent for some time, and meditate before whom they stand; and the Christian priests, in the primitive ages, prepared the people's hearts to prayer by a devout preface. In imitation whereof we now use the Sentences of holy Scripture, which are all of them chosen to be admonitions to repentance, since nothing makes us more unfit to pray, or unlikely to be heard, than sin unrepented of, Ps. lxvi. 18; John ix. 31. And being gathered out of the sacred text, the Church hopes we will not dare to disobey them, as coming from the mouth of that God, to whom we address ourselves in our prayers, and who may justly reject our petition, if we hearken not to his commandments.

As for the particular Sentences, the reverend composers of our Liturgy have been curious and exact in the choice of them, selecting divers of the plainest and properest places to bring all sorts of sinners to repentance. There are variety of dispositions, and the same man is not always in the same temper; wherefore they have collected many, and left it to the discretion of him that ministers, to use such of them every day, as best suit with his own and his people's circumstances.

And from these Sentences those who come, as all ought to do, before prayers begin, may find a meditation fitted for their present frame of spirit.

The first rank may consist of those Sentences, which contain support for the fearful, and are designed to prevent that excessive dread of God's wrath, which hinders the exercise of devotion by too much dejecting the spirits. Such persons may be taught by David and Jeremiah not to run from the Almighty, but to pray to Him more humbly and earnestly. Ps. li. 9; cxliii. 2; Jer. x. 24.

2. Not much unlike is the case of those who doubt of God's favour, and in despair look upon Him as irreconcileable. To strengthen their faith in God's mercy, the Church provides three sentences for them; the first to shew, how fit they are to ask pardon; the other two to declare how likely God is to grant it on their repentance. Ps. li. 17; Dan. ix. 9; Luke xv. 18, 19.

3. For the information of the ignorant, who know not how to make these penitential addresses, as being sensible neither of their guilt, nor of their danger, because they think either that they have no sin, or that a slight repentance will procure pardon for it, the two following sentences are provided, 1 John i. 8, 9; Ezek. xviii. 27.

4. Others there are, who are not ignorant, but negligent; and, though they know they are daily sinning, and cannot be saved without repentance, yet defer this duty from day to day. On these the Church calls in the two following sentences, Ps. li. 3; Matt. iii. 2.

Lastly, those, who by custom grow cold and formal, confessing their sins with external reverence only, without any sincere devotion, are presented by the Church with that direction and reproof, which God gave the hypocritical Jews, Joel ii. 13. Dean Comber.

Thus we see how wisely and effectually the Church prepares the way to the throne of grace for the various descriptions of character, which may be supposed to assemble within her courts for the purposes of devotion. Let us learn to be thankful for these encouragements, admonitions, and instructions: and may it be our earnest desire so to use the ordinances of God's house as not to abuse them; that we may find them our support through life, and as waters of consolation in the day of adversity. Rogers.

Nothing can so effectually awaken us to a pious frame of soul, as the words of God speaking to us. Our service therefore begins, as did that of the primitive Church, with a preface, to dispose the minds of the congregation to a reverent performance of the duty on which they are entering: according to that precept of the Son of Sirach, "Before thou prayest, prepare thyself," Ecclus. xviii. 23. This preface is composed of Sentences of

I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me. Psalm li. 3.

Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Psalm li. 9.

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. Psalm li. 17.

Rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God; for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great Scripture, with an Exhortation grounded upon them. The Sentences are very prudently selected. They all relate to repentance and confession of sins, which naturally stands first in the devotions of guilty creatures, as we all are. Till we feel a genuine sorrow for having offended God, and come to intreat earnestly the pardon which is offered us through Christ, He cannot accept us; and when we do, that will qualify us for every other part of his worship.

In these texts we are plainly taught the nature of true penitence: that the "wicked must" both "turn away from his wickedness, and do that," which the law enjoins as "right, to save his soul alive:" that we must not only "acknowledge our transgressions" with our tongues, but have them "ever before" the eyes of our minds, to keep us humble and cautious: on which we may pray, in faith of being heard, that God will treat us with the same kindness, as if He "hid his face from" seeing "our sins," or "blotted" them "out" from his memory: that He requires from us, neither the fanciful "sacrifices" of superstition, nor the expensive ones of the "Mosaick" dispensation; but that of "a spirit contrite" with filial sorrow, and "broken" to universal obedience: not outward expressions of vehement passion, as "rending the garments," but a "heart" rent and penetrated with a just sense of what we have done amiss: that on such a change within we shall find Him, not only "slow to anger" for what is past, and "ready to repent him of the evil" which He was bringing upon us, but bountiful and gracious for the time to come; "though we have" deliberately "rebelled against him" heretofore, and still too often inconsiderately neglected to "obey his voice, and walk in his laws:" that we have cause to be willing and even desirous, that He should "correct" us, when He sees it expedient; but to beg He would do it "with" that mild and merciful "judgment," which He exercises towards his children, "not with anger," as his enemies, which would "bring us" to final destruction: that repentance is absolutely and immediately necessary for us; for "the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" the hour, when we shall, each of us, be admitted into it or excluded out of it for ever, draws very near, and how near we know not: that therefore we must resolve to "arise and go to our heavenly Father" without delay, and acknowledge our unworthiness "to be called his sons:" that whatever we may be in our own eyes, or the opinion of our fellow-creatures, were we to undergo a human trial only; yet if God "enter into judgment with us, in his sight shall no man living be justified:" that therefore to extenuate our faults, and "say" or imagine, "that we have no sin," or but little, would be a fatal "self-deceit," and a proof against us, that we know not, or own not, the "truth" of our case: but if we honestly recall to ourselves, and confess to God the errors of our past life, not only his mercy but his "faithfulness and justice" to his promises will induce Him both to "forgive us" the guilt of "our sins," and "to cleanse us from" the defilement, and deliver us from the dominion, of "all unrighteousness."

It is true, but few of the Sentences are usually read at the same time; but it will be very beneficial for such as come soon enough, to meditate on them all before the service begins. Abp. Secker.

The first book of King Edward begins with the Lord's prayer. But, when a review was taken of it afterwards, and alterations were made in it, the beginning was thought too abrupt, and these Sentences were therefore prefixed with the following Exhortation, Confession, and Absolution, as a proper introduction to prepare the congregation for the duty on which they were entering. Wheatly.

As soon as the minister begins these Sentences, it is usual for the congregation to stand up: a very decent and proper custom, if we consider the true meaning and intent of it; which is to shew our reverence for the word of God, now rehearsed to us, in order to awaken us to repentance. Waldo.

[b] — the minister shall read with a loud voice] That is, with a clear, distinct, and audible voice: the word "loud" not signifying that it should be any way strained, or kept up beyond its strength; but that it should be raised and adapted to such an extended elevation, above the ordinary course of reading, as he shall feel to be most agreeable to himself, in order to make it the more edifying to his congregation. Collis.

As it is the duty of the clergy to remember, what a solemn action they are now about to join in with their respective congregations; and accordingly to read these Sentences with a suitable gravity, with a demeanour expressive of their inward devotion, with attention, and deliberation, and such a tone of voice, as may influence their people, and quicken their zeal, and tend to excite in them those heavenly affections, which are requisite in prayer: so also is it the duty of the congregations to consider, that, during the reading of these Sentences and the following Exhortation, they must not think themselves at liberty to be idle, as if they had nothing to regard, whilst the minister is reading. They are certainly obliged to bestow that time after a quite different manner; to give a reverent attention to what the minister reads; to hear the voice of God speaking to them in the Sentences, and the voice of his ambassador speaking to them in the Exhortation; and thereby to fit and prepare their hearts for making their addresses to God Himself in the Church's Confession. And to the end that they may not lose an opportunity of so doing, let them come to church in good time, that they may be present at the very beginning of the Office. And when they first come to their respective places, let them by some short prayer beg God's special assistance, that they may discharge their duty as they ought, and offer an acceptable sacrifice to Him. Let the intermediate space also, between their short private prayer, and the minister's beginning to read, be spent, not in talking or gazing, but in reading or meditation; that they may bring themselves to a devout frame of mind by the time that the minister begins, and may be the better able to go through the whole office in such a manner as God expects from them. Dr. Bennet.

[c] And then he shall say that which is written after the said Sentences.] The service of the Church of England always begins with one or more sentences of Scripture: the Exhortation, which follows, is but little more than a sort of comment or paraphrase on the several texts which are ordered to be read. Vencer.

[d] Dearly beloved brethren, &c.] To the foregoing Sentences of God's word the Church hath annexed a pertinent Exhortation: which is designed both to apply and set home the preceding Sentences, and to direct us how we ought to perform the following Confession. It collects the necessity of this duty from the word of God; and, when it hath convinced us that we must do it, it instructs us in the right manner, and gives us the reason why we must confess and repent just now: and then it invites us to that necessary duty for which it hath so well prepared us. So that it connects the Sentences and the Confession; making the former so useful in order to the latter, that whoever hears them, and considers the inferences here made, cannot but be properly disposed for a true confession. And, though neither the Roman nor Greek Offices have any such form in this place, yet the pertinency and usefulness thereof will shew, that our prudent and pious Reformers have every where contrived, that the people might perform each part of the Office with the spirit, and with the understanding also. Dean Comber.

This Exhortation demands our most serious attention: though there is reason to fear, that too often it is little, if at all, attended to, but looked upon as a mere matter of form, not deserving our notice. But, if we will only consider the excellent instruction which it contains, we shall surely think otherwise; and both silently and attentively hearken to this useful and seasonable introduction to the service of the Church. Waldo.

The minister begins his admonition with the apostolical salutation, "Dearly beloved brethren," Phil. iv. 1. Dean Comber. And it appears from several passages, that this beginning is very agreeable to the style of the New Testament. St. Paul, 2 Cor. vii. 1, expresses himself thus: "having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," &c.; and in the next chapter, ver. 1, he calls the Corinthians his brethren, as he doth the Galatians, Gal. iii. 15; and the Thessalonians, 1 Thess. iv. 1. in short, nothing is more commonly to be met with than these appellations, "Beloved" and "Brethren," throughout St. Paul's, St. James's, St. Peter's, and St. John's Epistles. Veneer.

These first words of the Exhortation express very strongly and properly the good will and tender regard, which the ministers of God's word should have for their people; who should in return receive their admonitions meekly and thankfully, since they "speak" to them "the truth in love," Eph. iv. 15. Abp. Secker.

After this kind and affectionate address, the Exhortation proceeds, comprehending these several heads: 1. The matter of the Exhortation, namely, a call to confession, in these words; "The Scripture moveth us in sundry places to acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness." Secondly, A caution against cloking and concealing them, in these words; "And that we should not dissemble nor cloke them before the face of Almighty God our heavenly Father." Thirdly, The manner and qualifications of true confession, in these words; "but confess them with an humble, lowly, penitent, and obedient heart." Fourthly, The end and design of confession, in these words; "to the end that we may obtain forgiveness of the same, by his infinite goodness and mercy." Fifthly, The time or seasons of confession, which the next words tell us, must be in general, "at all times:" but more especially, "when we assemble and meet together," for the ends after mentioned. And lastly, the conclusion, in these words, "Wherefore I pray and beseech you, as many as are here present, to accompany me with a pure heart, and humble voice, unto the throne of the heavenly grace, saying after me." Dr. Hole.

[e] — the Scripture moveth us &c.] That the Scripture doth move us, as here affirmed, appears from the introductory sentences, particularly from 1 John i. 8, 9. Veneer. Many other passages might be cited to this purpose; two or three of the most remarkable are Ps. xxxii. 5; Prov. xxviii. 13; 1 John i. 8, 9. Besides these passages many others occur throughout the Bible, strongly enforcing the necessity of humiliation and confession, as well as many striking instances of the due performance of these duties: as may be seen in 1 Kings viii. 46, &c.; Ezra ix. 6, &c.; Nehem. i. 5, &c.; the latter part of the book of Job; the penitential psalms of David, particularly the 51st; Isa. lxiv. 6; and sundry passages in the writings of the prophets. Waldo. To add weight to his exhortation the minister intimates that it is not he only, but God Himself, who moveth his people to repentance, so that he who refuseth, refuseth not man but God. Dean Comber.

semble nor cloke them[f] before the face of Almighty God our heavenly Father; but confess them with an humble, lowly, penitent, and obedient heart: to the end that we may obtain forgiveness[g] of the same, by his infinite goodness and mercy. And although we ought at all times[h] humbly to acknowledge our sins before God; yet ought we most chiefly so to do, when we assemble[i] and meet together to render thanks[k]

[f] — that we should not dissemble nor cloke them &c.] Since all our sins are known to Almighty God, who understands our thoughts, words, and works, it is but folly to "dissemble" our guilt by feigned excuses, as Saul and Ananias, 1 Sam. xv. 15; Acts v. 2. 8; and impudence to "cloke" and cover it with false denials, as Gehazi, 2 Kings v. 25; for "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper," Prov. xxviii. 13. Though we could deny our faults so confidently, or dissemble them so cunningly, as to deceive all the world, we cannot conceal them from Him, who will find us out and will condemn us for the transgression and the hypocrisy also. The Scripture therefore teaches us a wiser way, namely, "to confess them;" shewing us withal what frame of spirit we must put on when we do confess. For we must have, first, "an humble and lowly" heart, truly sensible of our own vileness by sin, and judging ourselves unworthy to lift up our eyes to heaven, Job xlii. 6; Luke xviii. 13. Secondly, "A penitent" heart full of sorrow, and indignation against ourselves, for offending so good a God, and thereby being in danger, not only to lose endless joys, but to fall into eternal misery, for short and empty pleasures, Matt. xxvi. 75. And this will produce, thirdly, "an obedient heart," and make us firmly resolve, and earnestly endeavour, to keep God's commandments better hereafter, John v. 14. Dean Comber.

It is to no purpose to confess our sins, unless we resolve to forsake them, and to obey those laws of God, which we have formerly transgressed. Thus much is intimated by the word "obedient:" for an "obedient heart" in this place signifies a heart that hath given itself up to the service of God, and is convinced that a profession of repentance without reformation is an insult upon God and an instance of the vilest hypocrisy. "Whoso confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall have mercy." Prov. xxviii. 13. Veneer.

A moment's serious reflection on our manifold sins and wickedness can scarcely fail to convince us of the real excellence and propriety of this part of the Exhortation. Have we not in many instances neglected God, and wilfully transgressed against Him? Have not our sins been attended with many, and almost unpardonable aggravations? What then can more become us, than humility and lowliness of mind? Without doubt a penitent and obedient heart is the very offering we ought to bring, when we would approach God's footstool. And this disposition is our preparation under the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit for the reception of his mercy and forgiveness. Rogers.

[g] — to the end that we may obtain forgiveness &c.] To encourage us to confess our sins in the manner just mentioned, we are told in the following sentence, that the Scripture hath promised us forgiveness upon true repentance; which comfortable doctrine is supported by a representation of the infinite goodness and mercy of God. "When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed," saith the prophet Ezekiel, "and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive," Ezek. xviii. 27. And St. Paul declares, that he had "testified both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ," Acts xx. 21. Veneer.

God in his "infinite goodness and mercy" willeth not the death of poor sinners, but is ready to acquit them on their sincere repentance. Still we must not think, that repentance is the meritorious cause, whereby we may claim from God impunity for our sins: for that is vouchsafed to us only by the "infinite mercy and goodness" of God, reached out to us in the mystery of our redemption, and procured for us by the suffering of our blessed Lord. Dean Comber, Dr. Nicholls.

[h] And although we ought at all times] Or in those more frequent courses of private devotion, (to which we are obliged by our religion, Eph. vi. 18; 1 Tim. ii. 8,) to exercise this duty of confession. Dr. Nicholls. Not that we are always to be upon our knees actually repenting and making confession to Him; for that would interfere with other necessary duties: but that we are to be ever willing and readily disposed, on all fit occasions and opportunities, to lay open our offences, without ever thinking or desiring to hide or cloke any thing from the knowledge of God. As our confessing in private will not excuse us from attending upon and joining in the publick confession: so our attending and making a publick confession will not excuse us from the private confession of our sins: the one must not exclude the other, but both are to be observed in their due and proper times; by doing which we may be said, "at all times humbly to acknowledge our sins before God;" especially if it be daily done and observed by us; for we are said to do always, that which we do every day. And this is no more than what is necessary and fit to be done; for since we daily renew our sins, it is but reason that we should daily renew our confession. And, because we daily commit some particular and secret sins, which enter not the publick confession, and which no eye but God's ever saw, therefore are we daily to make our private confessions, to bewail and repent of them before God; the doing whereof is the performing what is here required, namely, the acknowledging our sins at all times before him. Dr. Hole.

The benefits of the frequent practice of private humiliation and confession will be unspeakably great, as it will check all tendency to spiritual pride and presumption, and be the best means of preventing any habit of sin from getting the dominion over us. And there is this peculiar advantage in it, that in our retirements we can look calmly and attentively into our hearts, and examine our dispositions and actions more thoroughly and minutely than we can in publick. Waldo.

[i] — yet ought we most chiefly so to do, when we assemble &c.] Namely, in the solemn assembly of Christians in the church. Dr. Nicholls.

As to the institution and use of such publick meetings and church assemblies for the celebration of divine worship, they have been as ancient as religion and Christianity itself; which hath ever had, from the beginning, some publick places set apart, by divine authority, for such assemblies. The Jews had the temple and synagogues consecrated for that purpose, where they were commanded to make their confessions and oblations, and other acts of publick worship, which were resorted to and frequented by Christ and his apostles. After which the Christians had their churches and oratories set apart for divine service, as we read in holy Scripture and ecclesiastical history, and find derived down and continued to us to this day. Dr. Hole.

"God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints," Ps. lxxxix. 7. When Solomon was dedicating the temple of Jerusalem, he intimated in his prayer, not only that it was the properest place for the people to confess their sins in, but also that when they were at a distance from it, so that they were unavoidably deprived of this privilege, they should "confess their sins towards the house of God:" signifying thereby that their hearts should be there, even though their bodies could not. See 1 Kings viii. 29, 30. 38, 39. Veneer.

Our Saviour hath laid a peculiar stress on joint prayers; and made more especial promises to those petitions, which his disciples put up in common, Matt. xviii. 20; both to unite them closely in mutual affection by the mutual benefits they receive at each other's request; and to encourage a practice, which he foresaw would prove so powerful a means, both of our own edification, and the conversion of others.

We have reason therefore to entertain a much higher esteem, than we do, of the advantages to be obtained from constancy in publick worship. But then the more we expect from it, with the more care we must qualify ourselves for what we expect: else we shall certainly be disappointed. And, as penitent confession in the name of Christ is the great qualification for pardon and every mercy; and each one's example, in the church, of that or the contrary, must have a good or bad effect on those around him, we should endeavour, if there be room for any difference, to be more than ordinarily humble and fervent there: yet we are in danger of being least so; unless we look well to our ways, and diligently "keep our foot when we go to the house of God," Eccles. v. 1. Abp. Secker.

[k] — to render thanks &c.] If we consider for what ends we "assemble and meet together" in those sacred places, dedicated to God's service, we shall soon perceive that every one of the duties, to be done there, requires that we be first prepared by repentance; and till we have confessed and bewailed our transgressions, we are not fit nor likely to be accepted in any other parts of the offices. St. Augustine tells us, that the Christians in his time assembled, 'to learn God's law, to declare his wonderful work, to praise Him for his gifts, and pray to Him for his blessing:' and our Church here shews us, that we have these four things also to do in our assemblies: first, "to render thanks" to God for his benefits, as we do in our Thanksgivings; secondly, "to set forth that praise" of which He is "most worthy," which is done in our Psalms, Hymns, Anthems, and Doxologies; thirdly, to "hear his word," as we do in attending to the reading of the Scriptures, and to the sermons taken from thence; fourthly, "to ask things necessary for our bodies and souls," which we do in our Collects, Supplications, and Intercessions. But, unless true repentance go before, we are unworthy either to give thanks, or to sing praise to God, Ps. xxxiii. 1; unfit to hear his most holy word, Matt. vii. 6; or to offer up any prayers to Him, John ix. 31. None of these services will be acceptable to God, or can be profitable to us, unless we repent before we go about them. Dean Comber.

[l] Wherefore I pray and beseech you, &c.] That the people may not come to church in vain, and lose the benefit of so many holy duties, as those just enumerated, the priest "prays," and earnestly "beseeches all that are now present," to join with him in the following Confession: there are none so holy, but they have need to make it; and none so sinful, but they may be profited by it. Dean Comber.

The persons thus addressed and intreated, are all that are present in the congregation: high and low, rich and poor, one with another, young and old, persons of all ages, sexes, states, and conditions; all being sinners, all are here called upon to come and make confession. The thing to which they are invited, is to "accompany the minister to the throne of the heavenly grace." A great privilege allowed to the people under the Gospel, which the Jews had not under the Law; for then none entered the temple but the priest only, the people being admitted no farther than the outward court, where they sent and offered up their petitions by the priest. But now they may come more boldly to "the throne of grace," and "accompany" the minister in offering up with him their prayers and confessions, to which he here invites them. Dr. Hole.

The conclusion of this Exhortation employs the same pathetick manner of expression that is often to be met with in the New Testament, particularly 2 Cor. x.; the first verse of which chapter begins thus: "Now I Paul myself beseech you, by the meekness and gentleness of Christ," &c. The substance of it is to teach us to pray "with a pure heart," and in "an humble" manner. Thus the Apostle, 1 Tim. ii. 8, commands men "to lift up holy hands in prayer;" and the Psalmist says, Ps. lxvi. 18, that "if he regarded iniquity in his heart, the Lord would not hear him." And, though the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews exhorts us, to go "boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need," Heb. iv. 16; yet it appears from chap. xii. 28, that this boldness must be tempered with humility: "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." Veneer.

It is worthy of observation, how right and judicious this Exhortation is in all its parts, to instruct the ignorant, to admonish the negligent, to support the fearful, to comfort the doubtful, to caution the formal, and to check the presumptuous; seeing all these tempers are found in every mixed congregation, and ought to be prepared for this solemn work. For without preparation, what, alas! would be our approach to the throne of God, but a temptation? For it is a general rule for the temple as well as for the closet, "before thou prayest, prepare thyself: and he not as one that tempteth the Lord," Ecclus. xviii. 23. Whilst then this Exhortation is reading by the minister, every person ought diligently to listen to its sense; and not ignorantly, as the manner of some is, to repeat the words after him; and in so doing they will be best prepared to accompany him in making the following confession to the throne of grace. Dr. Bisse.

[m] — saying after me ;] It is highly reasonable that the minister should make such a pause between the end of the Exhortation, and the beginning of the Confession, that the whole congregation may have sufficient time, deliberately, and without the least hurry, to put their bodies in a praying posture, and to direct their minds to God, and fix them upon the divine Majesty; so that they may be thoroughly composed for so solemn and heavenly an exercise by the time that the minister begins the Confession. Dr. Bennet.

[n] A general Confession &c.] It is certain that sin unrepented of, hinders the success of our prayers, Isa. i. 15; lix. 1, 2; John ix. 31. Such therefore as would pray effectually have always begun with confession; because, when the guilt is removed by penitential acknowledgments, there is no bar to God's grace and mercy. Thus Ezra and Daniel prayed, Ezra ix. 5, 6; Dan. ix. 4, 5. And Christ taught his disciples to ask for pardon, as often as they prayed for their daily bread, Matt. vi. 11, 12. Dean Comber. To begin morning prayer with confession of sins may be called the Catholick custom of the primitive Church. "Early in the morning," saith St. Basil, "the people rising go straight to the house of prayer, making confession of their sins to God with much sorrow." Which custom was not peculiar to his own Church, but consonant, he tells us, to that of all other Churches. Confession also was qualified in the same manner as ours, the congregation repeating the words after the minister, "every man," as he says, "pronouncing his own confession with his own mouth." L'Estrange. Accordingly, all ancient liturgies have some form for that very purpose: but none more full and proper can be found any where, than this of ours. Dean Comber.

There is no one subject in religion, on which the various denominations of Christians are more generally agreed, than the humble confession of our sins to Almighty God. If divine precepts, if the most striking examples and the happy consequences resulting from a right performance of this duty ought to have any influence on the human heart; not one of us can wilfully neglect the solemn obligation without materially injuring his own soul. Rogers.

It is called a "general confession," which it is in a double respect. It is "general" in respect to the persons: for all men are required to make it: "there is no man that liveth and sinneth not," as the Apostle saith; and therefore there is no man living, who is not bound to make confession of his sins. It is also "a general confession" in respect of its contents, which are the general failings and aberrations of human life, which are common to all men, and so may and ought to be confessed by all, without descending to particular sins, of which perhaps some of the congregation may not be guilty. These are to be the subject of men's private confessions, but may not enter into the publick confession of the Church, which ought to be so framed in general terms, that all may truly make and join in it: called for that reason likewise, "a general confession." Dr. Hole.

This confession is in its form most solemn, in its extent most comprehensive: for it takes in all kinds of sin, both of omission and of commission: and whilst every single person makes this general confession with his lips, he may make a particular confession with his heart; that is, of his own personal sins, known only to God and to himself; which if particularly though secretly confessed and repented of, will assuredly be forgiven. This then is the privilege of our confession, that under the general form every man may mentally unfold "the plague of his own heart," his particular sins, whatever they be, as effectually to God, who "alone knoweth the hearts of men," as if he pronounced them in express words. Dr. Bisse.

And indeed had this form been more particular or express, it would not so well have answered the purpose, for which it was designed: for a common confession ought to be so contrived, that every person present may truly speak his own case; whereas a particular confession would be little less than an inquisition, forcing those that join in it to accuse and condemn themselves of those sins daily, which perhaps they never committed in their lives. Wheatly.

The Confession may be considered as consisting of two parts, besides the introduction or address to God: first, the confession properly so called, wherein we acknowledge our errings and strayings from God's ways by our original and actual transgressions, by our general and particular vices, and by our sins both of omission and commission; together with the forlorn and helpless condition to which they have all reduced us. The second part of it contains petitions for mercy and pardon for past offences, and likewise for grace to prevent them for the future. Dr. Hole.

[o] — to be said of the whole Congregation] This provision of the Church is made with good reason. For could there be any thing devised better, than that we all, at our first access unto God by prayer, should acknowledge meekly our sins, and that not only in heart but with tongue; all that are present being made earnest witnesses, even of every man's distinct and deliberate assent to each particular branch of a common indictment drawn against ourselves? how were it possible that the Church should any way else, with such ease and certainty, provide, that none of her children may dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble especially to common prayer? Bp. Sparrow.

The Confession is directed "to be said of the whole congregation after the minister." If this be done by each person, as is also directed, "with an humble voice," he will give no disturbance to others, and every one must experience, that what he saith, on this occasion, with his own mouth, is brought more home to his soul, becomes more personal and affecting, than if he had silently assented to it, when said for him. And as it is a very useful, so it is a very old custom; revived in our Church, after being laid aside by the Church of Rome; who begin their service with an act of humiliation by the priest alone, in which the people have no share. Abp. Secker.

[p] — after the Minister.] Because the Church has injoined, that the general Confession shall be said by the whole of the congregation after the minister: therefore all ministers would do well to take care, that they do not begin a new portion thereof, before the people have had time enough to repeat the former with due deliberation. For nothing certainly can be more indecent, than the hurrying over of such an excellent form as this is; which ought to be so uttered, as that the souls of the people may go along with their words, that they may pass on leisurely from one thing to another, and the whole may be offered to God as a rational service.

the devices and desires of our own hearts[t]. We have offended against thy holy laws[u]. We have left undone those things which we ought Dan. ix. 9, 10. Ps. xix. 7, 8. 1 John iii. 4. Rom. vii. 12.

The people also should remember, that when they are repeating the several portions of the Confession after the minister, they are speaking to God, and transacting with him the grand affair of repentance, and reconciliation to his favour, upon which their everlasting happiness depends. Let them therefore not behave themselves after a careless and slovenly manner; let them not utter the words in such a tone as betokens irreverence, and proves that they do not mind what they say, or to whom they speak: but consider the vast importance of the duty of prayer, and the indispensable necessity of a due performance of it, and that confession of sins is the most solemn part of prayer. Let these considerations sink deep into them, and prevail upon them so to perform this duty, that it may obtain a remission, and not add to the number of their sins. Dr. Bennet.

And especially they should remember, that, since none are fit to pray till they have confessed their sins, it is necessary for every one to come early to prayers, and always to be there so soon as to join in this Confession, which, if duly considered, will greatly assist and direct us in the exercise of our repentance. Dean Comber.

It is painful to see what numbers are habitually late in coming to church. The practice carries with it such an air of irreverence, as must be sufficient to convince every sober and thinking person of its extreme impropriety. Rogers.

[q] — all kneeling.] There is nothing that we do in this world comparable to the publick acts and exercises of religion; and therefore nothing deserves or requires a greater solemnity. For which reason the Church requires us, in all our prayers and confessions, to be on our knees: for which we have the example of our Saviour, and of all good men in all ages, who have always performed their publick devotions with humble and lowly gestures, and most commonly in this particular posture of kneeling. Dr. Hole.

And that posture in prayer, especially in this part, hath not only ancient authority but nature itself, on its side: and doth so strongly both express and excite inward humility, that it should never be omitted wilfully, or negligently, in favour of ease and indolence: considerations, very unworthy of notice at such a time. Still they, whose infirmities will not permit them to be on their knees without pain or hurt, may doubtless allowably stand, or even sit: for God "will have mercy, and not sacrifice," Matt. ix. 13; xii. 7. And farther; as in many full congregations this rule cannot be observed by every one without taking up more room than can with convenience be spared; certainly the superior rule, of doing "the things wherewith one may edify another," Rom. xiv. 19, binds us rather to be content with standing, though a less eligible posture, than exclude numbers of our fellow-Christians from being tolerably accommodated for joining in worship with us. For kneeling, though greatly preferable, is not prescribed as indispensably necessary. "The children of Israel," we read in the book of Nehemiah, "were assembled fasting," and, probably for the reason just mentioned, "stood and confessed their sins," Nehem. ix. 2. The penitent publican did not fail of being accepted, though he stood, when he said, "God be merciful to me a sinner," Luke xviii. 13. And on some days the early Christians did not kneel at all. Abp. Secker.

Kneeling is the attitude prescribed to us in this solemn act of confession. This visible expression of humility will be adopted, so far as circumstances will permit, by every faithful worshipper. Undoubtedly every reasonable allowance will be made for age and bodily infirmity: but a wilful negligence or a fashionable carelessness, in this part of our devotions, must be unjustifiable, and therefore inexcusable. Rogers.

[r] Almighty and most merciful Father;] This introduction sets before us Him, whom we have offended, under the two proper titles of "Almighty and most merciful Father:" the first to shew us his power, and strike us with a holy fear of his anger; the second to manifest his love, and melt us with the sense of his mercy: the former reminds us of the danger of standing out in our disobedience; the latter declares the hopes of being received into his favour again upon our repentance: and though his omnipotence might terrify us, yet his mercy invites us to return and confess our sins both small and great. Dean Comber.

We also invoke Him by the endearing appellation of "Father," according to the direction given us by our Lord in his prayer; thereby considering Him as the Author and Preserver of our being, and above all, as our "Father" by redemption, having "begotten us again unto a lively hope in Christ Jesus, and made us accepted in the Beloved." Waldo.

And here we may observe once for all the wisdom and piety of the Church in selecting such titles and attributes of God in the beginning of all her prayers, as are most proper for the petitions that follow them, and most likely to produce suitable affections. Such are the titles of "Almighty and most merciful Father" here prefixed to the Confession. Dr. Hole.

[s] We have erred, and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep.] It is well known that God's servants are called his sheep. Thus David says, "We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture," Ps. c. 2; and God is accordingly called a Shepherd; for instance, David says. "The Lord is my Shepherd," Ps. xxiii. 1: and our Saviour speaks of his disciples as his sheep, particularly John x. 1—5: and therefore when God's servants break his laws, and forsake the paths of his commandments, they are said to wander like sheep. Thus the Psalmist says, "I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost," Ps. cxix. 176. And the prophet says, "All we like sheep have gone astray," Isa. liii. 6: and our Saviour compares sinners to lost sheep, Matt. xv. 24: so that this expression is exactly scriptural, as well as very significant and proper. Dr. Bennet.

But to understand the full propriety of the phrase, it must be observed, that both the likelihood of straying was much greater, and the consequences of it much more fatal in open countries, full of wild beasts, as those of the east were, than in ours. And such "a great and terrible wilderness" in this sense is the world. Deut. i. 19. Abp. Secker. Alas! how frequently do we forsake the safe fold, the pure streams, and the green pasture, which God hath provided for us, and wander into a dry and barren wilderness, where we want all true comforts, and are exposed to a thousand evils! And then how fitly are these errings and strayings of ours represented by a lost sheep! Dean Comber.

Some persons here distinguish between the words "erred" and "strayed;" supposing the former to relate to sins of ignorance, infirmity, and daily occurrence; the other, to more gross violations of God's laws, more wilful forsaking of his ways, and straying in the destructive paths of sin and wickedness. Dr. Hole.

[x] We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts.] By this we understand the original corruption and depravation of our nature, which renders us too prone to evil, and averse from that which is good. Since the fall, our understanding is apt to imagine and devise evil, and our affections to lust after it. We devise false notions of evil things, and call them good, and under that false disguise we naturally desire them: but we do not charge God as the author of this corruption, but confess it springs from "our own hearts," James i. 13—15. Nor do we accuse ourselves for having, but for "following" those evil devices and desires: it is our unhappiness to have them, but that which we confess as our sin is our aptness to "follow them too much," our not checking these desires as we ought, but too often fulfilling them; and then they produce actual sins, which St. John defines to be "the transgression of God's law," 1 John iii. 4; and which we confess in the following article, "we have offended against thy holy laws." Dean Comber.

In the two first sentences of the Confession a very just and striking contrast seems to be intended: as if it were said, "We have erred and strayed from thy way," O Lord, from that way which leadeth to life eternal; and have wandered in "our own" ways, in that broad path, which leadeth to destruction. Waldo.

[u] We have offended against thy holy laws.] We cannot say but that we knew God's commands: and, although we have been so wicked as to break them, yet we must confess they are "holy, and just, and good," Rom. vii. 12; and therefore we have great reason to acknowledge with shame and sorrow our manifold breaches and violations of them. Dean Comber, Dr. Hole.

[x] We have left undone, &c.] Our breaches of God's laws consist in sins of omission and of commission: both of which are here confessed and bewailed. When we "leave undone those things which we ought to do," we offend against God's laws by sins of omission. The divine laws lay many things as duties upon us, which we are obliged to observe and do; and that with relation to God, our neighbour, and ourselves. As to God we are commanded to worship Him, by praying to Him, by hearing his word, and receiving the holy Sacrament, and the like. To men we owe the good offices of justice and charity: to ourselves, the duties of temperance, sobriety, contentedness, and the like. Now when we cast off the practice of all or any of these things, as when we neglect the worship of God, or turn our back on his word, and sacraments; when we omit the duties we are to pay our neighbour or ourselves; then do we "leave undone those things which we ought to have done," and so offend against God's holy laws by sins of omission. Again, when we "do what we ought not to do," then do we offend by sins of commission. The laws of God forbid some things, as well as command others; yea, the same law, that doth command one thing, doth always forbid the contrary to it. As the law, that requires us to worship God, forbids atheism, apostasy, blasphemy, with all other acts of irreligion and profaneness: the laws, that require honesty, truth, and fidelity in all our dealings, forbid dishonesty, lying, cheating, with all manner of falsehood and oppression: the law that commands us to be sober and temperate in all things, condemns drunkenness, luxury, and all kinds of excess. Now the not doing our duty is a sin of omission; and doing a thing forbidden, is a sin of commission; and by both we "offend against God's holy laws." Dr. Hole.

[y] And there is no health in us.] It is frequent in Scripture both to set forth the corruption and unsoundness of the mind by the maladies and distempers of the body; and to express the weakness and want of spiritual strength in the one by the natural defects and decays of the other. So that by this part of the Confession we may very well understand, first, that we are not in a state of spiritual health, but are infected by sin; and, secondly, that we cannot help, preserve, or deliver ourselves from it, and from the consequences of it: but must look somewhere else: and where that is, God Himself hath told us, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thine help," Hos. xiii. 9. Thither then we must have recourse; and thither the Church directs us. Dr. Hole, Dr. Bennet.

The words, "and there is no health in us," besides that they profess our inward frame throughout to be more or less disordered, signify too, that we have no power of our own, either to cure the spiritual diseases, of which we are already sick, or to prevent the attacks of future ones. And therefore we apply to God that He should "heal our souls," Ps. xli. 4; whom also, in the conclusion, we implicitly promise, that, whatever amendment shall be produced in us by the means which He prescribes, we will give the glory of it, not to ourselves, but to his holy name; "who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ, to the praise of the glory of his grace," Eph. i. 3. 6. Abp. Secker.

[z] But thou, O Lord, have mercy &c.] This is the commencement of the second part of the Confession, consisting of petitions, for pardon of what is past, and for grace to be preserved from sin in future. Dr. Hole. Having described the sad estate, into which we have brought ourselves by our iniquities, we are taught to look up to Him, who is able to deliver us from the guilt, as also from the punishment and the power of them. And, first, since "we are miserable sinners" by the guilt of these offences, we cry unto the Lord to "have mercy upon us," that is, to pity and pardon us, as the phrase implies, Ps. li. 1; Luke xviii. 13; for misery is the proper object of mercy, and forgivenesses peculiarly belong to God. Dean Comber.

[a] Spare thou them, O God, which confess their faults.] This relates to the removal of the punishment due to our offences. We beseech God not to inflict the penalty they deserve, but to exercise his mercy and pity in sparing us from condign punishment. And the condition, upon which we ask it, is the confession of sin: for we do not say, Spare all men indefinitely as miserable offenders, but "Spare thou them, O God, that confess their faults:" intimating our persuasion, that without confession to God we have no hopes of being spared. Dr. Hole. Not indeed that we presume to have any meritorious claim or title to his forgiveness on account of any thing we can do, much less on account of a bare confession of our sins, be it ever so sincere: we only mention this as the first step towards that thorough repentance, which is the condition absolutely required of us in order that we may obtain mercy. Waldo.

[b] Restore thou them that are penitent;] As in the former petition we prayed to be delivered from the punishment, so here we pray to be delivered from the power promises declared unto mankind in Christ Jesu our Lord[c]. And grant, O most merciful Father, for his sake[d]; That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life, To the glory of thy holy Name. Amen. Acts xi. 18. Tit. ii. 12. Phil. i. 9—11. Matt. vi. 9. Luke i. 49. 1 Cor. x. 31.

and dominion of sin. As if it were said, "Restore us, gracious Lord, to the light that sin has deprived us of, and to thy favour which we have justly forfeited by our numberless transgressions: restore the faculties of our minds, our reason, our understandings, our wills, from their present depraved state, to some degree of that perfection, for which they were originally designed: restore both our souls and bodies from being instruments of sin to be instruments of holiness, and of promoting thy glory:" not that we are to expect an entire renovation of our nature to its primitive purity in this life; but we may expect, and humbly pray for, such a change in it, as may make us "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light:" in which blessed state alone we shall be perfectly free from sin, and perfectly happy. Waldo.

[c] According to thy promises—in Christ Jesu our Lord.] For through Him alone we can have access to the Father; and all our petitions must be offered in his name, if we hope to be heard. Waldo. The favours, which the Church hath here instructed us to ask, are very great; but they are no more than God hath engaged to give to repenting sinners in the Gospel of his dear Son; there He hath assured us, we shall be forgiven, Heb. viii. 11; spared, 1 John i. 9; and restored, Matt. xi. 28, 29. Dean Comber.

[d] And grant, O most merciful Father, for his sake; &c.] This is the concluding part of the Confession, added by the Church in order to render the Confession successful; for though we acknowledge and bewail our sins, yet, without amendment, it will avail nothing to a pardon: and because we are unable of ourselves to reform our evil ways, we are to beg grace and spiritual strength, that we may be enabled to do so. Dr. Hole.

The petition is, that we may "live a godly, righteous, and sober life." For St. Paul teaches us, Tit. ii. 12, that this was the very end, why God shewed mercy to us through Christ Jesus; and it must be our endeavour, as well as our prayer, to live, first, godly, that is, exercising all piety and devotion in our services towards God: secondly, righteously, that is, in all honesty and equity, fidelity and charity, towards our neighbours: thirdly, soberly, that is, governing ourselves, and our own bodies and souls, with all temperance and moderation, humility, modesty, and charity, which is the sum of our whole duty to God and man. Dean Comber.

And the Apostle having thus summed up all practical Christianity, the Church has with great reason taken this comprehensive expression into her Liturgy: for it is impossible to comprise more sense in fewer, or better, or plainer words. Dr. Bennet.

It should be added, that this petition, we desire "our most merciful Father to grant for his Son's sake," who hath purchased a pardon for us, and promised it upon the terms of confession and amendment, which we therefore ask in his name; having told us, that He will do it for us, that his Father may be glorified, John xiv. 13; and therefore it is added in the close "to the glory of his holy name." For as by a bad life we dishonour our profession, and "blaspheme his holy name," so "by good works" we are said to "glorify our Father which is in heaven:" "For herein is my Father glorified," saith Christ, "that ye bring forth much fruit:" which fruit will redound, not only to our own good, but "to the praise and glory of God." All which we shut up and seal with "Amen" to signify our full assent and consent to it. So that we shall be condemned out of our own mouth, if we live and act contrary thereunto. Dean Comber.

Since confession of sin is a duty appointed by the Almighty, we cannot wilfully neglect it without openly violating his express command. Nor can we perform it in a careless and trifling manner, without justly incurring the charge of great inconsistency or base hypocrisy. The only way, whereby we are to judge of our conduct in this respect, so as to determine with any tolerable degree of satisfaction, whether our confession be real or only feigned, is by our present feelings and subsequent deportment. If we are anxious to be delivered both from the dominion and from the guilt of sin; and are desirous of experiencing that repentance which is unto salvation; such a frame of mind may be fairly considered as a testimony, that, when we acknowledge our sinfulness, we speak forth the words of truth and soberness. And if our future conduct be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, there cannot remain a doubt, but that the same divine Power, the same grace that hath wrought all our works in us, hath graciously accepted our confession, and mercifully pardoned our iniquity. But if we confess our sins from mere custom or formality; or arrogantly suppose, that, when we have acknowledged and professed to lament them, we may safely set out again in the career of vice; we are most awfully deceiving ourselves. It is he only that confesseth and forsaketh his sins, that shall find mercy. Rogers.

In the Confession we acknowledge our daily offences in general; and there is no means so powerful to obtain pardon for them as the daily prayers of the Church to that purpose. So that the course, which our Church here prescribeth, for the pardon of our daily offences, being put in practice, what can be more just, more due, than to declare that forgiveness and absolution, which those that are, as these profess to be, penitent for those sins, do obtain? What more comfortable than to hear the news of it from the mouth of him, by whom the Church ministereth these offices? What more seasonable than to do this before we come to give God his solemn praise and honour in our publick services, that we may be assured He accepts of the same at our hands? This solemn beginning of our Service with confession and absolution serves to put the people in mind, that all which follows is the solemn service of Almighty God, preparing them to that attention of mind, and devotion of spirit, which they owe to it, and which are requisite to make it acceptable. Bp. Cosin.

[e] The Absolution,] The penitent, having been thus humbled for his sins, doth now deserve and need some comfort. And since our Lord hath endued his ambassadors with the ministry of reconciliation, 2 Cor. v. 18, they can never have a more proper occasion to exercise it than now. Sin is compared to a bond, Acts viii. 23; Prov. v. 22, because it binds down the soul by its guilt and power, and hinders it from free converse with God, yea, makes it liable to eternal condemnation; but Jesus came to unloose these bonds, Isa. lxi. 1; and actually did so to divers, when He was upon earth, and left this power to his apostles and their successors, when He went to heaven; and this unloosing men from the bond of their sin is that, which we properly call "absolution," and it is a necessary and most comfortable part of the priest's office. Dean Comber.

The absolution is an act of authority, by virtue of a "power and commandment" of God "to his ministers," as it is in the preface of this Absolution: and as we read in St. John's Gospel, chap. xx. 22, 23, "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted." And if our confession be serious and hearty, this absolution is as effectual, as if God did pronounce it from heaven. So says the Confession of Saxony and Bohemia, and so says the Augustan Confession. St. Chrysostom, St. Augustin, and St. Cyprian, and generally all antiquity, say the same. So does our Church in many places, particularly in the form of absolution for the sick. But above all, holy Scripture is clear, as in the passage just cited from St. John. For the power of "remitting sins" was not to end with the apostles; but is a part of the ministry of reconciliation, as necessary now as it was then, and therefore to continue as long as the ministry of reconciliation, that is, to the end of the world, Eph. iv. 12, 13. When therefore the priest absolves, God absolves, if we be truly penitent. Bp. Sparrow. Our blessed Lord, in his last instructions to his apostles, as recorded by St. Matthew, bids them "go, teach all nations, &c.;" and concludes with these encouraging words, "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Here, as well as in St. John, we see a commission granted, and a promise annexed to it. The promise is that which is somewhat differently expressed in St. John's Gospel, namely, of the presence and protection of Christ by the Holy Spirit; which, He assures them in the plainest words possible, was to be perpetual: "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world;" not unto the end of their lives, but unto the end of the world. Now if the promise of divine assistance and protection made to the apostles was to extend in some degree to their successors in all after ages, so certainly was the commission likewise, to which that promise was annexed. A very material part of which commission is the power of remitting sins, or absolving, mentioned by St. John. Upon the whole, the Church of England, wisely guarding against the errors of the Church of Rome on the one hand, and against those of such as have hastily gone into the contrary extreme on the other; and appealing to Scripture for the truth of her doctrine; maintains, that some power of absolving or remitting sins, derived from the apostles, remains with their successors in the ministry; and accordingly, at the ordination of priests, the words of our Saviour, on which the power is founded, are solemnly repeated to them by the bishop, and the power at the same time conferred. We do not pretend it is in any sort a discretionary power of forgiving sins: for the priest has no discernment of the spirits and hearts of men, as the apostles had; but a power of pronouncing authoritatively, in the name of God, who has committed to the priests the "ministry of reconciliation," his pardon and forgiveness to all true penitents and sincere believers. That God alone can forgive sins, that He is the sole author of all blessings, spiritual as well as temporal, is undeniable: but that He can declare his gracious assurance of pardon and convey his blessings to us, by what means and instruments He thinks fit, is no less certain. In whatever way He vouchsafes to do it, it is our duty humbly and thankfully to receive them; not to dispute his wisdom in the choice of those means and instruments; for in that case, "he, that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God." Waldo.

¶ The Absolution[e], or Remission of sins[f], to be pronounced by the Priest alone[g], standing; the people still kneeling.

As to the words of the Absolution, some persons have apprehended it to be a very popish form. But neither it, nor the Confession which precedes, is taken out of any popish service. On the contrary, both of them appeared for the first time in the second edition of King Edward the Sixth's Common Prayer Book; which was made with the advice of foreign, and even Presbyterian Protestants. Nay, this Absolution was directly levelled against Popery. For the popish absolutions were given in private, separately to each particular person, positively and without reversion, in the name of the priest; and this is given in public, to all persons at once, conditionally, if they are truly penitent, in the name of God. The people were misled by the former absolutions to a groundless trust in sacerdotal power; and would have taken offence, if, after their confession, none had been subjoined. This therefore was drawn up to be used over them; which tends very powerfully to comfort men, but can never mislead them; because it leads them to trust only in God's mercy; and that, no otherwise, than if they "truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel," proving their sincerity by their reformation: on which terms alone He hath "given to his ministers power and commandment to pronounce to his people the absolution and remission of their sins." Abp. Secker.

[f] — or Remission of sins,] These words were added to this rubrick by order from the Conference at Hampton Court in King James the First's time, for the satisfaction of those who took exception against the word "Absolution," as being of too popish a sound. Dr. Bisse.

[g] — to be pronounced by the Priest alone,] The term used to express the priest's delivery of the Absolution is a very solemn one: for the Latin "pronuncio," whence it is taken, signifies properly to pronounce or give sentence: and therefore the word "pronounced," here used, must signify that this is a sentence of absolution or remission of sins, to be authoritatively uttered by one who has received commission from God. Wheatly.

Also, it is to be pronounced "by the priest alone:" because none has received that power but a priest. Bp. Andrewes. That is, by the priest, not only in contradistinction to the people, but likewise to the inferior order of deacons, who have no right to this power, which is annexed only to the priesthood. Dr. Hole. The Absolution is to be pronounced by virtue of the commission mentioned John xx. 23. Upon which account the Church hath not allowed this form to be pronounced by a deacon, to whom that commission is not given; but hath reserved it to the priests, who at their ordination are vested with that authority. Though therefore the word "minister" be put, both in the foregoing rubrick, before the Confession, and in that following, before the Lord's Prayer, yet in this before the Absolution, though coming just between them, the word "priest" is inserted: which was done at the last review of our Liturgy, in 1661, to distinguish and limit this power to the priest's office. Dr. Bisse. For at the Savoy conference, the Presbyterian divines, who were appointed by the king to treat with the Bishops about the alterations that were to be made in the Common Prayer, had desired, that, as the word "minister" was used in the Absolution, and in divers other places; it might also be used throughout the whole book, instead of the word "priest;" but to this the Bishops' answer was very peremptory and full; namely, "It is not reasonable the word minister should be only used in the Liturgy; for since some parts of the Liturgy may be performed by a deacon, others by none under the order of priest, namely, absolution, consecration; it is fit that some such word as priest should be used for those offices, and not minister, which signifies at large every one that ministers in the holy offices, of what order soever he be." And agreeably to this answer, when they came to make the necessary alterations in the Liturgy, they not only refused to change "priest" for "minister," but also threw out the word "minister," and put "priest" in the room of it even in this rubrick before the Absolution. So that it is undeniably plain, that by this rubrick deacons are expressly forbid to pronounce this form: since the word "priest" in this place, if interpreted according to the intent of those that inserted it, is expressly limited to one in priest's orders, and does not comprehend any minister that officiates, whether priest or deacon. Wheatly.

If farther proofs were wanting, that, according to the existing regulations of the Church of England, a deacon may not read the Absolution, the ecclesiastical commissioners, appointed in 1691 to revise the Liturgy, have furnished us with one full to the purpose. They knew that, as matters then stood, none but a priest could lawfully read the Absolution, and therefore, among other alterations, they proposed, that a rubrick should be made authorizing a deacon to read it. Their proposed alterations, it is well known, were never carried into effect, and the whole of the project was entirely abandoned. Of course the law empowering a "priest alone" to pronounce the Absolution, remains unaltered, and in full force. Shepherd.

If it be asked, what course an officiating deacon should pursue, when he comes to the Absolution? The answer appears plain. After the Confession he is to remain kneeling, and to proceed to the Lord's Prayer. If, instead of the Absolution, any prayer be admissible, the preference ought evidently to be given to the "prayer which may be said after any of the former," which stands before the prayer for the parliament. This may with propriety be called a precatory absolution. Shepherd.

It should be also observed from this rubrick, that it is an improper usurpation of the priest's office for the people to repeat this form after him, more particularly since not even a deacon is permitted to use it. The rubrick itself enjoins the contrary, directing it to be said "by the priest alone." The words of the preamble also expressly say, that "God hath given power and commandment to his ministers to declare and pronounce absolution and remission of sins," which the people, being penitent, are to receive, not to give. Farther: the difference of their posture declares the difference of their duty: the priest being appointed to pronounce it "standing," as performing an act of authority, in the capacity of God's ambassador; whilst the people are enjoined to continue "still kneeling," in token of penitence, and of that humility and reverence, with which they ought to receive the joyful news of a pardon from God. Besides; whereas the Absolution ends at the words, "unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel," and the words following "wherefore let us beseech him, &c.," quite to the end, are likewise not a prayer but an exhortation, teaching the people what to pray for; these latter words, as well as the former, do both belong to the office of "the priest alone:" so that the people ought to receive the one and to listen to the other, and by no means to repeat either after him. Dr. Bisse, Dr. Bennet.

And they should observe, that wherever in the service the congregation are not directed to speak, but the minister only, their speaking the same words low, as many persons inconsiderately do, removes only part of the impropriety, and leaves the rest. On this therefore and the like occasions let them remember, that their business is only to hearken and assent with silent reverence: of which reverence, in the present case, continuing on their knees, in token of their humble thankfulness to God, is undoubtedly a suitable expression. Abp. Secker.

The word "alone" has still a farther use: for, as it relates to the publick use of the service in the church, where it implies that the people must not in this, as in their antecedent confession, say after the minister, but leave it to be pronounced by him alone; so does it relate to the private use. For morning and evening prayer were not in their original designation intended by our Reformers, as only peculiar to church assemblies, but as well appointed for the service of God in private families. Now lest in the private exercises of piety the people or laity should ignorantly rush into the priest's office, this caution is entered by the Church, declaring that the minister alone, and no layman, ought then to officiate. L'Estrange.

[h] Almighty God, &c.] The Absolution consists of two distinct parts: first, a general declaration of the mercy of God to returning sinners, and an assurance of his pardon to us, on condition of our true faith and hearty repentance: and, secondly, an admonition to us, to implore the assistance of his Holy Spirit, in order to enable us to perform those conditions, and thereby to render this pardon effectual to our eternal salvation. Waldo.

[i] — the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,] Who hath made a full satisfaction to divine justice for all our sins. The Son hath merited our pardon: and the Father hath promised it thereupon: as his mercy therefore inclines Him, so his justice now engages Him to forgive, 1 John i. 9. Nothing now lies in our way: as He is "almighty," He is able to pardon: as He is "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," He is ever willing and ready to bestow it. Dr. Hole. The Church begins this Absolution, as the apostles do some of their epistles, by representing to us Almighty God under the character of "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ;" and in Him, "the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort," 2 Cor. i. 3. And nothing surely can be more proper for humble penitents, after having confessed their sins to God, than to consider Him as the fountain of all goodness, derived to them through the merits of his blessed Son; "knowing that the goodness of God leadeth to repentance," Rom. ii. 4. Waldo.

[k] — who desireth not the death of a sinner,] These are the words of God Himself, Ezek. xviii. 23; and for better confirmation are again repeated, chap. xxxiii. 11, and are strengthened by an oath, which He is pleased to take by his life, that is, Himself, Heb. vi. 13. Not that He needs such bonds to keep Him to his promise; but for the confirmation of our faith, and as a condescension to our infirmity. Indeed all God's words are most true, but not many have an oath annexed, as this hath; which He would not have added, but because the belief of this is the foundation of all religion, since no man can begin to seek God till he believes that God delights in mercy, Heb. xi. 6, and is willing to receive those that turn to Him. Dean Comber.

[l] — but rather that he may turn from his wickedness, and live;] Whilst we endeavour to prevent despair, we must be cautious not to encourage presumption. Lest therefore any should think, when they hear of God's kindness his Ministers, to declare and pronounce to his people, being penitent, the Absolution and Remission of their sins: he pardoneth and absolveth all them [m] that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel. Wherefore let us beseech him [n] to grant us true repentance, and his holy Spirit, that those things may please him, which we do at this present; and that the rest of our life hereafter may be pure and holy; so that at the last we may come to his eternal joy; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

to sinners, that He will allow them their sins, Rom. vi. 1; this is added to shew that He so desires our happiness as the end, that He desires our holiness as the way thither. He would have us live, namely, in eternal glory; but his desires cannot be accomplished, if we continue in our wickedness. Dean Comber.

[m] — he pardoneth and absolveth all them &c.] It is here to be noticed, that the minister does not presume to pardon or absolve in his own right, nor to publish absolution in his own name, but only in the power or name of God, saying, "He pardoneth and absolveth:" where the word "He" refers to Almighty God at the commencement of the Absolution. It is also to be noticed, that this declaration is not absolute and without limitation: it is confined to such only as "truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel." But then, as the minister pronounces pardon only to the penitent, so does he declare it to all that are so. It is not withheld from any that are qualified to receive it: but it is pronounced by authority of Almighty God "to all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel." Dr. Hole.

And here let us silently pray to God, that He will confirm, and make this declaration of his pardon effectual; which we may be assured He will do, provided we are not wanting in the conditions required on our parts, namely, faith and repentance. Waldo. These are by Christ and by his apostles made the conditions of the Gospel promises, Mark i. 15; Acts xx. 21: and without them no absolution can be had. Those, that have these, no man can condemn: but without these no man can acquit. Dean Comber.

Is it true that the Lord hath no delight in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live? Then what excuse can we frame, or how shall we be able to justify ourselves, for living another day, or another hour, in the wilful commission of sin? Again. Does the Lord pardon and absolve all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel? With what earnestness and devotion ought we to beseech Him to grant us true repentance and his Holy Spirit? Without the forgiveness of sins, our own conscience tells us we cannot be saved: and without true repentance, there is no forgiveness: nor is there any true repentance without the aid and assistance of the Holy Spirit. These truths ought to be deeply impressed on our minds. They are brought fully into our view, whenever we assemble in the house of prayer. They speak to our conscience every time we look into our Bible. And they often force themselves upon us in private. Let us beware of closing our eyes against them, and of excluding them from our hearts. Rogers.

[n] Wherefore let us beseech him &c.] After the priest has pronounced the Absolution, the Church reasonably exhorts us, to "beseech Almighty God to grant us true repentance and his Holy Spirit:" which may perhaps require explanation, considering, that we have just been professing to exercise repentance, and have been assured of God's forgiveness upon it, of which the gift of his Spirit is a consequence. But, as repentance is a necessary disposition to pardon, so that neither God will, nor man can, absolve the impenitent; so is it in some of its parts a necessary consequent of pardon. The remembrance of sin must always, though we have been pardoned, be grievous to us; which is one part of repentance. And amendment of life, and the bringing forth of fruits worthy of repentance, which is another part, is not only necessary after pardon, but is the more necessary because of pardon, by reason of the mercy and love thereby shewn to us, and the new obligation thus laid upon us to live well. The pardoned therefore had need to pray for repentance and the grace of God's Holy Spirit, the continuance of which with us depends on the continuance of our supplications for his presence, which supplications will also procure us greater degrees of it, that so both our present service and our future life may be "pleasing" to God. Bp. Sparrow, Abp. Secker.

For our encouragement the Church instructs us in conclusion, that, if we thus apply to God, and to our prayers join our own best endeavours, the result will be, first, present acceptance, secondly, future assistance, and thirdly, everlasting happiness. First, "Those things which we do at this present," our confession, absolution, prayers, praises, thanksgivings, and all the services we perform in the house of God, will be well pleasing in his sight. Secondly, Our lives hereafter, directed by the guidance of his Holy Spirit, will be pure from their former sins, and virtuous and holy. And thirdly, At the last we shall receive the reward of our faith and obedience, "his eternal joy" through the merits of our blessed Redeemer; who by his precious death has purchased for us pardon and absolution from all our sins; is now a prevailing Intercessor with the Father for the blessings we implore; and will, at his return to judge the world, receive us into those heavenly mansions, which he is gone before to prepare for every true penitent and sincere believer. Shepherd.

[o] The people shall answer here, and at the end of all other prayers, Amen.] The word here injoined to be used is originally Hebrew, and signifies the same in English as "So be it." But the word itself has been retained in all languages, to express the assent of the person that pronounces it, to that to which he returns it as an answer. As it is used in the Common Prayer, it bears different significations according to the different forms, to which it is annexed. At the end of prayers and collects, it is addressed to God, and signifies, "So be it, O Lord, as in our prayers we have expressed:" but at the end of exhortations, absolutions, and creeds, it is addressed to the priest; and then the meaning of it is, either, "So be it, this is our sense and meaning;" or "So be it, we entirely assent to and approve of what has been said." Wheatly.

This was the practice of the Jewish Church: it was also that of the Christian in the apostles' days. "How shall he, that occupieth the room of the unlearned, say Amen, at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?" 1 Cor. xiv. 16: and the subsequent ecclesiastical writers shew, that it used to be pronounced audibly and fervently; each expressing his own faith or desire, and animating that of his fellow-worshippers. We should therefore by no means neglect to give this proof, amongst others, that we, not only hear the service with attention, but join in it with earnestness. Abp. Secker.

Luke xi. 2. Lord's Prayer[p] with an audible voice[q], the people also kneeling[r], and repeating it with him, both here, and wheresoever else it is used in Divine Service.

Still it is not barely putting "Amen" to the Confession and Absolution, that can prove us either true penitents, or truly pardoned. Our hearts and lives must be in a growing state of conformity to the will of God, before we can draw any just and favourable conclusions respecting our own safety. For the Lord hath clearly revealed it, and our Church invariably speaks the same language, that none will be admitted at the last to his eternal joy, but such as have confessed and forsaken their sins, and fled for refuge and pardon to the love of God through Christ Jesus our Lord. And the more lively sense we have of the riches of his grace, the more holy shall we be in all manner of conversation. Rogers.

In our present Common Prayer Book it is observable, that the Amen is sometimes printed in one character, and sometimes in another. The reason of which I take to be this; at the end of all the collects and prayers, which the priest is to repeat or say alone, it is printed in Italick, a different character from the prayers themselves, to denote, I suppose, that the minister is to stop at the end of the prayer, and to leave the Amen for the people to respond: but at the Lord's prayer, confessions, creeds, &c., and wheresoever the people are to join aloud with the minister, as if taught and instructed by him what to say, there it is printed in the same character with the confessions and creeds themselves, as a hint to the minister that he is still to go on, and by pronouncing the Amen himself, to direct the people to do the same, and so to set their seal at last to what they had been before pronouncing.

By the people's being directed by this rubrick "to answer Amen at the end of the prayers," they might easily perceive, that they are expected to be silent in the prayers themselves, and to go along with the minister in their minds. For the minister is the appointed intercessor for the people, and consequently it is his office to offer up their prayers and praises in their behalf: insomuch that the people have nothing more to do, than to attend to what he says, and to declare their assent by an Amen at last, without disturbing those that are near them by muttering over the collects in a confused manner, as is practised by too many in most congregations, contrary to common sense as well as decency and good manners. Wheatly.

[p] Then the Minister shall kneel, and say the Lord's Prayer] Hitherto we have been preparing ourselves to pray, and now we begin with prayer, properly so called, namely, the Lord's Prayer; which, being made by Jesus, and indited by his Spirit, deserved to stand in the first place, but that we were not fit to call God "Our Father," till we had repented of our sins against Him: and, being thus prepared, we dare not omit it, because we are sure our Lord intended it, not only for a pattern to make other prayers by, when He said "After this manner pray ye," Matt. vi. 9; but as a form to be used in so many words: because, when He delivered it the second time, He says expressly, "When ye pray, say, Our Father," Luke xi. 1. Therefore St. Jerome saith, "It is recited in the Liturgy by our Lord's tradition:" St. Cyprian also, and divers other ancients, call it "the daily prayer:" and all the primitive Liturgies have it in every one of their services: so that St. Augustin tells us, "in the Church of God it is daily used at the altar;" yea, the whole congregation joined in repeating it, as our rubrick requires now: for that farther adds, "if any of you do not say this prayer, though you be present in body, you are out of the Church."

And, if we consider the style of it, we shall be convinced, that its divine Author intended it chiefly for publick assemblies, it being, as St. Cyprian speaks, "a common prayer," and all its expressions so general, "Our Father, &c." "our daily bread, &c." that every man prays for others as well as himself, and exercises his charity, as well as his devotion. The phrases and particular sentences of it are all taken out of those forms, which were in use among the Jews in our Saviour's time, to shew that He liked not unnecessary novelty in prayer; but the whole composure is truly wonderful, being so short, that the meanest may learn it; so plain, that the most ignorant may understand it; and yet so full, that it comprehends all our wants, and intimates all our duty; shewing not only what is fit to be asked, but what manner of persons we that ask ought to be; whence Tertullian calls it, "the epitome of the Gospel:" as containing, our persuasion of God's love, our desire of his honour, our subjection to his authority, our submission to his will, and our dependence on his providence; our need of his mercy to pardon former offences, and of his grace to keep us from future sin, and of both, to deliver us from the punishment due unto them all; concluding with acts of faith, and praise, and adoration. And being drawn up by our glorious Advocate, who knew his Father's treasures as well as our wants, it is certainly the most complete in itself, the most acceptable to God, and the most useful to us, of any form in the world; for which cause it ought to be united to all our offices, to make up their defects, and recommend them to our heavenly Father, who cannot deny us, when we speak the very same words which his dear Son hath put in our mouths, if we use them with understanding and devotion. Dean Comber.

The Church of Christ did use to begin and end her services with the Lord's Prayer. This being the foundation, upon which all other prayers should be built, therefore, saith Tertullian, we begin with it; that so the right foundation being laid, we may justly proceed to our ensuing requests. And it being the perfection of all prayer, therefore, saith St. Augustin, we conclude our prayers with it. Let no man therefore quarrel with the Church's frequent use of the Lord's Prayer: for the Church catholick ever did the same. Besides, as St. Cyprian observes, if we hope to have our prayers accepted of the Father only for his Son's sake, why should we not hope to have them most speedily accepted, when they are offered up in his Son's own words? Bp. Sparrow, Dr. Hole.

What part of the world soever we fall into, if Christian religion have been there received, the ordinary use of this very Prayer hath with equal continuance accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Jesus Christ. Though men should speak with the tongues of angels, yet words so pleasing to the ears of God, as those which the Son of God Himself hath composed, were not possible for men to frame. He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end that, speaking unto the Father in his Son's own prescript form, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will either disallow or deny. Hooker.

In conformity with the foregoing sentiments, it may be observed here once for all, that the Lord's Prayer may be placed at the beginning, or at the close, of any office or part of worship, with great propriety and advantage. For, when we begin with it, as after the Creed, and in the Communion service, it, being perfect in its comprehension, presents to us at once all that we are about to pray for in the following petitions. Besides, having proceeded from the sacred lips of our Lord God, it hallows and consecrates all our other prayers, which must all grow out of this. On the other hand, when we close with it, as after the Litany, it being a summary recollection of all our foregoing requests, if we have through infirmity or negligence been wandering in the larger forms, we may now double our earnestness in this divine compendium. Accordingly the Church hath always shewn that deference to this Prayer, that she hath inserted it in every distinct office of the whole Liturgy: to this end, that by its perfection she might supply the defects, and atone for the infirmities, of her own composures. And it being added in this place after the Confession and Absolution, makes the whole, as it were, a short distinct office, which is now followed by one of another kind; namely, that of thanksgiving. What has been done hitherto has been penitential: it now opens into eucharistical. Dr. Bisse.

OUR Father[s], which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven.

The service began with the Lord's Prayer in the first book of King Edward the Sixth. But our Reformers at the review of it, in 1551, added the Sentences, Exhortation, Confession, and Absolution, as judging it perhaps not so becoming in us to call God "Our Father," before we have repented of our disobedience against Him, and asked pardon for our sins. Wheatly, Dr. Bisse. But it is a very proper time to address God in that form which our Saviour taught his disciples, when we have approved ourselves his real disciples by repentance of sins, and faith in the Gospel-offers of mercy. Abp. Secker. Most justly therefore has our Church enjoined the use of it in this and other places, as the badge of our discipleship. Most justly also doth she injoin the people at all times to repeat it together with the minister: for by so doing they declare themselves our Lord's disciples, imitating at the same time the ancient practice, when the whole congregation vocally pronounced it all together. Dr. Bennet.

Confession of sin, strengthened by absolution, thus appearing to be the main ground of publick worship, upon which the acceptableness of the following service regularly depends; this should be one among many reasons for inducing us to give all diligence to come to church before the Confession; otherwise we lose the great benefit of absolution. For though there be other short confessions of sin, as in the Litany, yet there is appointed no other absolution. Dr. Bisse.

It is a matter of just lamentation, that many, who profess to attend religious worship, come into church so late after the beginning of divine service, as not only to lose the opportunity of joining in these preparations themselves, but frequently to disturb and incommode those who have already engaged in them. Rogers.

It has by some been thought, that the people are not to repeat the Lord's Prayer with the minister in the Communion office. But the words "both here, and wheresoever else it is used in divine service," added to the rubrick at the last review, contain a plain general direction, which a thousand repetitions could not have made more express. Shepherd.

[q] —with an audible voice,] The Lord's Prayer is ordered to be said by the minister "with an audible," or, as in the former rubrick, "with a loud voice," chiefly, it seems, as a corrective of the practice of the Church of Rome, by which it is appointed to be said secretly or mentally. Another reason is, that ignorant persons might the sooner learn it: and that all the congregation might the better hear and join with the minister in that most excellent part of divine worship. Dr. Bisse, L'Estrange.

Till the last review there was no such direction: it having been the custom till then, for the minister to say the Lord's Prayer alone, in most of the offices, and for the people only to answer at the end of it, by way of response, "Deliver us from evil." And the better to prepare and give them notice of what they were to do, the minister was to elevate and raise his voice, when he came to the petition, "Lead us not into temptation," just as it is done still in the Roman Church; where the priests always pronounces the conclusion of every prayer with a voice louder than ordinary, that the people may know when to join their Amen. Wheatly.

It was however an ancient custom of the Church for the Lord's Prayer to be repeated with a loud voice. Dr. Nicholls.

[r] —the people also kneeling,] See page 7, note q, before the general Confession. That kneeling was a posture of religious worship or prayer to Almighty God amongst the Jews in the most ancient times, is evident from several passages in Scripture. In this posture Solomon prayed at the dedication of the temple, 1 Kings viii. 54; 2 Chron. vi. 13. The same posture Daniel used in his devotions, Dan. vi. 10. And Isaiah describes the worship of God by an expression derived from the same posture, Isa. xlv. 23. The same religious posture was used by our blessed Lord Himself, Luke xxii. 41. The same by his apostles, and by other holy men amongst the first Christians: by St. Paul, Acts xx. 36; by St. Stephen, Acts vii. 60; by St. Peter, Acts ix. 40. And St. Paul expresses prayer, as Isaiah did, by the usual posture which accompanied it, Eph. iii. 14. The same posture was generally observed by the Christians of the first ages both in their publick and in their private devotions. Dr. Nicholls. The same observance of bodily worship practised by the Church on earth is also represented as the practice of the Church triumphant in heaven, Rev. vii. 11. And thus at our confessions of sin and at our prayers we present ourselves before God on our knees, by order of our Church, according to the example of our Saviour and of the Church of God. Abp. King.

[s] Our Father, &c.] The Lord's Prayer consists of three parts. First, a preface, expressing the goodness and greatness of Him to whom we pray. Secondly, seven petitions, which by many learned persons are accounted but six, the two last being reckoned as one, because they nearly relate to one another. Of these the first three concern God's glory; namely, the honour of his name, the advancement of his authority, and the fulfilling of his will: and the four last concern our own good; being offered for temporal supplies, for remission of sins past, for prevention of future sins, and for deliverance from evils and miseries, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. Thirdly, a doxology ascribing to God dominion and might, mercy and praise. Clutterbuck.

Paraphrase on the Lord's Prayer. We address ourselves to Thee, O God, who by thy creation art the Father of us and all mankind, but art the particular Father of us Christians by adoption, Rom. viii. 15. Putting up our petitions to Thee the great God, whose throne and place of especial residence is the highest

Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom[t], The power, and the glory, For ever and ever. Amen.

heaven, Isa. lxvi. 1; Matt. xvi. 17. We do desire and will endeavour, that thy name, Exod. xx. 7, and whatsoever belongs to Thee, may be hallowed, and kept free from all manner of contempt; and also be honoured by distinguishing marks of esteem. We likewise earnestly desire, and long for, the time, when thy kingdom of glory shall begin, which flesh and blood cannot inherit, 1 Cor. xv. 50; and into which the blessed of the Father are to enter, Matt. xxv. 34. We pray farther that we Christians here upon earth may perform the will of God, Mark iii. 35; Eph. v. 10; Rom. xii. 2; manifested to us by the preaching of the Gospel, with as much readiness and exactness as the angels of heaven perform it, Ps. ciii. 21; Matt. xviii. 10. We enlarge our petitions to beg a sufficiency of bread, 1 Tim. vi. 8; that is, food, raiment, and other necessaries of life, in such proportions as God is pleased to deal it out to us; beseeching Thee to forgive our sins, great and small, both of which make us liable to God's eternal vengeance, Matt. xii. 36; 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; as we on our parts own, that we freely forgive all that have offended against us, knowing that God will pardon our sins upon no other condition, Matt. vi. 15. Lastly, we desire of Thee that Thou wouldst be pleased to hinder any strong temptation from being laid in our way, which it is not likely we shall have the power to overcome, Matt. xxvi. 41: or if it be, give us such a powerful assistance of thy grace, as may enable us to overcome it, 2 Cor. xii. 9. But deliver us from all evil, as well that of sin, Eph. ii. 1; Heb. x. 12, as that of misfortune, Ps. cvii. 41; Acts vii. 10; and as that arising from the malice of evil spirits, Job i. 6. 8; Rev. xii. 8. And these blessings we trust Thou wilt grant us, thy adorable perfections giving us encouragement to expect them from Thee; for thine is the kingdom and sovereign dominion over all things, and Thou hast no one to controul Thee, 1 Chron. xxix. 11; Jude 25; that art endowed with infinite power, and hast nothing to withstand Thee, Job xxxviii. 11; Ps. lxv. 7; and thine own glory is manifested in making us happy. Dr. Nicholls.

It is the case with this, as with all other prayers, that we must not expect God to listen to it, unless our life be in agreement with the matter of our petitions. It may here therefore be useful to observe, that every particular sentence and petition of the Lord's Prayer carries with it a corresponding duty. Thus when we address Almighty God as "Our Father," we are reminded to shew Him that honour, which is his due; and to treat all men as our brethren, with kindness and brotherly love: and when we address Him as peculiarly being in heaven, we are reminded of his infinite greatness, and of our own lowliness in comparison of Him, "whose seat is in heaven, and whose kingdom ruleth over all," Ps. xi. 4; ciii. 19. The first petition, wherein we pray that "his name may be hallowed," teaches us, not to bring any dishonour upon it by our conduct, nor to treat it profanely or lightly, but to cause it to be glorified by the sincerity of our worship, and the goodness of our behaviour. By the second petition, which prays that God's "kingdom may come," we are taught, to live ourselves, and to encourage others in living, a holy life; that we may be worthy subjects of his kingdom on earth, and may be continually more fit, through our Saviour's merits, to enter into his heavenly kingdom. From the petition that God's "will may be done," we should learn, to be diligent in doing his will; both by performing what He commands, and by abstaining from what He forbids; and, as far as we may be able, by causing his will to be done by others. As we pray God to "give us our daily bread," it should be our constant practice to use those means, which He hath appointed, for procuring it, industriously and contentedly; and we should upon no account accept it from the devil, which we do, if we employ any dishonest means for bettering our condition. From the petition that God will "forgive us our trespasses," results the duty of repenting of them and forsaking them, together with that of forgiving "those who trespass against us." By the petition that God will not "lead us into temptation," but will "deliver us from evil," we are taught to struggle against every temptation, that we may meet with; to resist the first motion or inclination to commit sin; and, above all, not to live in the practice of any thing which we know to be evil. Lastly, by the doxology in the conclusion of the prayer we are taught, to entertain a due reverence for that perfect Being, to whom belong "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory;" who "heareth not sinners," John ix. 31; but who heareth those who "worship him in spirit and in truth," John iv. 23; namely, those who worship Him with their hearts, and with the offering of a holy life. Edit.

[t] For thine is the kingdom, &c.] We conclude with the doxology, or form of giving praise to God, which is contained in St. Matthew's Gospel, vi. 13, and is expounded by the Greek Fathers, and therefore used by us here: but since it is left out by St. Luke's Gospel, xi. 4, and by most of the Latin Fathers, therefore we omit it sometimes, when the office is not matter of praise, as it is here after the Absolution. Dean Comber. It was appointed to be used in this place at the last review of the Common Prayer Book. Wheatly.

[u] Then likewise he shall say, &c.] Having presumed in the foregoing solemn words to claim God for our Father through Christ, we now proceed to vent the joy and thankfulness belonging to such a privilege, which is the second part of our publick service, as it was in the ancient Church; where St. Basil informs us, the people, after confession, rose from prayer, and went on to psalmody. But to make the transition more natural and beneficial, we first beg, that God would permit and assist us, unworthy as we are, to pay Him this homage. And this we do in the short sentences which follow. Abp. Secker.

It was a very ancient practice of the Jews to recite their publick hymns and prayers by course, and many of the Fathers assure us that the primitive Christians imitated them therein: so that there is no old liturgy, which does not contain such short and devout sentences as these, wherein the people answer the priest, and which are therefore called "Responses." This primitive usage, which is now excluded not only from popish assemblies by their praying in an unknown tongue, but also from those of our protestant dissenters by the device of a long extempore prayer, is still maintained in the Church of England; which allows the people their ancient right of bearing part in the service for these good reasons: First, hereby the consent of the congregation to what we pray for is declared; and it is this unity of mind and voice, and this agreement in prayer, which hath the promise of prevailing, Rom. xv. 6; Matt. xviii. 19. Secondly, this grateful variety and different manner of address serves to quicken the people's devotion. Thirdly, it engages their attention, which is apt to wander, especially in sacred things; and, since they have a duty to perform, causes them to be expectant and ready to perform it. Let all those then, who attend the publick service, gratefully embrace the privilege which the Church allows them, and make their responses gravely and with an audible voice. Dean Comber.

Answer. And our mouth shall shew forth thy praise[y]. Ps. li. 15.

Priest. O God, make speed to save us.

But it must be remembered, both here and elsewhere, when our prayers to God are divided into such small portions as we call "versicles," that the people are to join mentally in that part which the minister utters, as well as in that which they are directed to pronounce themselves. And so the minister in like manner must join in what the people utter, as well as in his own part. For otherwise they do not join in prayer. Besides, if this be not done, we shall frequently offer to God that which has but an imperfect sense. For instance, in this place, these words, "and our mouth shall shew forth thy praise," do so manifestly depend upon what the minister spake just before, that the sense of the one is not perfect without the other. It is true, the Church requires, that the minister shall say the one, and the people the other portion; that is, the one portion shall be vocally uttered by the minister, and the other portion shall be vocally uttered by the people, alternately and by way of responses; but yet both the minister and the people ought mentally to offer, and to speak to God, what is vocally offered and spoken by the other party respectively, for the reasons already given. And, that both the minister and the congregation may be the better able to do this, they should respectively take care, that they do not confound and disturb each other by beginning their several portions too soon. The minister's first versicle should be finished, before the people utter a word of the second; and the people should have time enough to finish the second, before the minister begins the third, &c.: so that both the minister and people may have time enough deliberately to offer every portion, and make, all of them together, one continued act of devotion. The same rule must be observed in all those psalms and hymns, which are used alternately. Dr. Bennet.

[y] O Lord, open thou our lips. &c.] The responses here prescribed consist of prayers and praises: the two first are prayers taken out of David's psalms, the great storehouse of primitive devotion. The first is from Ps. li. 15. This sentence is very frequent in ancient liturgies, particularly in those of St. James and St. Chrysostom; and it is fitly placed here, with respect to those sins we lately confessed, for it is part of David's penitential Psalm, who had looked on his guilt so long, till shame, and grief, and the fear of punishment which followed thereupon, had almost sealed up his lips and made him speechless; so that he could not praise God as he desired, unless it pleased God, by speaking peace to his soul, to remove those terrors, and then his lips would be opened and his mouth ready to praise the Lord. And, if we be fully sensible of our guilt, as we ought to be, it will be necessary for us to beg such evidences of our pardon, as may free us from the terrors which seal up our lips, and then we shall be fit to praise God heartily in the Psalms which follow.

The second is from Ps. lxx. 1; and xl. 13: "O God, make speed, &c." this also is of ancient use in the Western Church; and it is the paraphrase of that remarkable supplication, namely "Hosannah," which signifies, "Save, now, Lord, we beseech thee," Ps. cxviii. 25. When with David, xl. 12, we look back to those innumerable evils, that have taken hold of us, we cry to God to save us speedily from them by his mercy; and when we look forward to the duties we are about to do, we pray as earnestly that He will make haste to help us by his grace, without which we cannot do any acceptable service; both which are necessary for us just now; and that is the reason why we are so importunate for a speedy answer.

The other two responses are acts of praise. Upon supposition, that our pardon is granted, we rise up with joy to sing. First, "Glory be to the Father," &c.: which excellent hymn, though it be not the very words of Scripture, yet it is a paraphrase upon the song of the Seraphim, "Holy, Holy, Holy," Isa. vi. 3; and gives equal worship to every Person of the Trinity, because each Person is very God, 1 John v. 7. It was a custom from the beginning of Christianity, as the Fathers shew, to "give glory to the only Father, with the Son and the Holy Ghost;" which orthodox form the Arian hereticks attempted to change into "Glory be to the Father, by the Son, and in the Holy Ghost:" whereupon the Church enlarged the old form, and annexed it to their Liturgies in this form, "Glory be to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, now and ever, world without end:" and so the Greek Church now uses it; to which the Western Church added, in a council, in the year of our Lord 442, "As it was in the beginning," to shew this was the primitive faith, and the old orthodox way of praising God. And to this very day it serves for these two uses. First, as a shorter creed and confession of our believing in three Persons and one God, whereby we both declare ourselves to be in the communion of the Catholick Church, and also renounce all hereticks, who deny this great and distinguishing article of our faith. Secondly, it serves for a hymn of praise; by which we magnify the Father for our creation, the Son for our redemption, and the Holy Ghost for our sanctification; and to quicken us herein, we declare it was so "in the beginning," for the angels sang the praises of the Trinity in the morning of the creation, Job xxxviii. 7; the patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, saints and martyrs, did thus worship God from the beginning; the whole Church militant and triumphant doth it now, and shall do it for ever, not only in this world, but in that which is without end. Let us therefore with great devotion join with this blessed company in so good a work, and give glory to the Father who granted our pardon, to the Son who purchased it, and to the Holy Ghost who sealed it. Let every Person of the glorious Trinity have due praise; and, as God is not weary with repeating his blessings, let us never be weary in repeating this hymn, but in psalms, litanies, or wherever we find it, let us say it with a fresh sense of God's infinite love, for He justly deserves our most hearty praises: Amen.

Secondly; "Praise ye the Lord," &c.; which is no other but the English of "Hallelujah," a word so sacred that St. John retains it, Rev. xix. 1. 3, 4. 6; and St. Augustin saith, the Church of old scrupled to translate it. The use of it is frequent in the Psalms, being the title to, and the conclusion of, many of them: particularly of six psalms, which were the Paschal hymn, and called the great Hallelujah, Ps. cxiii.—cxviii. And among the Christians it was so usual to sing Hallelujah, that St.

Jerome saith little children were acquainted with it. The solemn times of singing it among divers Churches were different; but it was used every where on the Lord's day; and among us it is used every day, and placed here, first, as a return to the Gloria Patri, for in that we worship the Trinity, as we do the unity in this: secondly, as a triumphant hymn upon the joyful news of our absolution, and the overthrow of our spiritual enemies, for which saith the priest to the people, "Praise ye the Lord," and they readily obey him, replying, "The Lord's name be praised." Thirdly, it is a proper preface to the Psalms, called in the Hebrew, "The Book of Praises." The office hath been thus far penitential, and now it becomes eucharistical; what more proper introduction can there be than this Hallelujah? Dean Comber.

[y] And our mouth sholl shew forth thy praise.] This is the answer of all the people. And by making this answer they promise here and undertake for themselves, that they will not sit still to hear the psalms and hymns read only to them, as matter of their instruction; but that they will bear a part in them with the priest, and keep up the old custom still of singing, and answering verse by verse, as being specially appointed for the setting forth of God's praise; whereunto they are presently invited again by the minister in these words, "Praise ye the Lord." So that our manner of singing by sides, or all together, or in several parts, or in the people's answering the priest in repeating the psalms and hymns, is here grounded. But if the minister say alone, in vain was it for God's people to promise God, and to say, that their mouth also should shew forth his praise. Bp. Cosin.

If we were to enter into this part of our devotional exercises as we ought to do, it would spiritualize our joy, and help us, both in heart and voice, to glorify our Father which is in heaven. If we do not enter into it as we ought to do, it is because we often come before the divine presence without thought and without reflexion. We think not of his hand, nor consider the glory of his majesty. We forget our own spiritual necessities, and are therefore regardless of his inexhaustible treasures. And, when we are within the walls of his house, and professedly engaged in his service, we too frequently suffer our thoughts to rove, and our hearts to wander after things that cannot profit. It is not designed that our praises and thanksgivings should be expressed in a noisy and boisterous style; far from it. But that sincerity of heart, and a zeal according to knowledge, should be exercised by every worshipper, who would praise God with acceptance. Rogers.

[z] — all standing up,] It was the practice of the primitive Church to perform those parts of the publick service, which were not celebrated kneeling, in the posture of standing: for this was another way of respectful worship paid to Almighty God in the acts of prayer and thanksgiving, used anciently in the Jewish Church, and thence derived to the Christian. See Mark xi. 25; Luke xviii. 11. 13. Dr. Nicholls.

Standing is certainly a very proper posture for the praises of God. For every body not only hears them, but ought to bear a part therein. Now though sitting may be allowed when we only hear, as whilst the Lessons, &c. are read; yet, since in praises every member of the congregation is not barely passive, but also active and employed; therefore such a posture becomes them, as betokens their being concerned in that part of worship. And it is notorious, that their standing up together looks as if they had something to do themselves, and that they were not merely attending to others.

But besides, in the use of David's Psalms diverse such passages do very frequently occur, as every good Christian may, and therefore should, personally address and speak to God. Those divine compositions are every where full of the most pious breathings, the most devout and pathetical ejaculations; and a well-disposed person cannot forbear lifting up his heart in those expressions, and adopting them for his own prayers. Now kneeling is not a proper posture for such parts of the Psalms as are not directed to God: and sitting is a most indecent posture for such parts thereof as are directed to Him, as all sober Christians do confess: but standing does tolerably well suit both parts, though it is not the very best for one of them. And therefore since both these parts, namely, those which are, and those which are not, directed to God, are so commonly, and so suddenly, altered, mingled, and interwoven the one with the other, that the most suitable postures for each of them cannot be always used; certainly that one posture, which best suits with both together, ought always to be preferred.

It should be added, that the minister ought not to begin the Doxology in this place too soon, for fear the people should be hurried, and not have time enough to rise from their knees, and join mentally with him in the former part thereof. Dr. Bennet.

[a] Then shall be said or sung this Psalm] The Church orders this and the other psalms to be either said or sung, as the people are best able to offer them; not being willing to lay a greater restraint upon them than the Scripture has done, in which we have examples for both these ways of praising God. Thus the praises of God were celebrated in the Jewish Church by "singing," 2 Chron. xxix. 30; and afterwards in the Christian Church, as appears from the language of St. Paul, Eph. v. 19; Col. iii. 16. And, not to insist on those places which seem to require us to "say psalms," such as Ps. cxviii. 2, Bible translation, we find in Scripture several sacred hymns, particularly of Hannah, the blessed Virgin, Zacharias, and Simeon, and the saints in heaven, Rev. vii. 12; xi. 17, which are related to have been "said" by them respectively; and the circumstances in the story do not make it probable that they were sung. Abp. King.

The words "sung or said," every where signify the same as "minister and people." The word, "sung," relates to a hymn in parts; as in choir service, one side "singing" one verse, and the other another: and the word, "said," relates only to the parochial service. Collis.

[b] — this Psalm following:] This Psalm is called in the Latin service "The Invitatory psalm." Some have mistaken, and supposed the first verse of it to be the Invitatorium; which was a select text of Scripture, which another Anthem[d] is appointed; and on the Nineteenth day of every Month it is not to be read here, but in the ordinary Course of the Psalms.

generally adapted to the day, and used just before this psalm, and frequently repeated in the course of it: but our Reformers, judging this to be a vain tautology, thought fit to omit it, appointing the psalm to be used without the invitatory. Dr. Nicholls, L'Estrange.

This is an invitatory psalm; for herein we do mutually invite and call upon one another, being come before his presence, to sing to the Lord, to set forth his praises, to hear his voice, as with joy and cheerfulness, so with that reverence that becomes his infinite Majesty, worshipping, falling down, and kneeling before Him, using all humble behaviour in each part of his service and worship prescribed to us by his Church. And needful it is that the Church should call upon us for this duty; for most of us forget the Psalmist's counsel, Ps. xcvi. 8, 9, "To ascribe unto the Lord the honour due unto his name." Unto his courts we come before the presence of the Lord of the whole earth, and forget to "worship him in the beauty of holiness." Bp. Sparrow.

This psalm, containing directions and exhortations to prayer, to praise God, and to hear his holy word, is a very proper preparatory for the following duties, and the matter of it shews it was designed at first for the publick service, on the feast of tabernacles, as some think, or on the sabbath-day, as others say: but St. Paul judges it fit for every day, while it is called to day, Heb. iii. 15: and so it hath been used in all the Christian world, as the Liturgy of St. Basil testifies for the Greek Church; the testimony of St. Augustin witnesses for the African Church; and for the Western Church, all its ancient offices retain it, and in the capitulars it is called the invitatory psalm; yea, the very Jewish doctors have confessed it belongs to the times of Messiah, and therefore our Reformers did very prudently place it here, before the psalms, collects, and lessons. It contains a threefold exhortation; first, to praise God; shewing, 1, the manner how, namely, externally and internally, ver. 1, 2; and, 2, the reason why, namely, because of his infinite greatness, ver. 3, and his mighty power, declared by his providence over all, ver. 4, and his creating of all, ver. 5. The second exhortation is to pray to this mighty God; as to the manner, very humbly, ver. 6; giving the reason for it, because it is his due from us, ver. 7. The third exhortation is to hear his word; directing us to the manner, namely, speedily, willingly, and with tender hearts, ver. 8; and warning us by the example of the Jews, whose sin is set before us, ver. 9, and their punishments, ver. 10 and 11; that we may not destroy our souls, by despising and distrusting God's word as they did. Dean Comber.

It is a pleasing sight, a cause of real joy, to every one that has any regard for the honour of God and the welfare of immortal souls, to see numbers resorting to the house of prayer, for the solemn purpose of divine worship. And this pleasure is greatly heightened by seeing them, when assembled, zealously complying with this exhortation: uniting, as with one heart and one voice, in the most lively and affectionate manner, to praise the God of their life, and to make their cheerful acknowledgments to the Author of all their blessings. To be present in a numerous congregation, devoutly engaged in celebrating the goodness and loving-kindness of the Lord, is calculated to give us a more affecting idea of the blessedness of heaven, than any other scene in the present world. "O come then, let us sing unto the Lord;" and let us not be satisfied with doing this merely with our lips: but "let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation" Rogers.

[c] —except on Easter-Day,] See the note on the service for that day among the collects, &c.

[d] —another Anthem] An anthem is supposed to come from Antiphon, and to signify an hymn, sung in parts or alternately: and in this sense the invitatory psalm is here called "an anthem;" for so much is implied in the direction, that for Easter-day "another Anthem" is appointed. Dr. Bisse.

As the Scriptures prescribe us the use of psalms in the praises of God, so they encourage us to offer those praises by way of responses, or answering. For this we have the best example that can be desired, even the blessed angels and glorified saints. So in Isaiah, vi. 3, "And one cried unto another, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts." And the Church triumphant through the whole Revelation, is, I think, constantly represented praising God after this manner. See chap. vii. 9, 10. 12; xix. 1—6. I make no question but this is taken by allusion from the manner of the Church's praising God on earth: and it is agreeable to St. Paul's command of "teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, &c.;" which supposes every one to have a share in them, either by turns, or by bearing a part. This way of praising God by answering one another is the most ancient we find in Scripture: for thus Miriam praised God, Exod. xv. 21: and the last song recorded in Scripture is of the same sort, Rev. xix. as before mentioned. According to these Scripture examples the people are allowed to bear their part in the Psalms, and either to sing or say them by way of answering. Abp. King.

Some of our dissenting brethren have thought, and so have some papists, that dividing this, and other parts of the service, as we do, between the priest and the congregation; and allowing the latter to make responses, or answers; is permitting, not only laymen, but even women, against an express prohibition of Scripture, to encroach on the ministerial office, makes a disagreeable confused noise, and hinders many from understanding what is said. But surely the office of the minister is sufficiently distinguished, as he presides and leads, throughout the service. And why should not the people be suffered to follow him, and bear some part with their voices in praying, as well as the main part in singing? Not to say, that the principal article, in which they do bear a part, is the "Psalms" for the day, which were designed to be sung, where it could be done conveniently. No Scripture forbids the congregation to bear a part: that which forbids women to speak in the Church, 1 Cor. xiv. 35, means only to forbid their giving instruction, or entering into questions or disputations there. And St. Paul commands us to "speak to one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs," Eph. v. 19. Accordingly the primitive Christians are known to have used this alternate manner in their publick prayers and praises. And though, when the psalms and hymns are spoken thus, and not sung, there is nothing harmonious in the sound, yet St. John describes the worship of the blessed above by the "voice of many waters and of a great thunder," Rev. xiv. 2; which is no unfit comparison for the united answers of a large congregation. As to the other part of the objection, this method in reality creates no confusion or difficulty at all. A very little practice will render it easy to any one that can read: even they, who cannot read, may join in it, by attending to those near them, or to the clerk; it makes a grateful variety, keeps attention awake, and enlivens devotion. Venite, exultemus Domino[e]. Ps. xcv.

O Come, let us sing[f] unto the Lord: let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation.

Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving: and shew ourselves glad in him with Psalms.

For the Lord is a great God: and a great King above all gods.

In his hand are all the corners of the earth: and the strength of the hills is his also.

The sea is his, and he made it: and his hands prepared the dry land.

O come, let us worship, and fall down: and kneel before the Lord our Maker.

For he is the Lord our God: and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand.

To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts: as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness;

When your fathers tempted me: proved me, and saw my works.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, and said: It is a people that do err in their hearts, for they have not known my ways.

Unto whom I sware in my wrath: that they should not enter into my rest.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

manner then we glorify God: beginning always with the 95th Psalm, as the whole Christian Church did in early ages, and as the nature of the Psalm recommends to us: it being a distinct invitation to the several duties of praise, prayer, and hearing, with an awful warning of the danger of neglecting God, drawn from his judgments on the disobedient Jews, unto whom "these things happened for ensamples, and they are written for our admonition," 1 Cor. x. 11. Abp. Secker.

[e] Venite, exultemus Domino.] These are the words at the beginning of the Latin version, answering to "O come, let us sing unto the Lord:" from them the Psalm is sometimes called "the Venite," or "the Venite exultemus."

[f] O come, let us sing &c.] The general purport of this psalm has been already stated. With respect to some particular phrases in it, we may remark, that when we call God in it "the strength of our salvation," we mean, that by his power alone we can be saved from present and future evils. When we call Him "a great King above all gods:" we mean, above all that have ever had that name ascribed to them: the princes of the nations; the false deities of the heathen; Satan, "the god of this world," 2 Cor. iv. 4; and the holy angels in heaven. When we say, that "in his hand are all the corners of the earth, and the strength of the hills is his also," we mean, that his presence and his influence extend to the remotest and most inaccessible places; and there is none, where he cannot deliver or punish. When we call ourselves "the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand;" we own our Maker to be likewise our Preserver, Supporter, and Director; who feeds our souls by his word and his grace, as well as our bodies with daily bread, and guides us mercifully through this world to a better. "To day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts," is an affecting and alarming exhortation, that if we design ever to become his servants in earnest, we should hearken immediately to his continual calls; else, through a habit of disobedience, our minds may grow callous, and "past feeling," Eph. iv. 19. The words "when your fathers tempted me," which are put into the month of God Himself, the "Jews," for whom first this psalm was composed, were to understand literally, of their fathers according to the flesh. But we are to take them of those, who have gone before us in the profession of religion; and whom we are not to resemble in "tempting and proving" God, that is, doubting, and putting to unreasonable trials, his omnipotence, his goodness, and truth: lest, as the unbelieving "Jews" died in the wilderness, and so were excluded from the temporal rest, which otherwise they would have enjoyed in the land of Canaan, we also be excluded from what it prefigured, that eternal rest, which "remains for the people of God" in heaven. Abp. Secker.

[g] Then shall follow the Psalms &c.] The book of Psalms is a collection of praises and prayers indited by the Spirit, composed by holy men on various occasions, and admirably suited to publick worship. They contain variety of devotions agreeable to all degrees and conditions of men, so that, without much difficulty, every man may apply them to his own case, either directly or by way of accommodation; for which cause, the Church useth these oftener than any other part of the Scripture. It is certain, the temple service consisted chiefly of forms taken out of this book of Psalms, 1 Chron. xvi. 1. 7—37; 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2; and the prayers of the modern Jews are also most chiefly gathered from thence. The Christians undoubtedly used them in their publick service in the apostles' times, 1 Cor. xiv. 26; Col. iii. 16; and in the following ages it is plain, that they sang the Psalms in the church by turns, each side answering the other: indeed it appears the Psalms were placed about the beginning of the prayers, soon after the Confession; and that they were so often repeated at church, that the poorest Christians could say them by heart, and used to sing them at their labours, in their houses, and in the fields. The author of them, holy David, first set them to vocal and instrumental musick; and pious antiquity did use them in their assemblies with musick also; and so we may very fitly do, where we have convenience, for this makes our churches the very emblem of the heavenly choir, which is always represented as praising God in this manner: and experience shews, that musick works very much on the affections of well-tempered men; it calms their minds; composes their thoughts; excites their devotion; and fills their soul with a mighty pleasure, while they thus set forth his praise.

The Church having thus fitted the Psalms for daily use, it is our duty to say or sing them with great devotion; and, if we have performed the foregoing parts of the Liturgy as we ought, nothing can fit us better to sing David's Psalms with David's spirit; for all that hath been done hitherto was to tune our hearts, that we may say, "O God, my heart is ready," or "fixed, I will sing and give praise," Ps. cviii. 1. And, as St. Basil notes, this frame of spirit is more necessary in the use of the Psalms, than of any other part of Scripture, the rest being only read to us, but every man is to repeat these as his own words. Dean Comber.

For more concerning the Psalms, see the notes introductory to that division of the Common Prayer Book.

As it is so primitive and useful an order to have the Psalms thus read; and as this "Psalter" is an entire body of devotion, having different forms, to exercise several graces, by way of internal act and spiritual intentions, containing in it, confessions, thanksgivings, prayers, praises, and intercessions; let every one be sure to do it standing, sitting being only allowed, whilst the Lessons or the Epistle is reading. Collis.

[h] — at the end of every Psalm &c.] We are directed to praise, glorify, and confess to God every day in a certain number of Psalms of his own appointment, out of the Old Testament; and then in such hymns as are recorded in the New. But inasmuch as the mystery of the holy Trinity is more explicitly revealed to us under the Gospel, than it was to those under the Law, therefore our Church requires us to annex to every psalm and hymn "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be;" to signify our belief, that the same God was worshipped by them as by us; the same God, that is glorified in the Psalms, having been from the beginning "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," as well as now. So that our ascribing this glory expressly to the three Persons, in whose name we are baptized, is not any real addition to the Psalms, but is a necessary expedient for turning the Jewish Psalms into Christian hymns, and so fitting them for the use of the Church now, as they were before for the use of the synagogue. Abp. King.

Touching the hymn of glory, our usual conclusion to psalms, the glory of all things is that wherein their highest perfection doth consist; and the glory of God, that divine excellency, whereby He is eminent above all things, his omnipotent, infinite, and eternal being, which angels and glorified saints do intuitively behold; we on earth apprehend principally by faith, in part also by that kind of knowledge which groweth from experience of those effects, the greatness whereof exceedeth the powers and abilities of all creatures both in heaven and earth. God is glorified, when such his excellency above all things is with due admiration acknowledged. Which dutiful acknowledgment of God's excellency by occasion of special effects being the very proper subject, and almost the only matter purposely treated of in all psalms, if that joyful hymn of glory have any use in the Church of God, whose name we therewith extol and magnify, can we place it more fitly than where now it serveth as a close or conclusion to psalms? Neither is the form thereof newly or unnecessarily invented. "We must (saith St. Basil) as we have received, even so baptize; and as we baptize, even so believe; and as we believe, even so give glory." Baptizing we use the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: confessing the Christian faith, we declare our belief in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost: ascribing glory unto God, we give it to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. It is the token of a true and sound understanding for matter of doctrine about the Trinity, when in ministering baptism, and making confession, and giving glory, there is a conjunction of all three, and no one of the three severed from the other two. Hooker.

[i] Then &c.] After the Psalms it hath long been customary for the organ, where one is used, to play for a short time: and, as instruments of musick in divine service are certainly lawful, else they had not been appointed in the Jewish, or permitted in the ancient Christian Church, or described in the Revelation as accompanying the praises of the blessed above, so a little pause for the use of this instrument will not only give some respite and refreshment to the congregation, and to the minister, but may be advantageously employed, either to reflect on what is past of the service, or prepare our minds for what is to come. And therefore it should not be filled up, either by the performer with the lighter airs of musick instead of solemn strains and such as may excite proper dispositions, or by any of the congregation with needless discourse, or such private thoughts or imaginations, as blot out good impressions already made, and indispose us for receiving the like afterwards. Abp. Secker.

[k] Then shall be read distinctly with an audible voice the First Lesson, &c.] "Distinctly," that the reader may be the better understood; "with an audible voice," that he may be the better heard. Dr. Hole.

After the Psalms follow the Lessons. For having, according to the Exhortation, "set forth God's most worthy praise," we proceed to "hear his most holy word." And then a respite is given to the bent of the mind: for, whereas in the work of praising it was active, in hearing it is only attentive. Besides, a different faculty of the soul is now called into employment. In the Psalms the will and affections were employed: but now in the Lessons chiefly the understanding. And, as with the members of the body, so with the faculties of the mind, a change of employment prevents weariness, and affords relief. Dr. Bisse, Dr. Bennet. He, which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he, which heareth, the more earnest to pray. Hooker.

That they, who are blessed with a revelation from God, should read and hear it with reverence, when they assemble to worship Him, is a plain dictate of reason and religion. Accordingly the Jews "read Moses and the Prophets in their synagogues of old time," as the book of Acts informs us, Acts xiii. 27; xv. 21; and so indeed do writers of their own, in the same age with it; who boast of the practice as a most useful and honourable distinction peculiar to their nation, that the laws of life were thus published to all the people. The primitive Christians, as one of the earliest apologists for them, Justin Martyr, tells us, read at their meeting, both the Jewish prophets, and the writings of the apostles, in proper portions. And when the Church of Rome had broken them into small fragments, interrupted with other things; and had continued to read even these in Latin, after it was no longer understood; our Church rectified both errors; and hath taken care that the Old the Calendar[l], except there be proper Lessons[m] assigned for that day: He that readeth so standing[n] and turning himself[o], as he may best be heard[p] of all such as are

Testament should be gone through once a year and the New thrice. Only we omit some parts of the former; which are repetitions of what is related in other parts, or bare lists of genealogies and families, or too mystical and abstruse to be edifying in publick; on which last account we omit also the book of Revelation, excepting two or three chapters: matters of such difficulty being wisely thought fitter for the private meditation and study of those, who are qualified to engage in them.

The order, in which the books of both Testaments are read, is that in which they stand. Only in the Old, the Prophet Isaiah, containing the fullest predictions of Christ's coming and kingdom, is placed at the approach of his nativity: and in the New, the Gospels and Acts are the Lessons for the morning, and the Epistles for the afternoon. In this manner we make provision for every day in the year: and hence one great recommendation of daily attendance on public prayers, where there are opportunities for it, is, that by means of it we shall proceed regularly through the sacred writings, and preserve the due connexion of the several discoveries, made in them to man. But for the first Lessons on Sundays, those chapters of the Old Testament are selected, which appear to be most useful. The second Lessons being from the New, there was no necessity, and little room, for choice. And to Holydays such portions of both are adapted, as best agree with the occasion. Abp. Secker.

Whilst the Scriptures are reading, the people should not be conversing with each other, or disregarding them: but should reverently attend to what is read, considering that it is the Word of God, which is the rule of their duty, and by which they shall be judged at the last day. And whensoever any thing applies to their own case, whether it be instruction or correction, comfort or reproof, let them take particular care thereof, and treasure it up in honest hearts, and endeavour to conduct themselves according to it in the whole course of their conversation. Thus the publick reading of God's word will become truly profitable, and they will have reason to return God special thanks for every opportunity of hearing it: whereas otherwise it will only aggravate their sins, and increase their condemnation. Dr. Bennet.

[l] — out of the Old Testament, as is appointed in the Calendar,] It is plain therefore, that the Apocryphal Lessons, though not expressly mentioned, are to be read by virtue of this rubrick, as it is explained by comparison with the Calendar. Dr. Bennet. With respect to these books it may be observed, that they are read in the congregation, not as divine, but as venerable for their antiquity, and for the spirit of religion that breathes in them; that the doctrine of them in the main is excellent, and the narrations instructive; that they were quoted with respect in the first ages of Christianity; that they were read in publick from very early ages; that it would have given great and needless offence at the Reformation to have left them out entirely; and that they are never appointed for the Lord's day. At least the second Lessons are at all times canonical Scripture: of which a great deal more is read, besides the Psalms, even in those of our churches which have not week-day prayers, than in any one congregation not of the Church of England. Abp. Secker.

[m] — except there be proper Lessons &c.] The course of the first Lessons for Sundays is different from that for week-days. From Advent Sunday to Septuagesima Sunday some particular chapters out of Isaiah are appointed, as containing the clearest prophecies of Christ. But upon Septuagesima Sunday Genesis is begun: because then begins the time of penance and mortification, to which Genesis suits best, as treating of the original of our misery by the fall of Adam, and of God's severe judgment upon the world for sin. For which reason the reading of this book was affixed to Lent, even in the primitive ages of the Church. Then are read forward the books as they lie in order; not all the books, but, because more can attend the publick worship of God on Sundays than upon any other days, such particular chapters are selected, as are judged most edifying to all that are present. And if any Sunday be, as some call it, a privileged day, namely, if it hath the history of it expressed in Scripture, such as Easter-day, Whit-Sunday, &c., there are peculiar and proper Lessons appointed.

Upon Saints'-days another order is observed: for upon them the Church appoints Lessons out of the moral books, such as the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Ecclesiasticus, and Wisdom, which, containing excellent instructions of life and conversation, are fit to be read upon days of saints, whose exemplary lives and deaths are the causes of the Church's solemn commemoration of them, and commendation of them to us.

Other holidays, such as Christmas-day, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, &c., have proper Lessons appointed suitable to the occasions.

And, as for the second Lessons, though generally the Church observes the same course on Sundays as on week-days, yet on some particular holidays and saints'-days such Lessons are appointed, as either explain the mystery, relate the event commemorated, or apply the example. Wheatly.

The proper Lessons are very well chosen, especially those for particular occasions; some of which, particularly Gen. xxii. for Good-Friday, are the same which the Church used in St. Augustin's time. Dean Comber.

[n] He that readeth so standing] When our Saviour read in the synagogue at Nazareth, Luke iv. 16, "he stood up for to read:" hereby shewing the decent regard and reverence to be evidenced towards holy Scripture. From which example of our Saviour, the Church hath ordered the same posture to be used by the minister in reading the Scriptures. Dr. Hole. Or, the Scripture being the word of God, and so a declaration of his will, the reading of it to the people is an act of authority, and therefore the minister that reads the Lessons is to stand. Wheatly.

[o] — and turning himself.] That is, towards the people: whence it appears that before the Lesson he looked from the people. This was the ancient custom of the Church of England, that the officiating minister in all those parts of the service, which were directed to the people, turned himself towards them, as in the Absolution, the Benediction, the reading of the Lessons, and of the holy Commandments. But in those parts of the office, which were directed to God immediately, as prayers, hymns, lauds, confessions of faith or of sins, he turned from the people: and for that purpose, in many parish churches of late, the reading pew had one desk for the Bible, looking towards the people to the body of the church; another for the Prayer Book, looking towards the east or upper end of the chancel. Bp. Sparrow.

[p] — as he may best be heard] A small pause here may be useful, that the congregation may be seated and perfectly quiet before the Lesson begins; to the end that all present may distinctly hear the whole of it, and the greater respect and reverence be shewn to the word of God. Dr. Bennet.

[q] — the Hymn] It is certain from holy Scripture that the Christians were wont to sing hymns in the apostles' times; and it is probable that Ignatius appointed them to be sung by each side of the choir: since Pliny writing at that time to the Emperor Trajan reports, that the Christians used then to sing verses to Christ by turns, which was not much above one hundred years after our Saviour. And it is probable the place of these Hymns was, as now, after the Lessons: for St. Ambrose notes, that as, after one angel had published the Gospel, a multitude joined with him in praising God; so, when one minister hath read the Gospel, all the faithful glorify God. And St. Augustin observes, that a Psalm followed the Lesson out of the Old Testament. Not much unlike was that constitution of the Council of Laodicea, in the year 365, that a Lesson should be read, and then a Psalm sung, that by this variety the people might be secured against weariness and distraction. But, besides antiquity, there is great reason for this interposition of Hymns in respect to the great benefit we may receive from the word of God, for which we do daily praise Him; and if we bless Him for our daily food of meat and drink, how much more are we obliged to glorify Him for the food of our souls? As for the particular Hymns, they are, as of old in the primitive Church, generally taken out of the Scripture; yet, as they did also make use of some Hymns composed by inspired and extraordinary men, so do we. Dean Comber.

When we sing or say these Hymns we stand, which is the proper posture for thanksgivings and praises. Ps. cxxxiv. 1; 2 Chron. vii. 6. The erection of the body fitly expresses the lifting up of the heart in joy. Bp. Sparrow.

[r] Note, that before every Lesson the Minister shall say, &c.] The reason of this notice appears to be, that any of the congregation, who are furnished with Bibles, may look out the Lessons, and so quicken their attention by reading them with the minister. The words to be used by him are, "Here beginneth such a chapter, &c.;" and not "The first Lesson appointed for this morning's service, &c." Collis.

It may be said perhaps that there is no great reason, considering how many things are left in the Liturgy to our discretion, that we should be directed in such minute particulars as these are. Why may we not, for instance, be intrusted with using our own manner of introducing a Lesson out of the Bible, or a portion of Scripture to be read at the altar, but the very words must be prescribed us? True: And yet I must needs say, that he is both conceited and presumptuous, who is above following rule, when it is given, even in these little matters: especially when the command is positive and express, as it is upon supposition in all the rubricks of this class. Archdeacon Sharp.

[s] Te Deum] This ancient and excellent hymn is said to have been composed by St. Ambrose, and first sung at the baptism of St. Augustin: though afterwards the people, as St. Ambrose himself saith, daily repeated it with great devotion and delight. It contains three particulars. First, an act of praise offered to God by us, and by all creatures as well in earth as in heaven; particularly the angels, and the saints which are there, join with us. Secondly, a confession of faith; declaring the general consent unto it, and the particulars of it; namely, concerning every Person in the Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and more largely concerning the Son, as to his divinity, his humanity, and particularly his incarnation; his death; his present glory; and his return to judgment. Thirdly, a supplication grounded upon it; 1. for all his people, that they may be preserved here, and saved hereafter; 2. for ourselves, who daily praise Him, that we may be kept from future sin, and be pardoned for what is past, because we trust in Him. Dean Comber.

It appears certain that this hymn was used generally by the Church in her publick devotions before the middle of the sixth century, at which time St. Bennet instituted his order, and prescribed the singing of this hymn as one of his rules. Dr. Nicholls. The author however was probably not St. Ambrose, but Nicetius, a Bishop, who lived at that time. But be he the author, or be he not, the frame is so excellently modelled, that the Church could not enjoin a better of human structure: and indeed it is the structure only that is human, the materials being divine, and of sacred derivation. L'Estrange.

The Hymn, called Te Deum, derives that name from the first words of it in the Latin: in which language it was composed about the middle of the fourth century; and hath been used by the whole Western Church at least 1200 years; in that of Rome, only on Sundays and holydays, and not all those, but in ours, every day, as the singular excellence of it well deserves. It begins with equal majesty and simplicity: "We praise thee, O God, we acknowledge thee to be the Lord." And not we alone, but "all the earth doth worship thee, the Father everlasting:" every corner of it having retained some apprehensions of a supreme Ruler; on which is founded that of St. Paul to the Athenians, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you," Acts xvii. 23. But unspeakably worthier honours than those of poor mortals, are incessantly paid Him in heaven by the holy angels: mentioned in Scripture, and thence here, under the names of "Cherubin, and Seraphin;" the former denoting probably their unwearied diligence to serve Him, the latter their ardent love to Him; whose acclamations therefore we humbly presume to adopt, as we find them recorded in that lofty description of the prophet: "I saw the Lord, sitting upon the throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: and one cried unto another and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory," Isa. vi. 1—3. Where it must be observed, that for "God of hosts" in the prophet, is "God of sabaoth" in the hymn: the latter being the Hebrew word for the former: which both the Greek and Latin of the Old and New Testament having preserved, as comprehending more than could be well expressed by a single term of any other language; it is preserved in the English also, both here and in two places of the Epistles, Rom. ix. 29; James v. 4. And it signifies

All the earth doth worship thee: the Father everlasting.

To thee all Angels cry aloud: the Heavens[t], and all the Powers therein.

To thee Cherubin, and Seraphin: continually do cry,

Holy, Holy, Holy[u]: Lord God of Sabaoth;

God to be the sovereign Lord of the "innumerable company of angels," Heb. xii. 22; of the host of heaven, which the heathen worshipped, the sun, moon, and stars; of the hosts and armies of all nations on earth; particularly the Jewish people, whom He led forth to battle; and lastly of the Christian Church; which the Old Testament foretold would be "terrible as an army with banners," Cant. vi. 4. 10; and the New describes, as furnished with "weapons of warfare, mighty, through God, to the casting down of imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of him, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ," 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. This therefore the phrase, "Lord God of sabaoth," means; not, as many suppose, though it be a truth, but a very inferior one, that God is peculiarly "Lord of the sabbath" day, Mark ii. 28; Luke vi. 5. For the words are entirely different in the original, though somewhat like in our manner of writing them.

Nor are the praises of God sung in heaven by the angels alone, but "the spirits" also "of just men made perfect," Heb. xii. 23; particularly as we go on to specify, the "apostles, prophets, and martyrs;" with whom the "holy Church" yet militant "throughout the world" aspires to join, in celebrating "the Father of an infinite Majesty: his honourable, true, and only Son," compared with whom, the highest of all created beings is unworthy of that name; "also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter" of every pious soul. Then returning to "the Captain of our salvation," Heb. ii. 10, we thankfully own, that "when he took upon him to deliver man" from sin and punishment, "he did not abhor," and disdain, as beneath Him, the condescension of exchanging the glories of the Godhead "for the Virgin's womb;" and "when he had overcome the sharpness of death," for us, by suffering it Himself, which alludes to the words, "O death, where is thy sting!" 1 Cor. xv. 55, "he opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers." Not that we mean to say, it was not open at all till then; any more than that "life and immortality were" not at all "brought to light" before "the Gospel," 2 Tim. i. 10. But as the light, which men had antecedently to our Saviour's coming, was augmented inexpressibly by it: so the kingdom of heaven was set open vastly wider, in consequence of his sufferings, to receive believers, not from one people only, and their neighbours, but from the whole globe. To Him therefore, our Mediator now, "at the right-hand of God," and who "shall come to be our Judge," we address our prayers, that as "we magnify him day by day," and let us take care to make good that assertion, so He would keep us this and every "day without sin;" restrain us from offending through infirmity, as far as will be really for our inward benefit, but especially from wilful and presumptuous transgression; and that his "mercy" may "lighten," that is, light or come "upon us as our trust is in him." Abp. Secker.

It is observable, that the Church hath not added the doxology, "Glory be to the Father, &c." after this, as after all the other hymns. For the "Te Deum" itself is chiefly a paraphrase on the doxology, the same hymn to the blessed Trinity, only drawn into a larger form. Dr. Bisse.

Neither should "Amen" be said at the end of it, as is the practice in several places. Collis.

Though we generally stand when we say this hymn, yet it is manifestly, from the whole form, addressed to God. And indeed it is one of the most excellent pieces of devotion ever written; so that the Church has with the greatest reason made it part of her Liturgy. It is therefore much to be lamented, that many persons are exceedingly careless in the use of it; repeating it with as little consideration and zeal, as if they did not regard what they said, or to whom the words are directed. As an assistance to their congregations it is useful for the clergy to pause, after they have said, "Here endeth the first lesson;" that the people may have time to rise from their seats, and be prepared for the beginning of this solemn hymn. Indeed the same observation applies to the beginning of any other hymn or psalm, after either lesson, in either morning or evening prayer. Dr. Bennet.

[t] — the Heavens,] Though the heavens are not rational creatures, nor have any proper voice, yet they are figuratively said to "cry to God," and utter his praises, because by the contemplation of their wonderful beauty the glory of their Creator is seen. In this sense the Psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God, &c." Ps. xix. 1—4. Dr. Bennet.

[u] Holy, Holy, Holy:] We here "praise and acknowledge" the thrice holy, as revealed to us in Scripture by the three personal distinctions of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, the Lord God of sabaoth, that is, of hosts or armies; who gave life and being to all the inhabitants of earth and heaven, and on whom they continually depend for their preservation and support. The commencement of this hymn is a paraphrase on that sublime song of the heavenly host, recorded by the Prophet Isaiah, vi. 3, and by St. John in the Revelation, iv. 8. The same is likewise adopted by our Church into her office for the communion. Waldo.

This is the song which we must sing in the regions of everlasting bliss. Let us learn to sing it now. Whilst we are on earth, let us endeavour to join with the heavenly hosts in singing, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of hosts." Let us not be discouraged by the wide difference that subsists between their nature and ours. It is true, they are spiritual: and it is equally true, that God is waiting to make us so too. Rogers.

[x] The holy Church—doth acknowledge thee, &c.] The form of words to be used at the baptizing of all Christians is prescribed by our blessed Saviour Himself, "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," Matt. xxviii. 19. This form is used throughout God's holy Church, and consequently the three Persons in the ever-blessed and adorable Trinity are acknowledged. Such as deny either of them oppose our blessed Saviour's own doctrine, and thereby set themselves against Christ. And as it is said 1 John ii. 22, "That he is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son," so it follows from the text above mentioned, that whosoever denieth the Holy Ghost is antichrist also. Veneer.

[y] Thine honourable, true: and only Son;] Christ is called God's "true Son," because He is not barely an adopted child, as we are by baptism; but very God of very God, by eternal generation. For this reason also, and in this sense, He is God's "only Son:" and being such, He cannot but be "honourable," or worthy of all possible respect and adoration. Dr. Bennet.

The title of honourable evidently belongs to the Son; because "he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father," John v. 23. Veneer.

[z] Thou art the King of Glory: O Christ:] This title is given to Him by the inspired Psalmist in the 24th Psalm, which is a plain prophecy of his ascension into heaven. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates—and the King of Glory shall go in" And then follows, "Who is this King of Glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of Glory," Ps. xxiv. 7. 10. It is remarkable that this title of THE LORD OF HOSTS, which is never bestowed on any but the one supreme God, is here expressly applied to Christ, as it is in several other places; even to Him, "who is over all, God blessed for ever, Amen," Rom. ix. 5; and whom St. Paul elsewhere calls "The Lord of Glory," 1 Cor. ii. 8. Indeed the proofs of his divinity in every part of the Bible are innumerable: both the Old and the New Testament proclaiming Him to be, what this hymn styles Him, "The EVERLASTING Son of the Father." Waldo.

The propriety of singing or reading the Te Deum after the first lesson must be evident to every observer. The Scriptures of the Old Testament set before us God's exceeding great and precious promises, the rectitude of his moral government, and his wonderful dealings with his Church and people from the earliest times. If we hear these things in a proper temper of mind, they will fill us with devout sentiments of adoration and praise. And to express these sentiments in the most lively and vigorous manner, more suitable words have never been devised than those of this rational and majestick hymn. Rogers.

[a] Or this Canticle,] Or song of praise. Abp. Secker. The song of the Three Children is sometimes used, instead of the "Te Deum," after the first lesson: which, though it be not canonical Scripture, is an exact paraphrase of the 148th Psalm, being an elegant summons to all God's works to praise Him, intimating that they all set forth his glory, and inviting us, who have the benefit of them, to praise and magnify his name with them. It begins with the whole creation, even "all the works of the Lord," and then particularizes the several parts of it with their inhabitants. Dean Comber.

This was an ancient hymn in the Jewish church, and adopted into the Christian worship in publick devotion from very early times: being used, as St. Augustin affirms, in his time on the solemn festivals of the Church. Indeed our Church doth not accept it for canonical Scripture, because it is not found in the Hebrew, nor was allowed in the Jewish canon. But by whomsoever and upon whatsoever occasion it was composed or uttered, it is not only very ancient, but is a pious form of praise, and fit to excite a spirit of devotion in the reader. Dr. Nicholls, Dean Comber.

It is now very seldom used, at least in parochial churches: it contains however a noble acknowledgment of the glory of God in his works of creation, the memorial of which was the original design of the sabbath-day: and might be justly preferred to the former hymn, whenever there is particular occasion to return thanks for the blessings of nature. Abp. Secker. Or when the lesson is out of Daniel. *Bp. Lord," this is plainly no more than a figure of speech, though a very sublime one: lending as it were a tongue even to inanimate creatures; and calling both on those who do not, and those which cannot, hear us, to glorify our common Maker, just as is done in the 148th Psalm, of which this Canticle is an evident imitation. Abp. Secker.

[b] Benedicite,] This Canticle is so called, because in the Latin version it begins with these words. It is called "The Song of the Three Children," because Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, (whom the prince of the Eunuchs named Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, Dan. i. 7,) are reported to have sung it in the burning fiery furnace, into which they were cast by order of Nebuchadnezzar for adhering stedfastly to their God, Dan. iii. 19, &c.; and in which God preserved them in a miraculous manner, ver. 27. Dr. Bennet.

[c] Then shall be read in like manner] Namely "distinctly, with an audible voice, &c." as in the rubrick before the first lesson. Dr. Bennet.

[d] — the Second Lesson, taken out of the New Testament.] The cause of reading first the Old Testament, then the New, and always somewhat out of both, is most likely to have been that which Justin Martyr and St. Augustin observes in comparing the two Testaments. "The apostles," saith the one, "have taught us, as themselves did learn, first the precepts of the Law, and then the Gospels. For what else is the Law, but the Gospel foreshewed? What other the Gospel, than the law fulfilled?" In like sort the other, "What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun. Things there prefigured are here performed." Again, "In the Old Testament there is a close comprehension of the New: in the New, an open discovery of the Old." To be short, this method of publick reading either purposely did tend, or at the least wise doth fitly serve, that from smaller things the minds of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and by degrees climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker.

As by this harmony of the lessons the faith of the hearers is established; so by the order, wherein they are read, the understanding is enlightened. Whilst therefore the lessons, whether out of the Old or New Testament, are read in our ears, we should not let them pass away as a vulgar history, or an idle legend, or as the word of man; but reverently listen to it, as it is in truth the word of God. For the minister in reading the Scriptures is, even as Aaron was, the mouth of God to the people: for which cause he is directed to turn his face to them as speaking to them from God, and to read standing, to signify his authority. When therefore he standeth up in order to read the lesson, let every devout hearer take that advice, which Eli gave to Samuel, waiting likewise in the sanctuary, saying within himself; "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth," 1 Sam. iii. 9. And let us not only hearken but apply what we hear; if examples, let these lead us; if precepts, let these teach us; if commands, let these bind us; if promises, let these encourage us; if threats, let these warn us; if mercies, let these comfort us; if judgments, let these awaken us. In whatsoever way the Lesson brings us instruction in righteousness, which it always does in some way, let us at the close answer with the congregation of Israel, saying in our hearts, "all that the Lord hath spoken, we will do." Exod. xix. 8. Dr. Bisse.

[e] And after that, the Hymn following;] When the Gospel was first published to the world, the angels sang praise; and all holy men, to whom it was revealed, entertained these "good tidings" with great joy. And since it is our duty also, whenever we hear the Gospel read, to give glory to God, therefore the Church appoints this hymn, which was composed by holy Zacharias upon the first notice that God had sent a Saviour to mankind, and is one of the first Evangelical hymns indited by God's Spirit upon this occasion. Its original therefore is divine, its matter unexceptionable, and its fitness for this place unquestionable. Dean Comber.

This prophecy of Zacharias, called "Benedictus" for the reason already mentioned, was uttered on the birth of John the Baptist; and is a thanksgiving for the redemption of mankind, of which he was to publish the speedy approach. It copies very nearly the style of the Jewish prophets, who described spiritual blessings by temporal imagery. Thus, meaning to praise the "Father of mercies," 2 Cor. i. 3, for delivering all nations from the dominion of the wicked one, it "blesses the Lord God of Israel, for saving his people from their enemies, and from the hand of those that hate them." Now this kind of language was laid aside after our Saviour's ascension: and therefore the prophecy before us is not of later date, but genuine. Yet it sufficiently explains, to what sort of "salvation" it refers: by mentioning "the remission of sins, the giving of light to them that sit in darkness, and the guiding of their feet into the way of peace." And so it may teach us both the fitness and the method, of assigning to the Old Testament predictions an evangelical interpretation. The people, in repeating it, should remember, that the words, "And thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest," belong, not to our Saviour, but to the Baptist. And it is easily to be apprehended, that if, in the dawning which preceded "the Sun of Righteousness," Mal. iv. 2, good Zacharias offered up his thanks with such transport, we, to whom He shines out in full splendour, ought to recite it with double gratitude. Abp. Secker.

Though the 100th Psalm is almost constantly used after the second lesson, there seems no good reason why this hymn should be laid aside. They are both equally indited by the Holy Spirit, and both admirably calculated to assist the devotion, and elevate the affections, of a Christian congregation: and the hymn being placed first, seems to have been intended for more general use than the psalm. Waldo.

The Church hath appointed two songs of praise and thanksgiving to be used, either of them after each lesson: but not so indifferently, but that the former practice of exemplary churches and reason may guide us in the choice. For the "Te Deum," "Benedictus," "Magnificat," and "Nunc dimittis," being the most expressive jubilations and rejoicings for the redemption of the world, may be said more often than the rest, especially on Sundays and other festivals of our Lord. Bp. Sparrow.

In holiness and righteousness before him: all the days of our life.

And thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways;

To give knowledge of salvation unto his people: for the remission of their sins,

Through the tender mercy of our God: whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us;

To give light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death: and to guide our feet into the way of peace.

[f] Or this Psalm, Jubilate Deo.] So called from its commencement in Latin. When the Benedictus is not used, there is appointed another divine hymn taken out of the Old Testament, but wholly respecting the evangelical state there revealed to holy David. The title it bears in the Bible is "a psalm of praise;" and it was first composed for a form of publick thanksgiving to be sung by course at the oblation of the peace-offering, and so may well be used by us after we have heard the Gospel of peace; after which it seems to have been sung about the year 450. Dean Comber. It was introduced into this part of our service for variety in King Edward's second book. Wheatly.

The 100th Psalm, which being shorter than the Benedictus, we use the more frequently on account probably of the service being long, is peculiarly proper after a lesson from the Gospel, since it peculiarly relates to the Gospel times: as appears from its inviting "all lands to be joyful in the Lord;" declaring them equally "God's people, and the sheep of his pasture;" and calling on them equally to "go into his gates, and praise him for his mercy and truth." And may we all accordingly so praise and serve Him "in his courts" here below, that we may for ever "dwell in his tabernacle and rest on his holy hill" above, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Ps. xv. 1. Abp. Secker.

[g] Then shall be sung or said the Apostles' Creed] Which is placed between the third part of the daily service of our Church, namely, the lessons, and the fourth part, namely, the petitions, that we may express that faith in what we have heard, which is the ground of what we are about to ask. For as "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," Rom. x. 17, so we must "ask in faith," if we "think to receive any thing of the Lord," James i. 6, 7. For "how shall we call upon him, in whom we have not believed?" Rom. x. 14. But as all the doctrines of Scripture, though equally true, are not of equal importance; the more necessary articles have been, from the beginning of Christianity, collected into one body, called in Scripture "the form of sound words," 2 Tim. i. 13; "the words of faith," 1 Tim. iv. 6; "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," Heb. vi. 1; but in our common way of speaking at present, "the Creed," from the Latin word, Credo, which signifies "I believe." Now the ancient churches had many such Creeds: some longer, some shorter; differing on several heads in phrase, but agreeing in method and sense: of which that called "the Apostles' Creed" is one. And it deserves this name, not so much from any certainty, or great likelihood, that the apostles drew it up in these very expressions: though some, pretty early, and many since, have imagined they did: as because it contains the chief apostolick doctrines; and was used by a Church, which, before it grew corrupt, was justly respected as the chief apostolick settlement, I mean, the Roman. Abp. Secker.

The opinion which ascribes the framing of this Creed to the apostles in person, though as ancient as the first account we have of the Creed itself from Ruffinus in the year 390, is yet rendered highly improbable, as by many collateral reasons, so especially by this argument, that it is not appealed to in elder times as the sacred and unalterable standard. And therefore our excellent Church with due caution styles it in her 8th Article, "that which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed." But though it seems not to have been compiled or formally drawn up by the apostles themselves, yet is its authority of sufficient strength; since it may still be demonstrated to be the apostles', or rather the apostolick, Creed, in three several respects: First, as it is drawn from the fountains of apostolical Scripture. Secondly, as it agrees in substance with the confessions of all orthodox churches, which make up the apostolick Church in the extended meaning of the word. Thirdly,

2 Cor. i. 3. John i. 18. And in Jesus Christ[m] his only Son our Lord, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, Born of the Virgin Mary, Suffered under Pontius Pi- Matt. i. 20. Luke i. 27. 31. 35. Matt. xxvii. 2. 26. 35. 50. 59, 60.

as it was the Creed of an apostolick Church in the restrained sense of that term, denoting a Church founded by the apostles, as was that at Rome. Kennet.

Though this Creed be not of the apostles' immediate framing, yet it may be truly styled apostolical, not only because it contains the sum of the apostles' doctrine, but also, because the age thereof is so great, that its birth must be fetched from the very apostolick times. It is true, the exact form of the present Creed cannot pretend to be so ancient by four hundred years; but a form, not much different from it, was used long before. Irenæus, the scholar of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, where he repeats a Creed not much unlike to ours, assures us, that "the Church, dispersed throughout the whole world, had received this faith from the apostles and their disciples;" which is also affirmed by Tertullian of one of his Creeds, that "that rule of faith had been current in the Church from the beginning of the Gospel:" and, which is observable, although there was so great a diversity of Creeds, as that scarce two churches did exactly agree therein, yet the form and substance of every Creed was in a great measure the same; so that except there had been, from the very plantation of Christianity, a form of sound words, or a system of faith, delivered by the first planters thereof, it is not easy to conceive, how all churches should harmonize, not only in the articles themselves into which they were baptized, but, in a great measure also, in the method and order of them. Lord Chancellor King.

The Creed itself was neither the work of one man, nor of one day; but the composure of it was gradual. First, several of the articles therein were derived from the very days of the apostles: these were the articles of the existence of God, the Trinity; that Jesus was Christ, or the Saviour of the world; the remission of sins; and the resurrection of the dead. Secondly, the others were afterwards added by the primitive doctors and bishops, in opposition to gross heresies and errors, that sprung up in the Church. Lord Chancellor King. It hath been received in all ages with the greatest veneration and esteem. The ancients declare their respect and reverence for it with the most noble and majestick expressions: and in these latter times, throughout several centuries of years, so great a deference hath been rendered thereunto, that it hath not only been used in baptism, but in every publick assembly it hath been usually, if not always read, as the standard and basis of the Christian faith. Lord King.

But neither this, nor any other Creed, hath authority of its own, equal to Scripture; but derives its principal authority from being founded on Scripture. Nor is it in the power of any man or number of men, either to lessen or increase the fundamental articles of the Christian faith: which yet the Church of Rome, not content with this its primitive Creed, hath profanely attempted; adding twelve articles more, founded on its own, that is, on no authority, to the ancient twelve, which stand on the authority of God's word. But our Church hath wisely refused to go a step beyond the original form; since all necessary truths are briefly comprehended in it, which it is the duty of every one of us firmly to believe, and openly to profess. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation," Rom. x. 10. Abp. Secker.

The place of the Creed in our Liturgy is, first, immediately after the lessons of holy Scripture out of which it is taken; and since faith comes by hearing God's word, and the Gospel doth not profit without faith, therefore it is very fit, upon hearing thereof, we should exercise and profess our faith. Secondly, the Creed is placed just before the Prayers, as being the foundation of our petitions; we cannot call on Him, on whom we have not believed, Rom. x. 14; and since we are to pray to God the Father in the name of the Son, by the assistance of the Spirit, for remission of sins, and a joyful resurrection, we ought first to declare, that we believe in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and that there is remission here and resurrection hereafter to be had for all true members of the catholick Church, and then we may be said to pray in faith. And hence St. Ambrose and St. Augustin advise Christians to say it daily in their private devotions; and so our old Saxon councils command all to learn and use it, not as a prayer (as some ignorantly or maliciously object), but as a ground for our prayers, and a reason for our faith and hope of their acceptance: upon which account also, as soon as persecution ceased, and there was no danger of the heathens overhearing it, the Creed was used in the public service.

And there are many benefits which we may receive by this daily use of it. For, first, This fixes it firmly in our memories, that we may never forget this blessed rule of our prayers, nor be at any time without this necessary touchstone to try all doctrines by. Secondly, Thus we daily renew our profession of fidelity to Almighty God, and repeat that watchword which was given us when we were first listed under Christ's banner, declaring thereby that we retain our allegiance to Him, and remain his faithful servants and soldiers; and no doubt that will move Him the sooner to hear the prayers, which we are now making to Him for his aid. Thirdly, By this we declare our unity amongst ourselves, and shew ourselves to be members of that holy catholick Church, by and for which these common prayers are made: those who hold this one faith, and those only, have a right to pray thus; nor can any other expect to be admitted to join in them; and therefore this Creed is the symbol and badge to manifest who are fit to make these prayers, and receive the benefit of them.

Wherefore in our daily use of this sacred form, let us observe these rules. First, To be heartily thankful to God for revealing these divine, mysterious, and saving truths to us; and, though the "Glory be to the Father," &c., be only set at the end of St. Athanasius's Creed, yet the duty of thanksgiving must be performed upon every repetition of this Creed also. Secondly, We must give our positive and particular assent to every article as we go along, and receive it as an infallible oracle from the mouth of God, and for this reason we must repeat it with an audible voice after the minister, and in our mind annex that word "I believe" to every particular article; for, though it be but once expressed in the beginning, yet it must be supplied, and is understood in every article: and to shew our consent the more evidently, we must stand up when we repeat it, and resolve to stand up stoutly in defence thereof, so as, if need were, to defend it, or seal the truth of it with our blood. Thirdly, We must devoutly apply every article, as we go along, to be both a ground for our prayers, and a guide to our lives; for, if we rightly believe the power of the Father, the love of the Son, and the grace of the Holy Ghost, it will encourage us (who are members of the catholick Church) to pray heartily for all spiritual and temporal blessings, and give us very lively hopes of obtaining all our requests. Again, since these holy principles were not revealed and selected out from all other truths, for any other end but to make us live more holily; therefore we must consider how it is fit that man should live, who believes that God the Father is his Creator, God the Son his Redeemer, and God the Holy Ghost his Sanctifier; who believes that he is a member of that catholick Church, wherein there is a communion of saints, and remission for sins, and shall be a resurrection of the body, and a life everlasting afterwards. No man is so ignorant, but he can tell what manner of persons they ought to be who believe this, and it is evident that whoever firmly and fully believes all this, his faith will certainly and necessarily produce a holy life. Dean Comber.

[h] — by the Minister and the people,] That is, by the whole congregation; because it is the profession of every person present, and ought therefore to be personally pronounced by every one of them, the more expressly to declare their belief of the same to each other, and consequently to the whole Christian world, with whom they maintain communion. Accordingly the form runs in the singular number: the minister not saying in the name of the congregation, "We believe in God, &c.," but each person saying in his own name, "I believe in God, &c." That the congregation may repeat their Creed as they ought, they should frequently reflect on the great importance of it. And it is much to be desired that the clergy should not begin it or proceed with it hastily: but so as to allow the congregation leisure to begin together with them, and to go through the whole form with due deliberation. Dr. Bennet.

This open "confession with the mouth," to be made by all the people, is chiefly with regard to men; before whom hereby as we give glory to God, so we call upon others to be witnesses, approvers, and followers of our faith. For with regard to God, who seeth the heart, it is sufficient to a man's righteousness or justification in his sight, if he "believeth with the heart." And in this respect also the practice of the Church of Rome seems deficient; which appoints the Creed, as well as the Lord's Prayer, to be said secretly; that is, either mentally, with the heart, not with the mouth, which is no confession at all; or silently by every one to himself, not audibly in the hearing of the congregation; which defeats the intended acts of confession, namely, the satisfying of the congregation that we hold the same faith, and the confirming and encouraging of them in the same. Dr. Bisse.

[i] — standing:] It should not be by any means with negligence or indifference that we profess our faith: for what we believe is the only just foundation of what we do, or hope, or fear. On this account we "stand" at the repeating of the Creed; to express our stedfastness in it, and our readiness to "contend earnestly" in every proper method "for the faith once delivered to the saints," Jude ver. 3. Abp. Secker. In Poland and Lithuania, nobles used formerly to draw their swords, in token that, if need were, they would defend and seal the truth of it with their blood. Wheatly.

Turning at the same time towards the east, as many do, is an ancient custom; as indeed, in most religions men have directed their worship some particular way. And this practice being intended only to honour Christ, "the Sun of Righteousness," who hath risen upon us, to enlighten us with that doctrine of salvation, to which we then declare our adherence; it ought not to be condemned, as superstition: and yet, being neither obligatory in itself nor commanded by authority, the omission of it ought not to be censured, as irreverence or disobedience. Abp. Secker.

Most churches are so contrived that the greater part of the congregation faces the east. The Jews in their dispersion throughout the world, when they prayed, turned their faces towards the mercy-seat and cherubim, where the ark stood. See 2 Chron. vi. 36—38. Daniel was found praying toward Jerusalem, Dan. vi. 10, because of the situation of the temple. And this has always been esteemed a very becoming way of expressing our belief in God, namely, by turning to the east, that quarter of the heavens, where He is supposed to have his peculiar residence of glory. Collis. The Christians from the beginning built their churches, and worshipped towards the east, because they expected our Saviour who is called the Day-Spring from on high, to come from thence. In that part also the holy table or altar is placed, where God affords his most gracious and mysterious presence. Clutterbuck. See note from Dr. Bisse before the Nicene Creed.

[k] — except only such days &c.] These days are enumerated in the rubrick before the Athanasian Creed. Our Church has with good reason ordered the omission of this Creed, when the other is appointed: because that Creed contains much the same articles as this, but some of them expressed in a fuller manner. Dr. Bennet.

[l] I believe in God &c.] Paraphrase on the Apostles' Creed.

I make this confession of my faith, relating to those truths, which upon the testimony of God Himself are revealed unto me. I. I believe, that there is one only God, Deut. iv. 35; 1 Cor. viii. 6; that He is Father to all men by creation, Mal. ii. 10; by redemption, Deut. xxxii. 6; adoption, 1 John iii. 1; but in a peculiar manner the Father of our blessed Lord by eternal generation, Heb. i. 1, 2; John vi. 57. I believe farther, that this one God is "Almighty," and is vested with an infinite power of doing all things, Isa. xlv. 12; Rev. xix. 6; and governing all things at his pleasure, 1 Chron. xxix. 11; Jer. xvi. 21; that He was "the Maker of heaven and earth," that is, the whole world and every thing contained therein, Exod. xx. 11; John i. 10; Col. i. 16.

II. I believe likewise "in Jesus Christ," being verily persuaded, that He is what his name "Jesus" signifies, the Saviour of the world, Luke i. 31; Matt. i. 21; Acts xiii. 23. That He is "Christ" or the Messiah, which was so long before his coming promised under the Old Testament, Gen. xxi. 12, and xlix. 10; Mal. iii. 1. That He is the "only Son" of God, begotten from all eternity, partly, as being said to come down from heaven, John vi. 38; partly because He is recorded in Scripture to have made the worlds, Heb. i. 2; Col. i. 16: partly, by reason He is frequently called God, John i. 1; Phil. ii. 6, 7; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Rom. ix. 5; but chiefly, because of the divine essence being communicated to Him, John xvi. 15, and v. 26; 2 Cor. iv. 4; and that, in a manner different from all created beings, Heb. i. 13. Who is likewise "our Lord" by being the true Jehovah or Lord, Hos. i. 7; Matt. iii. 3; by having all things put under his dominion, Ps. ex. 5; by redeeming us from the power of the devil, who before had got the mastery over us, Heb. ii. 14; Col. ii. 15; by purchasing us by his blood, Acts xx. 28; Eph. i. 7; by our voluntarily becoming his servants and scholars by baptism, Rom. vi. 6. 13. I believe further, that though Christ was true man, Heb. iv. 15, yet He was not produced after the ordinary manner of human conception, but by the overshadowing "of the Holy Ghost," Luke i. 35; "was born of Mary," a poor maid of the lineage of David, who continued a "virgin" notwithstanding that miraculous birth, Luke i. 27; that He suffered an ignominious death as was foretold, Isa. liii. 9; Mark ix. 12: and this at the time when "Pontius Pilate" was governor under the Romans in Judea, Matt. xxvii. 2: was nailed to a cross, a terrible and scandalous punishment, by which the Romans used to put their wicked slaves to death: that under this grievous torture He became really "dead," Luke xxiii. 46; Mark xv. 37: and after that by a kind disciple was "buried," John xix. 38: and "descended into hell," or hades, the repository or place of separate souls, Isa. v. 14; Ps. xvi. 10: on "the third day" after his crucifixion He "rose again," Matt. xvi. 21; Mark ix. 31: as He had before foretold, Matt. xxvii. 63: after that, in the sight of a great many credible witnesses, He in a most glorious manner "ascended up into heaven," Luke xxiv. 50, 51; Acts i. 9, 10: as the prophet had long before predicted, Ps. lxviii. 18; Micah ii. 13: and was shortly after advanced to a most especial honour, which was never vouchsafed to any person before, Heb. i. 13; "to sit on the right hand of God," Luke xxii. 69; 1 Pet. iii. 22: which is a place of the greatest dignity in heaven, 1 Kings ii. 19; Heb. viii. 1: where He has begun his spiritual kingdom, and treads upon the necks of the great enemies of his jurisdiction; sin, Rom. vi. 14; satan, Heb. ii. 14; and death, 1 Cor. xv. 26: who, at the end of the world, shall come in a triumphant and glorious procession attended with the angels, 2 Thess. i. 7; Matt. xxv. 31; and shall have all power committed to Him, John v. 22. 27; Acts xvii. 31, to judge those who shall then be alive, 1 Thess. iv. 15; 1 Cor. xv. 51; and those who shall be raised up from their graves, Matt. xxv. 32.

III. I believe "the Holy Ghost" to be very God, and the third Person of the blessed Trinity; that He is not a virtue or grace, as some fondly imagine, but a person, Eph. iv. 30; Rom. viii. 26; Acts x. 19: who is called frequently "the Comforter," John xiv. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7: and is expressly named God, Acts v. 3, 4. I further believe, that there is a number of men, sequestered from the rest of the world by faith in Christ, and governed by his laws; who have continued throughout all ages from the apostles' time, and shall do so to the coming of Christ, which I call "the Catholick Church," which is "holy," 2 Tim. ii. 19, by reason of the holy profession, which they are called to; though all the particular members are not so, Matt. xiii. 24. 47. It is likewise "Catholick" or universal, because of its diffusiveness throughout the world, Matt. xxviii. 19; Luke xxiv. 47. I believe that there is a "communion of the saints" and elect people of God, 1 Cor. vi. 11; Eph. i. 13; with God the Father, 1 John i. 3; with God the Son, John xvii. 21; 1 Cor. i. 9; with the Holy Ghost, Phil. ii. 1; Rom. viii. 9; and with all the saints in all the churches now upon earth, 1 John i. 7; as also with all the saints departed, Heb. xii. 22, 23. I believe further, that, whereas by our sins we are become debtors to God's justice, 1 John iii. 4; Matt. v. 22; so through the blood of Christ, who has made satisfaction for them, Matt. xx. 28; 2 Cor. v. 18; Rom. v. 10; Col. i. 20; we may obtain "forgiveness" of them, not only in baptism, Acts ii. 38; Acts xxii. 16; Eph. v. 26; but afterwards if we truly repent of them, 1 John iv. 10; 1 John ii. 1. I believe likewise "the resurrection of the body," not only as a thing possible to be done by an almighty agent, Luke i. 37; Acts xxvi. 8; Matt. x. 28: but as a thing generally expected by the Jews, Job xix. 25; Dan. xii. 2: that this is clearly promised under the Gospel, Rom. xiv. 9; viii. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 21: and moreover that the selfsame body shall rise again, 1 Cor. xv. 23; Rom. viii 11; 2 Cor. v. 10: and lastly, that the resurrection shall extend to bad as well as good men, 1 Cor. xv. 22; John v. 28. Finally I believe the "everlasting" duration of all bad men in misery, Matt. xxv. 41. 46; x. 28; Luke iii. 17; Rev. xx. 10; and of all good men in a state of glory, which does arise from a vacancy from all sorrow, Rev. xxi. 4; from the vision of God, 1 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 John iii. 2; as also from unspeakable pleasures, which they shall then partake of, 1 Cor. ii. 9. Amen. Dr. Nicholls.

[m] And in Jesus Christ] It is usual for our congregation to bow, when we come to this article of the Creed: agreeably to a pious ordinance of our Reformers, first established by the Queen's Injunctions, 1559, and afterwards incorporated into the Canons of the year 1603. It is there provided, that "when in time of divine service, the Lord Jesus shall be mentioned, due and lowly reverence shall be done by all persons present, as it has been accustomed, testifying by these outward ceremonies and gestures, their inward humility, Christian resolution, and due acknowledgment, that the Lord Jesus Christ, the true and eternal Son of God, is the only Saviour of the world, in whom alone, all the mercies, graces, and promises of God to mankind, for this life and the life to come, are fully and wholly comprised." Collis.

See the note from Dr. Bisse and Hooker on the rubrick before the Nicene Creed.

[n] He descended into hell;] The meaning is, that his soul, being separated from his body by a real transition and local motion, went into the unseen region of spirits; where, according to the laws of death, it remained amongst other religious and pious departed souls till the resurrection of his body on the third day. In the ancient English dialect the word "Hell" was taken in a large sense for the general receptacle of all souls whatsoever, and it is so used in the old translation of the Psalms in our Common Prayer Book, Ps. lxxxix. 47. Which sense may be confirmed from the primary and original signification of the word: according to which it imports no more than an invisible and hidden place, being derived from the old Saxon word Hil, which signifies to hide, or from the participle thereof Helled, that is to say, hidden or covered: as in the western parts of England at this very day to "hele" over any thing signifies amongst the common people to cover it: and he, that covereth an house with tile or slate, is called an Helliar. Whence it appears that the word "Hell" according to its primitive notion exactly answers to the Greek word, "Hades," which signifies the common mansion of departed souls, and was so called because it is an unseen place. Lord Chancellor King.

The assertion in the Creed is founded on Ps. xvi. 10, where David prophesies of Christ, what St. Peter in the Acts explains of Him, that "his soul should not be left in hell," Acts ii. 24—32; which imports that once He was there. The most common meaning, not only amongst heathens, but amongst Jews and the first Christians, of the word "Hades," here translated "Hell," was in general that invisible world, one part or another of which the souls of the deceased, whether good or bad, inhabit. Probably therefore all that was intended to be taught by this part of the Creed is, that when He died, as his body was laid in the grave, so his spirit went where other separate spirits are. And we should remember, in repeating these words of the Creed, that this is the whole of what we are bound to profess by them. But in what part of space, or of what nature, that receptacle is, in which the souls of men continue from their death, till they rise again, we scarce know at all: excepting that we are sure it is divided into two extremely different regions, the dwelling of the righteous, called in St. Luke "Abraham's bosom," where Lazarus was; and that of the wicked, where "the rich man" was; "between which there was a great gulf fixed," Luke xvi. 22, 23. 26. And we have no proof, that our Saviour went on any account into the latter: but since He told the penitent thief, that "he should be that day with him in Paradise," Luke xxiii. 43, we are certain that He was in the former; where "they, which die in the Lord, rest from their labours," and "are blessed;" Rev. xiv. 13; waiting for a still more perfect happiness at the resurrection of the last day. Abp. Secker.

[o] I believe in the Holy Ghost;] As faith in God is confessedly the foundation of all religion, so the belief of the true God, as revealed to us in the holy Scriptures under the personal distinction of "the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," is douhtless the first principle of Christianity. On this principle the Creed proceeds. The first article of our belief is in "God the Father Almighty." We next declare our faith in the second Person of the ever-blessed Trinity, "his only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ." We then proceed to the third Person, "I believe in the Holy Ghost." Here ends the principal part of the Creed. And it were to be wished, that, in repeating it, a pause were here made to distinguish it from what follows. For hitherto we have declared our faith in the holy Trinity, into whose name we were baptized. The remaining articles relate to some of the most important doctrines of our religion, which we are required indeed firmly to believe, because they are revealed to us by the word of God: but, when we profess our belief in these, it is in a somewhat different and more restrained sense than when we say, we "believe in God the Father Almighty, in our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." For to believe in the divine Being implies, not only a firm and steady belief of the existence and perfections of God; but also an hearty trust and dependence on Him, a reliance on his promises, a submission to his will, and an entire devotion of ourselves to his service. This is that true and lively faith, which alone will be available to our salvation; and this we should always most sincerely and cordially profess, when we declare our belief in the blessed Trinity. Thus when we say "I believe in the Holy Ghost" we should not confine our thoughts to the nature or essence of the Holy Spirit, as being one with the Father and the Son, though that is the first thing intended to be thereby acknowledged; but extend them to the offices He sustains in the work of our redemption as our sanctifier and comforter; and to our consequent obligations to adore and obey Him. Then follows, "the holy Catholick Church; to believe in which, or rather to believe which, signifies only, that we believe that there is such a general society of Christians dispersed throughout the world: not confined to any particular age, or nation, but catholick, or universal, according to the descriptions so often given of it in the sacred writings. This distinction is carefully observed in the Nicene Creed; where after the article of belief in the Holy Ghost, follows; not, I believe in, but "I believe one catholick and apostolick Church, I acknowledge one baptism, &c." Waldo.

[p] — Catholick] The word "Catholick," applied to the Church in our Creed, is no where used in Scripture, but frequently in the early Christian writers: and it means "universal," extending to all mankind. The Jewish Church was not universal, but particular: for it consisted only of one nation; and their law permitted sacrifices only in one temple; nor could several other precepts of it be observed in countries at any considerable distance from thence: but the Christian consists "of every kindred, tongue, and people," Rev. v. 9, equally; and "offers unto the name of God in every place, from the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, incense and a pure offering," Mal. i. 11. The catholick Church then is the universal Church, spread through the world: and the catholick faith is the universal faith; "that form of doctrine," which the apostles "delivered," Rom. vi. 17, to the whole Church, and it received. What this faith was, we may learn from their writings, contained in the New Testament: and at so great a distance of time, we can learn it with certainty no where else. Every church or society of Christians, that preserves this catholick or universal faith, accompanied with true charity, is a part of the catholick or universal Church: and because the parts are of the same nature with the whole, it hath been usual to call every Church singly, which is so qualified, a catholick Church. And in this sense, Churches, that widely differ in several notions and customs, may, notwithstanding, each of them, be truly catholick Churches. But the Church of "Rome," which is one of the most corrupted parts of the catholick Church, both in faith and love, hath presumed to call itself the whole catholick Church, the universal Church; which it no more is, than one diseased limb, though perhaps the larger for being diseased, is the whole body of a man. And by attempting to exclude us, they take the direct way to exclude themselves, unless God impute their uncharitable way of thinking and acting, as we hope He will, to excusable ignorance and mistake. The Church of England pretends not indeed absurdly, to be the whole catholick Church; but is undoubtedly a sound and excellent member of it. So that we have much better ground to call ourselves Catholicks, than they; were such names worth disputing about, which they are not: only one would not flatter and harden them, by giving them a title, which they both claim unjustly, and turn into an argument against us. Abp. Secker.

[q] The Communion of Saints;] The word "saints" is of the same meaning with the word "holy;" and therefore comprehends all Christians in the same manner as has been already explained. Having "communion" is being entitled to partake of benefits and kindnesses, and bound to make suitable returns for them. And thus Christians, or Saints, have communion or "fellowship" with "the Father from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift:" with his Son Jesus Christ, 1 John i. 3; James i. 17; through whom forgiveness and mercy is conveyed to us: with the Holy Ghost, whose sanctifying graces are conferred on such, as duly qualify their hearts body, And the life everlasting. Amen[r].

¶ And after that, these Prayers[s] following, all devoutly kneeling[t]; the Minister first pronouncing with a loud voice,

The Lord be with you. Ruth ii. 4. 2 Thess. iii. 16. 2 Tim. iv. 22.

Answer. And with thy spirit.

for the reception of them. And for these blessings we owe all thankfulness and all duty, in thought, word, and deed. Christians have also communion with the holy angels; as these "are ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation," Heb. i. 14: and undoubtedly we ought to think of what they do for us, with an inward sense of gratitude and love. But, as we are unacquainted with particulars, we can make no particular acknowledgments: nor ought we to make any general ones, by outward expressions of respect: since "worshipping God alone" is commanded, Matt. iv. 10; and worshipping angels condemned in Scripture, Col. ii. 18.

With respect to those of our own nature, we are bound so far to hold communion even with the worst of unbelievers, as not only to do them every kind of justice, but sincerely to wish, and, if occasion offer, heartily endeavour, their good, both in body and soul. But to all, "who have obtained the like precious faith with ourselves," 2 Pet. i. 1, we bear a still nearer relation; as being, in a peculiar sense, children of the same Father, disciples of the same Master, animated by the same Spirit, members of the same body. And these things oblige us to the utmost care of preserving, by prudent order and mutual forbearance, as much unity in the Church, as we possibly can.

Such indeed, as obstinately deny the fundamental doctrines, or transgress the fundamental precepts of Christianity, ought to be rejected from Christian communion. But to renounce communicating with any others, who are willing to admit us to it on lawful terms, is the way to cut off ourselves, not them, from the body of Christ: who yet, we doubt not, will allow those on both sides to belong to his Church, who through pardonable passions or mistakes will not allow one another to do so.

And, as we should maintain communion with all proper persons, we should shew our disposition to it in all proper ways: attend on the publick instructions, join in the publick worship, sacraments, and discipline, which our Lord hath appointed; and keep the whole of them pure from all forbidden or suspicious alterations or mixtures: avoid, with great care, both giving and taking needless offence, in respect to these or any matters; and by all fit means "edify one another in love," Rom. xiv. 19; Eph. iv. 16: "obeying those, who are set over us;" condescending to those, who are beneath us; esteeming and honouring the wise and virtuous; teaching and admonishing the ignorant and faulty; bearing with the weak, relieving the poor, and comforting the afflicted.

Nor have we "communion" only with the "saints" on earth, but are of one city and one family, with such, as are already got safe to heaven. Doubtless they exercise that "communion" towards us by loving and praying for the brethren, whom they have left behind them. And we are to exercise it towards them; not by addressing petitions to them, which we are neither authorized to offer, nor have any grounds to think they can hear; but by rejoicing in their happiness; thanking God for the grace, which He hath bestowed on them, and the examples, which they have left us; holding their memories in honour; imitating their virtues; and beseeching the Disposer of all things, that, having followed them in holiness here, we may meet them in happiness hereafter; and become, in the fullest sense, "fellow-citizens with the saints and of the houshold of God," Eph. ii. 19: "having with all those, that are departed in the true faith of his holy name, our perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in his eternal and everlasting glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." See Burial Office. Abp. Secker.

[r] Amen.] That is, this confession or declaration of my belief I make sincerely, in the face of God, and of the whole church. Dr. Bennet.

We shall constantly perceive the vigour of our practice to be proportionable to the steadiness and liveliness of our faith: what revives one will always quicken the other. From every doctrine in the Creed issues a commandment; and the doctrine stirs us up to keep the commandment.

When by reciting the Creed we declare our belief in God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, with all that each has done for us; we should "love the Father" for his tender love, adore the "Almighty" for his infinite power, and commit our souls to Him in well-doing as to a faithful "Creator."

From "Jesus" we should seek salvation: from "Christ" the anointed, as a Prophet, instruction; as a Priest, atonement; as a King, protection; as the "only-begotten Son," the adoption of children. As "our Lord," we should serve Him, for his "conception," in faith; for his "nativity," in humility; for his "sufferings," in patience; for his "cross," in crucifying sin; for his "death," in mortifying the flesh; for his "burial," in burying the old man with his evil desires; for his "descent," in meditating on the other world; for his "resurrection," in newness of life; for his "ascension and inthronization," in setting our affections on things above, on the pleasures at God's right hand; for his "return," in awe of his second coming; for his "judgment," in judging ourselves before we come to be judged by Him.

From the "Spirit" we should seek the breath of saving grace: that so in the "Church" we may partake of a high and heavenly calling; in the "Holy Church," of sanctification; in the "catholick Church," of "communion" with our brethren in prayers and sacraments: and all this, in order to a firm persuasion of "the remission of our sins," as well as a confident hope of "resurrection," and translation to "life eternal."

Thus is the Creed at once a profession of faith, a manual of devotion, and a directory of practice. "The just shall live by faith." Bp. Horne.

[s] And after that, these Prayers &c.] Thus far, we trust, that order and variety have fully appeared, the beauty of holiness hath shone forth, in the principal parts of our service, as they are laid down in the Exhortation. We have seen the Church acknowledging her sins in the Confession: then "setting forth God's most worthy praise" in the Psalms; then "hearing his most holy word" in the Lessons; and after that, with one heart and one mouth, declaring her assent to the catholick faith in the Creed. And now having her conscience absolved from her sins, and her affections warmed with thanksgiving, and her understanding enlightened by the word, and her faith strengthened by her publick confession, how fit and prepared is she to enter solemnly on supplication and prayer, and "to ask those things that are necessary as well for the body as the soul," as they are appointed in the following parts of the service, namely, the Collects and Litany! Dr. Bisse.

Having all repeated our Creed together, and thereby given good proof that we are members of the catholick Church, and such as have a right to join in the prayers thereof, we now prepare ourselves to pray. And since salutations have ever been the expressions and badges of that mutual charity, without which we are not fit to pray, therefore we begin with an ancient form of salutation, taken out of holy Scripture: the minister commencing salutes the people with, "The Lord be with you," Ruth ii. 4; Ps. cxxii. 8; 2 Thess. iii. 16: and they return it with a like prayer, "And with thy spirit," 2 Tim. iv. 22. Which words have been of early use in the Christian Liturgies: and indeed the phrase is the very words of St. Paul; and St. John forbids us to say to any heretick "God speed," 2 John ver. 10, 11. But when the minister hath heard every one in the congregation repeat his faith, and seen by their standing up at it, a testimony of their assent to it, he can now safely salute them all as brethren and members of the true Church: and surely, as difference in religion creates great animosities, so agreement in one faith is an excellent means to beget charity, and to make minister and people heartily pray for one another: the people are going to pray, which they cannot do without God's help, and therefore the minister prays that "the Lord may be with them," to assist them in the duty, according to that gracious promise of our Saviour, that when two or three are met to pray, He will be with them, Matt. xviii. 20. And since the minister prays for all the people, and is their mouth to God, they desire he may, heartily and devoutly, offer up these prayers in their behalf, saying, "The Lord be with thy spirit." Dean Comber.

By a man's spirit in Scripture phrase is frequently meant the man himself. So that the people do in reality answer thus, May God be with thee, as thou desirest He may be with us, in the oblation of our joint prayers. In this sense the word is used in the place, whence this form is borrowed, 2 Tim. iv. 22. Dr. Bennet.

Till every person has finished the repetition of the Creed, and there is silence in the whole congregation, the minister should not pronounce the words, "The Lord be with you." These words ought also to be pronounced by the minister in a standing posture, they being addressed to the people. And after the people have returned their answer, the minister should still stand and pronounce these words, "Let us pray:" and then give the people time enough to kneel down, that there may not be the least noise, and every person may be perfectly composed, and ready to join, when the minister begins the prayers.

And because these words, "The Lord be with you," and the reply of the people, "And with thy spirit;" and those also, "Let us pray," are all of them directed and spoken, not to Almighty God, but only to men; namely, by the minister and people alternately to each other; therefore care should be taken, that a difference be made in the tone of voice, between these short forms of mutual compellation, and the prayers themselves. Dr. Bennet.

[t] — all devoutly kneeling;] When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down: because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

So generally was this practice adopted and approved in the first ages of the Christian Church, that some of the zealous and holy fathers did not hesitate to rebuke even those who stood during prayers. But if standing was considered an improper posture, what would they think, were they to come into the congregations of modern Christians, and see the greater part of them sitting? They would undoubtedly conclude, either that the spirit of Christianity was materially altered, or that its influence was but little known amongst us. Certainly the religion of the Bible does not consist in the mere external observance of forms; yet it must be allowed, that those forms, which the Bible itself prescribes for general use, ought to be generally adopted: and kneeling in prayer is one of these. Rogers.

[u] Let us pray.] These words are often used in ancient Liturgies, as well as in ours, and are an excitation to prayer, to call back our wandering, and recollect our scattered thoughts, and to awaken our devotion, bidding us mind what we are about; namely, now when we are about to pray, to pray indeed, that is, heartily and earnestly. The deacon, in ancient services, was wont to call upon the people often, "Let us pray vehemently;" nay, "still more vehemently;" and the same vehemency and earnest devotion, which the manner of these old Liturgies breathed, does our Church in her Liturgy call for, in these words, "Let us pray;" that is, with all the earnestness and vehemency that we may, that our prayers may be such as St. James speaks of, active lively-spirited prayers; for these are they that avail much with God. And there is none of us but must think it needful thus to be called upon and awakened; for thoughts will be wandering, and devotion will abate, and scarce hold out to the prayer's end, though it be a short one; so that well said the old hermit, whom Melancthon mentions in his discourse on prayer, "There is nothing harder than to pray."

These words, "Let us pray," as they are an incitation to prayer in general, so they may seem to be sometimes an invitation to another form of petitioning, as in the Litany and other places; it being as much as to say, Let us collect our alternate supplications by versicles and answers into collects or prayers. In the Latin Liturgies, their rubricks especially, "Preces" and "Orationes" seem to be thus distinguished; that "Preces," or supplications, were those alternate petitions, where the people answered by responsive versicles; "Oratio," or prayer, was that which was said by the priest alone, the people only answering "Amen." Bp. Sparrow.

[v] Lord, have mercy upon us, &c.] Being unclean like those lepers in Luke xvii. 11, 12, before we come near, we begin to cry, "Lord, have mercy upon us:" which form is taken out of David's Psalms, where it is sometimes repeated twice together, Ps. vi. 2; li. 1; cxxiii. 3: to which the Christian Church hath added a third, namely, "Christ, have mercy upon us;" that so it might be a short litany or supplication to every Person in the blessed Trinity. We have offended every Person, and are to pray to every Person, and therefore we beg mercy of them all. And indeed this, "Lord, have mercy upon us," (spoken by the Latin Church in the original Greek of the New Testament, "Kyrie eleeson," but much more prudently translated by ours into English, Abp. Secker,) is of great antiquity, both in the Eastern and the Western Churches. Dean Comber.

This is not only a confession, but a short Litany: as it was called by the ancients. And it hath this resem-

OUR Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

blance with our larger Litany: for as in that we call on each Person of the Trinity by a distinct invocation, crying, first, "O God, the Father of heaven," secondly, "O God, the Son, Redeemer of the world," thirdly, "O God, the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, have mercy upon us miserable sinners:" so in this supplication thrice repeated we are taught to pray, saying, "Lord," the Father, "Christ," or Lord, the Son, "Lord," the Holy Ghost, "have mercy upon us." This threefold repetition of the words is with regard to the three Persons in the Trinity, to which it is thus thrice separately addressed. In the Greek Church the same words, "Lord, have mercy upon us," were thrice repeated: but the Latin Church, which borrowed it from the Greek, as appears by their still retaining the Greek words, "Kyrie eleeson," in their Liturgy, changed the second versicle into "Christe eleeson." Dr. Bisse.

It may be observed, that this earnest and humble supplication to the blessed Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, was usually in old services, and so is in ours, set immediately before the Lord's Prayer, as a preparation to it; and very fitly: for as we cannot devise a more suitable preparation to prayer than this humble petition of mercy, and acknowledgment of our own misery; so is there no prayer, whereto greater preparation is required, than that divine prayer sanctified by the sacred lips of our Lord, wherein we say, "Our Father, &c." Clement advises us, when we say this prayer, to be careful to prepare ourselves, so that we may in some manner be worthy of this divine adoption to be the sons of God; lest, if we unworthily call Him Father, He upbraid us as He did the Jews, Mal. i. 6, "If I be your Father, where is mine honour?" The sanctity of the Son is the honour of the Father. Indeed it is so great an honour to call God "Our Father," 1 John iii. 1, that we had need with all humility beg pardon of his majesty, before we venture upon so high a title. Therefore our mother the Church hath been careful to prepare us for this divine prayer, sometimes by a confession of our sins and absolution, as at Morning and Evening Service, but most commonly by this short Litany; first teaching us to bewail our unworthiness, and pray for mercy, and then with an humble boldness to look up to heaven, and call God "Our Father," and beg farther blessings of Him. Bp. Sparrow.

This most humble and pathetick Litany, directed to the blessed Trinity, is generally throughout the Liturgy placed before the Lord's Prayer, as a proper introduction to it; the Church thereby seeming to intimate two things: first, as to the object of our worship; that this prayer, and by consequence our other prayers, of which this ought to be the pattern, is to be directed to the Trinity; and that by the word "Father" in the preface to it, not the first person alone, but the other two are equally included; for we pray not, saying, "The Father," but "Our Father." The second thing intimated is, as to the manner of our worship: that we ought with all humility to approach his majesty, acknowledging that it is through his mercy we presume to call Him "Father:" a name, which the Jews never used in prayer, having "received the spirit of bondage to fear," Rom. viii. 15; whereas we Christians have received at our baptism "the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." And for this reason, the catechumens in the ancient Church, though embracing the faith and taught therein, yet being unbaptized and so unqualified to call God "Father," were not allowed to be present at the Lord's Prayer, that prayer being then used only at the Communion service, which began after the catechumens were dismissed. Dr. Bisse.

The clerk and people are here to take notice, not to repeat the last of the versicles, "Lord, have mercy upon us," after the minister. In the end of the Litany indeed they ought to do it, because there they are directed to say all the three versicles distinctly after him; each of them being repeated in the Common Prayer Book, namely, first in a Roman letter for the priest, and then in an Italick, which denotes the people's response. But in the daily Morning and Evening Service, in the office for Solemnization of Matrimony, in those of the Visitation of the Sick, for the Burial of the Dead, for the Churching of Women, and in the Commination, where these versicles are single, and only the second printed in an Italick character, there they are to be repeated alternately, and not by way of repetition: so that none but the second versicle, "Christ, have mercy upon us," comes to the people's turn, the first and last belonging to the minister. Wheatly.

[x] Lord, have mercy upon us, Christ, have mercy upon us.] This is in different letters, to shew, that according to the ancient custom the people use to answer the minister as at the end of the Litany. And it is to be noted, that the book does not every where injoin and prescribe every little order, what should be said or done; but takes it for granted, that people are acquainted with such common things, and things always used already. Bp. Overall.

[y] — Clerks,] By the clerks in this rubrick (which was first inserted in the second book of King Edward) I suppose were meant such persons as were appointed at the beginning of the Reformation, to attend the incumbent in his performance of the offices: and such as are still in some cathedral and collegiate churches, which have lay-clerks (as they are called, being not always ordained) to look out the lessons, name the anthem, set the psalms, and the like: of which sort I take our parish clerks to be, though we have now seldom more than one to a church. Wheatly. Parish clerks were heretofore real clerks, of whom every minister had at least one, to assist under him in the celebration of divine offices. Dr. Burn.

The word "clerk" is but once mentioned; and that is in the office of Matrimony. Collis.

[z] — shall say the Lord's Prayer] Though this Prayer was said before, namely, after the Absolution; yet that, as we observed, was a distinct office of itself, and separated from this, on which we are now entering, by the interposal of two distinct offices: namely, of praise, as in the Psalms; and of hearing, as in the Lessons. And therefore all now following the Creed being a distinct office, the insertion of the Lord's Prayer here in the beginning serves, as to render it perfect, so also to distinguish it. Dr. Bisse.

As before we subjoined the Lord's Prayer to our confession, to obtain the confirmation of our pardon; so now we prefix it to our requests, as a summary of our desires. And surely saying it again at such a distance, and with so different a view, cannot be thought a vain repetition. Abp. Secker.

We are about to conclude this part of the Morning Service with several important and solemn requests to Almighty God. But after what model can we better form these requests, than that which is here prescribed? The repetition of this form, which bears the royal stamp of divine authority, may probably be complained of by some. But the fervency of our devotion will not be at all abated by the frequent use of it, if our minds are alive to its real excellencies: nay, it may be fairly presumed, that to have this pattern before us, which our Saviour Himself hath shewed us, will rather tend to animate our souls, and lead us to urge our petitions with renewed zeal, than be any impediment to our intercourse with the Father at the throne of grace. Rogers.

[a] Then the Priest standing up] The priest in the holy offices is sometimes appointed to kneel, sometimes to stand. The reason of this is as follows. The priest or minister, being a man of like infirmities with the rest of the congregation, a sinner, and so standing in need of grace and pardon, as well as the rest, in all confessions of sins and penitential prayers, such as the Litany is, is directed to beg his pardon and grace upon his knees. He being moreover a priest, or minister of the most high God, that hath received from Him an office and authority, sometimes "stands," to signify "that his office" and authority. Which office of his may be considered, either in relation to God, or the people. As it relates to God, so he is God's ambassador, 2 Cor. v. 20; to whom is committed the "ministry of reconciliation," in which respect he is to "teach, baptize, consecrate the holy Eucharist, bless and absolve the penitent;" and in all these acts of authority, which he does in the name and person of Christ, he is to "stand." As his office relates to the people, so he is in their stead, for them appointed by God to offer up gifts and sacrifices to God, particularly the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, together with their prayers; so we read, Heb. v. 1, "every high priest, or priest," (so the words are promiscuously used, Heb. viii. 3, 4,) "taken from among men, is ordained for men," or in their stead, "in things pertaining to God, to offer up both gifts and sacrifices for sins." Which definition of a priest belongs not only to a priest of the Law, but also to a priest or minister of the Gospel. So that the ministers of the Gospel are appointed by God to offer up the sacrifices of prayers and praises of the Church for the people, thus to stand betwixt God and them; and to shew this his office, in these services he is directed to "stand." By this we may see what advantage it is to the people, that their prayers are offered up by a priest. For God, having appointed him to this office, will certainly assist and accept his own constitution: and though the minister be wicked or indevout in his prayers, yet God, that will punish this neglect in himself, will certainly accept of his office for the people. Bp. Sparrow.

[b] — shall say,] Before the minister begins to pray alone for the people, they are first to join with him according to the primitive way of praying in some short versicles and responsals taken chiefly out of David's psalms, and containing the sum of all the following collects; the first, "O Lord, shew thy mercy, &c.," Ps. lxxxv. 7, being a petition for mercy and salvation, answers to the Sunday collect: the second, "O Lord, save the king," Ps. xx. 9, (according to the Greek translation,) for a blessing upon his majesty, answers to the collects for the king and his family: the third, "Endue thy ministers, &c.," Ps. cxxxii. 9, and the fourth, "O Lord, save thy people, &c.," Ps. xxviii. 9, for the success of ministers and the prosperity of their people, these two answer the collect for the clergy and people: the fifth, "Give peace in our time, &c.," 1 Chron. xxii. 9, for safety from our enemies, answers the morning and evening collects for peace and safety: the sixth, "O God, make clean, &c.," Ps. li. 10, 11, for the help of God's Spirit, answers the morning and evening collects for grace. And thus we have the sum of all the ensuing prayers, which minister and people must devoutly join in by this alternate way of responses, to fit them the better for the following collects. Dean Comber.

It appears that the suiting of these scriptural sentences to the prayers following could not have been the intention of the original compilers of our service, because some of the prayers, namely, those for the king, for the royal family, and for the clergy and people, were added afterwards at different times: so that these sentences were not designed as compendiums of their respective prayers, but rather the prayers were added as paraphrases on these sentences. The result is a natural harmony of correspondence between them: so that the different parts of the service hang together, and answer to each other. Dr. Bisse.

These versicles and all others elsewhere, as already observed, though pronounced vocally by the minister and people alternately, are notwithstanding to be mentally joined in throughout by them both. Dr. Bennet. Indeed otherwise the sense is not perfect. For each versicle and answer being connected by the conjunction "and," or, as in one instance, by "because," they are but a continuation of the same petition, though put into two sentences, and appointed respectively for the minister and the people. Dr. Bisse.

[c] And make thy chosen people joyful.] Namely, the laity, who are through Christ God's "chosen people." Dr. Bennet. This petition, as well as the two following, is taken from the Psalms; Ps. cxxxii. 9, and xxviii. 9: and it is plain that the words "thy chosen people," or as in the original, "the saints" and "thy people" and "thine inheritance," all mean precisely the same thing; being applied by the Psalmist to the people of the Jews, and by us to the whole body of Christians; for by these and such titles both the one and the other are usually distinguished from heathens, or unbelievers, throughout the sacred writings. Waldo.

¶ Then shall follow three Collects[e]; the first of the Day[f], which shall be the same that is appointed at the Communion; the second

[d] Give peace in our time, O Lord. Because there is none other &c.] The meaning of this petition is, that whatever help we have besides, we look upon it as nothing, without that of the Almighty: whom therefore we beg, when we are in peace, to continue it, by restraining such as would disturb it; and when we are not, to restore it, by turning the hearts, or overthrowing the attempts, of those who have infringed it. Abp. Secker.

[e] Then shall follow three Collects;] Our Saviour Himself taught and commended the frequent use of brief forms of prayer; and the primitive Christians were wont to pray in that manner, from whom these Collects were derived; and they are called "Collects," because they are collected generally out of the Epistle and Gospel, and because they are a very brief collection of all things necessary for soul and body; or, if we respect the phrase of the ancients, because they were repeated in publick when the people were collected or gathered together: and the form of them is, that they generally are directed to the Father, through the Son, and usually they begin with the motive inducing us to ask, and then mention some great or comprehensive blessing desired, concluding with the ground of our hope, that we shall obtain it through Jesus Christ. They are most of them above a thousand years old, having been used in the Western Church from the time of St. Gregory the Great, and many of them before, and are so plain, they will need no explication. Deon Comber.

Though it hath been a constant practice from the beginning, for the people to bear a vocal part by their suffrages and answers in the publick service of God, which for that very reason was by the ancients called Common Prayer, yet for the more renewing and strengthening of their earnestness and importunity, they desired that both they and their devotions should in the close be recommended to God by the priest, they all adjoining their assent, and saying Amen to it.

As to the particular Collects in our Liturgy, they being of so frequent use, and so considerable a part of the devotion of our Church, it may be convenient to observe as follows:

1. Concerning their authors and their antiquity. Our Church endeavouring to preserve, not only the spirit but the very forms, as much as may be, and in a known tongue, of ancient primitive devotion, hath retained these very Collects, the most of them, among other precious remains of it: for we find by ancient testimony that they were composed or ordered, either by St. Ambrose, Gelasius, or Gregory the Great.

2. For the object of these Collects, they are directed to God in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord; for so usually they conclude, and very fitly: for Christ is indeed the altar upon which all our prayers are to be offered, that they may be acceptable: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you," John xvi. 23. And so it was the custom of old. But yet we may observe, that a few Collects are directed to Christ, and in the Litany some supplications to the Holy Ghost, besides that precatory hymn of "Veni Creator" in the Book of Ordination; and that some Collects, especially for great festivals, conclude with this acknowledgment, "that Christ with the Father and the Holy Ghost liveth and reigneth one God world without end." And this seems to be done, to testify what the Scripture warrants, that, although for more congruity we in the general course of our prayers go to the Father by the Son, yet we may also invocate both the Son and the Holy Ghost; and that, while we call upon one, we equally worship and glorify all three together.

3. For their form and proportion, as they are not one long-continued prayer, but diverse short ones, they have many advantages to gain esteem: the practice of the Jews of old, in whose prescribed devotions we find a certain number of several prayers or collects to be said together; the example of our Lord in prescribing a short form; the judgment and practice of the ancient Christians in their Liturgies; and St. Chrysostom, among others, commends highly short and frequent prayers with little distances between; and lastly, they are most convenient for keeping away coldness, distraction, and illusions from our devotion; and that, not only in respect of the minister, but the people also, whose minds and affections become hereby more erect, close, and earnest, by the oftener breathing out of their hearty concurrence, and saying all of them Amen together, at the end of each Collect.

4. The matter of them is most excellent and remarkable. It consists usually of two parts: an humble acknowledgment of the adorable perfection and goodness of God, and a congruous petition for some benefit from Him. The first is seen not only in the Collects for special festivals or benefits, but in those also that are more general; for even in such, what find we in the beginning of them, but some or other of these and the like acknowledgments? "That God is Almighty, everlasting, full of goodness and pity, the strength, refuge, and protector of all that trust in Him, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy, no continuing in safety or being: that such is our weakness and frailty, that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves, to do any good, to stand upright, cannot but fall; that we put no trust in any thing that we do, but lean only upon the help of his heavenly grace; that He is the author and giver of all good things, from whom it comes that we have an hearty desire to pray, or do Him any true or laudable service; that He is always more ready to hear than we to pray, and to give more than we desire or deserve, having prepared for them that love Him such good things as pass man's understanding."

These, and the like expressions, can be no other than the breathings of the primitive Christians, who with all self-denial made the grace of God their hope, refuge, protection, petition, and profession against all proud heretieks and enemies of it: and the petitions which follow these humble and pious acknowledgments and praises, are very proper, holy, and good. Bp. Sparrow.

The people here should remember, that these Collects and the following prayers are to be vocally pronounced by the minister alone, though the people are to join mentally therein. The congregation should therefore be careful not to disturb each other by uttering their prayers in an audible manner, contrary to the design and rule of the Church. Dr. Bennet.

[f] — the first of the Day,] As on every day or season there is something more particularly recommended to our meditations by the Church; so the first Collect reflects chiefly upon that, though sometimes more generally upon the whole matter of the Epistle and Gospel, for Peace; the third for Grace to live well[g]. And the two last Collects shall never alter, but daily be said at Morning Prayer throughout all the Year, as followeth; all kneeling.

desiring inspiration, strength, and protection from God Almighty in the practice and pursuance of what is set before us. Bp. Sparrow.

Besides the Lord's day, which is the weekly memorial of all God's goodness to us and our duty to Him, we have annual ones, to celebrate, not only the principal parts of the history of Christ, but also the holy lives and deaths of his chief followers, who are mentioned in the New Testament. For, as "the righteous are to be had in everlasting remembrance," Ps. cxii. 6; and the Epistle to the Hebrews particularly directed the first Christians to "remember them which had had the rule over them, who had spoken unto them the word of God," Heb. xiii. 7; as they did accordingly pay distinguished honours to the memories of the apostles, evangelists, and martyrs; and as the Church of Rome, which had gone much too far in this matter, would notwithstanding have had a great advantage against us, if we had neglected it entirely: we do therefore on the days, which bear their names, read portions of holy writ relating to them; return thanks to God for their labours and example; and beg, that we may profit suitably by them. This then makes a considerable portion of the variable Collects. The rest are appointed, one for each Sunday and week in the year. And the intention, however imperfectly executed, must have been, that sometimes praying more explicitly for this grace or mercy, sometimes for that, we may be likelier to obtain, through God's goodness, all that are needful for us.

The objection that our service is taken from the Popish affects chiefly the Collects. But those of ours, which are the same with theirs, are mostly derived from Prayer Books, brought over in the days of that Pope, by whose means our Saxon ancestors were converted to Christianity, above 1100 years ago: and they were old ones then; much older than the main errors of popery. However, partly at, and partly since, the Reformation, such of the Collects in those books, as wanted and deserved it, have been carefully corrected; many, that were thought improper, quite removed; and new ones framed in their stead. But why should those be changed, which are both faultless in themselves, and recommended by venerable antiquity? Abp. Secker.

Concerning the particular Collects, see below, in connexion with the Epistles and Gospels.

[g] — the second for Peace; the third for Grace to live well.] Peace and grace comprehend all temporal and spiritual blessings, and therefore are to be the subject of our daily prayers. Dean Comber.

[h] — for Peace.] The Greek Church prayed thrice for peace in the daily service: the Latin twice, as we also do in forms very ancient and comprehensive. Dean Comber. This prayer is translated from the Latin, being taken out of the Sacramentary of Gregory the Great. Dr. Nicholls.

Peace is used in Scripture for all earthly blessings, because it is the mother and the nurse of them all; it is the most comprehensive benefit on earth, and the type of heaven; wherefore the old Christians followed after it in their lives, and begged it in their prayers; and to encourage us to pray for it, our "God" is represented here as the "author of peace," Isa. xlv. 7, and the "lover of concord," Ps. cxxxiii. 1. He keeps us in peace, and loves us when we live in peace together, He makes us have peace from without, and delights when we have concord within, and so no doubt will be well

The second Collect, for Peace[h].

O God, who art the author of peace[i] and lover of concord, in knowledge of whom standeth our pleased to hear us pray for that which He is so able to give, and so delighted with wherever He finds it. Dean Comber.

1 Cor. xiv. 33. Isa. xlv. 7. Ps. cxxxiii. 1. 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

Peace was our Lord's legacy: "My peace I leave with you." He prayed for peace, paid for peace, wept for it, bled for it. Peace should therefore be dear to us; all kinds of peace, outward peace and all; for if there be not a quiet and peaceable life, there will hardly be godliness and honesty, 1 Tim. ii. 2. Bp. Sparrow.

In this Collect we beseech God, "in the knowledge of whom standeth our" hope of "eternal life" hereafter, and "whose service," in proportion as we improve it, gives us here "perfect freedom" from the tyranny of sin, and the stings of an evil conscience, that He would likewise so "defend us in all assaults of our" outward "enemies, that trusting in Him, we may not fear them." Thus we embolden ourselves from the consideration of his greater mercies, to hope for the less: in imitation of the Apostle's reasoning, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Rom. viii. 32. Abp. Secker.

[i] O God, who art the author of peace &c.] It may be observed with respect to the form of our Collects, that the preface is frequently addressed to God with regard to some such particular attribute, as is a ground both for the nature of the petition, and for our hopes of acceptance. Thus, to instance in the standing Collects for the daily service, when we pray for peace, we invoke God as "the author of peace and lover of concord:" when for protection, as an "Almighty and everlasting God:" when for the King, as "King of kings, and Lord of lords:" when for the defence of the Church, that is, the whole congregation of people under their Bishops and Curates, among and from all her enemies, a work of the greatest power, yea, a standing miracle, we say, "Almighty God, who alone workest great marvels."

Thus in many others we shall find these prefaces no improper repetitions; but generally varying with the matter of the prayer, and relating to, and being of a piece with it. But, as in some few Collects the divine attribute mentioned in the preface may have no direct reference to the matter of the petition, yet it always serves to strengthen the faith of the petitioner. For instance, suppose it were God's goodness, as, "O most gracious God," or his power, as, "O Almighty God;" both these serve to strengthen our hopes of acceptance, whatever our petition be; God's goodness, by certifying that He is willing to help us; his power, by certifying that He is able to do so. And thus the preface to our Lord's Prayer relates, not to the particular petitions contained in it, but rather to all prayer in general; intimating to us God's readiness to hear us, whatever we ask, because He is "our Father;" and his ability to grant it to us, because "He is in heaven." Dr. Bisse.

These prefaces then give life to the petition, and to the faith of the petitioner; and so carry with them great usefulness and beauty. On the other hand the conclusions of our prayers generally run in the same form; namely, "through Jesus Christ our Lord," or, what amounts to the same thing, "through his merits and mediation," or the like expressions: which is done in obedience to the command of Christ Himself. Dr. Bisse. And thus we are continually reminded to lift up our hearts to Him, and to rest our faith in his merits and mediation, on which all our hopes and expectations from God intirely depend. Wheatly.

[k] The third Collect, for Grace.] This follows the Collect for peace, for God hath joined them in Scripture, 2 Cor. i. 2; Gal. i. 3; and we must not separate them in our devotions, because grace alone makes peace true, beneficial, and lasting. The former Collect is for freedom from the evil of punishment; this from the evil of sin. Dean Comber. We here pray "for grace to live well:" for if there be not peace with God by an holy life, there will never be peace in the world. No man can so much as think a good thought, much less lead a godly life, without the grace of God: therefore this is also prayed for, together with God's protection for the day or night following. Bp. Sparrow.

[l] O Lord, our heavenly Father, &c.] The very name of grace shews that it is the free gift of God: of Him therefore we must ask it. James i. 5. And the Church hath selected such attributes of his, as are most proper to quicken our hopes of obtaining it. We are frail creatures on earth and need it exceedingly, but He is the "Lord our heavenly Father," and so both loves and pities us: we are weak, but He is "Almighty," and therefore able to help us: our span of life is measured by days and nights, but He is an "everlasting God," always the same without any change, and therefore ever ready to hear us: and as a further ground of our hope, that He will grant us grace to defend us in this day, we are taught thankfully to own that it is He "who safely" kept us in soul and body the night past, and "brought us" intire in both "to the beginning of this day;" and as He hath begun it with his mercy, we must begin it with his praise, Lam. iii. 22, 23. Dean Comber.

This Collect is not taken from the Roman, but principally from the Greek service, as others of our prayers besides are: the compilers of our Liturgy prudently extracting from both, what was proper to enrich and add authority to the work, in which they were engaged. And it begs that protection of God more especially for the present day, which the former begs in general: but above all, "that we may fall into no sin" even undesignedly, much less "run into any kind of danger" of it wilfully, but "do always what is righteous in his sight." Abp. Secker.

[m] — the beginning of this day;] The natural day of twenty-four hours is divided into two parts; the beginning or former part, and the night or the latter part. So that the word "beginning" in this place must not be understood too strictly, as if it signified only the daybreak, or the former part of the morning. Nor must the word "night" in the third Collect for evening prayer be understood too strictly, as if it signified only that portion of time, when it is dark. Accordingly we find the Scriptures also speaking much after the same manner, saying, "The evening and the morning were the first day," Gen. i. 5: for, as Bp. Patrick observes upon the place, In the Hebrew language Evening and Morning signify a whole day. Dr. Bennet.

Of these two Collects, namely, "for peace" and "for grace," as they are intitled and distinguished, the former comprises all temporal goods, such as are "necessary for the body;" the latter all spiritual goods, such as are "necessary for the soul." And in this sense and latitude they were understood by the compilers of our Liturgy; who therefore closed the morning and evening service here, adding only the prayer of St. Chrysostom and the blessing. Thus they thought they answered the purpose of assembling together, as stated in the Exhortation; which was to "ask those things which are requisite and necessary as well for the body as the soul." Dr. Bisse.

These Collects, both in the morning and in the evening service, were plainly intended to be constantly used every day: and though few of us have an opportunity of doing this in publick, yet we may all use them so in private, making them a part of our secret devotions. And indeed how can we so properly begin and end the day, as with these pious addresses to our great Creator and Preserver? how so well imprint in our minds an humble and grateful sense of our dependence on Him, who is the Giver of all good gifts, both temporal and spiritual? Long forms of prayer may be irksome and tedious; and many persons have neither time nor inclination to use them. But surely no Christian can plead any good excuse for neglecting to employ at least some few minutes of the day in the use of those excellent prayers which our Church prescribes: which are the more excellent for being short; and are infinitely more useful and edifying than all other devotional compositions whatsoever. Waldo.

[n] In Quires and Places where they sing, here followeth the Anthem.] The original of which is probably derived from the very first Christians: for Pliny has recorded that it was the custom for them in his time to meet upon a fixed day before light, and to sing a hymn, in parts or by turns, to Christ as God. The practice was soon established throughout the Church, and has universally obtained ever since. Wheatly. The Church thinks this the most proper place for singing, where there is a sort of division in the service. For the foregoing Collects respect ourselves: those following respect others. If therefore there be any singing before the conclusion of the service, this is the place where it should be practised, and not after the second lesson, as is sometimes done; both because after the second lesson a proper hymn or psalm is appointed, which is interrupted by a singing psalm coming between, and so far the rubrick is not conformed to; and also because, this being the time specially appointed for singing, to sing at this time, if at all, is to conform to the appointment of the Church. Dr. Bisse, Wheatly. Concerning paro-

[o] Then these five Prayers following] The three first of these prayers were not in our Liturgy at its first establishment, as already intimated. See p. 38, note m. Two of them, namely, the first and last, were inserted by order of Queen Elizabeth, being framed from Gregory's Sacramentary, nearly word for word: the second was inserted by order of King James the First, who was the first protestant prince that was married and had children. They were all three, till the last review, printed at the end of the Litany; but were read in the same place or manner, as they are now expressly appointed. Although added afterwards in the service, they are well connected with the preceding Collects. For peace is the great and summary blessing to us as men, the subjects of civil government: and grace is the same to us as Christians, the members of a spiritual society, that is, the Church. Now, because the former blessing is conveyed to us by the wise government of our temporal rulers, there follows a prayer for the King; and because the latter is derived to us by the administration of our spiritual governors, there follows a prayer for the Bishops and Clergy, and the charge committed to them. Dr. Bisse.

[p] A Prayer for the Queen's Majesty.] The supreme King of all the world is God, by whom all mortal kings reign; and since his authority sets them up, and his power only can defend them, therefore all mankind, as it were by common consent, have agreed to pray to God for their kings. It is well known that the Heathens made sacrifices, prayers, and vows for them; and Scripture records that the Persian kings desired to be prayed for at the temple of Jerusalem, Ezra vi. 10, as the Roman emperors did also afterward: the Jews had special forms of prayer for their kings, Ps. xx. and Ps. lxxii: but we Christians are expressly injoined to pray for kings, 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; and all the ancient Fathers, Liturgies, and Councils are full of evidences that this was done daily: "We celebrate daily prayers to our God, in every one of our churches, for your empire," saith a Council (in St. Ambrose's time) to the emperors. And our old Saxon Councils do frequently decree this shall be done. And St. Paul shews it is the people's interest, as well as the princes'; for we pray that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives under them in all godliness and honesty, and in their peace we shall have peace also. As for this form, it was made by the first Reformers of this Church of England, which is famous for its untainted loyalty above all churches in the world, as both the practice of its true sons, and this excellent prayer do shew. Dean Comber.

The duties of the royal station being very important and difficult, and the hazards of erring and sinning in it many and great, we therefore pray Him, who is "the only Ruler" of the heart and conduct "of princes," and "beholds" the state of "all the dwellers" in their dominions every where "on earth, to replenish our Sovereign," both "with the graces and the gifts" needful for her: "to grant her long to live in health and wealth," that is, prosperity; as we pray God, in the Litany, "to deliver us in all time of our tribulation, in all time of our wealth;" "to strengthen her, that she may overcome all her enemies," all that wish ill to her or her people; and finally to bestow on her "everlasting felicity." Abp. Secker.

[q] Our most gracious Sovereign Lady, Queen Victoria;] Whom we name in the office, as the ancients were wont to do both in the Eastern and Western Churches. Dean Comber. When the emperors became Christian, they were particularly named in the Liturgies, with titles expressing the dearest affection and the most honourable respect. Wheatly.

The whole of this prayer is happily adapted to that spirit of loyalty, which our Church on all occasions recommends; and no person, void of that spirit can join in it without gross hypocrisy. The language is remarkably noble and sublime: the introductory part grand and solemn: and the several petitions that follow are extremely pertinent and proper. May God give us all grace to use it with sincerity and devotion; and to shew in the whole course of our lives and conversations that loyalty, which is one distinguishing mark of the disciples of Christ. Waldo.

[r] —that she may vanquish and overcome all her enemies;] This and similar passages in our Liturgy have been sometimes misrepresented, as recommending aggrandisement and conquest. On Christian principles the Church must presuppose, that Christian princes will engage in no wars, which are not undertaken in just and necessary defence. She knows, that all war, excepting in cases of unjust aggression from abroad, or unnecessary resistance to the measures of government at home, is equally repugnant both to the letter and spirit of the Christian religion. In her offices day by day she prays for peace. In her Litany, or general supplication, thrice a week, she deprecates war, and from "battle and murder" intreats deliverance. Whenever she prays for a blessing on the arms of the sovereign, and for victory over all her enemies, she must be understood to pray for the ends of victory: the preservation of the lawful and just rights of her majesty and of these realms, deliverance from the power of enemies, and the restoration of quietness and peace. Shepherd.

in conformity to that ancient desire of the Persian emperor. Ezra vi. 10; that the Jewish priests would pray for the life of the king and his sons; and among the Romans the heirs of the empire were prayed for as well as the emperor, as Tacitus relates: the primitive Christians also prayed for the imperial family; and the canons of old Councils, both at home and abroad, do injoin it: and our Reformers have composed an excellent form to do it by. Dean Comber.

Because the royal family are the future hopes of the publick, and in the mean while their whole behaviour is of very great consequence to it; we apply more distinctly than the ancient Church did, but surely with reason, to "the Fountain of all goodness," who therefore is able to supply the branches, as well as the root, for such blessings on every branch, especially the principal by name, as their condition requires. Abp. Secker.

But let us not suppose that we have discharged our duty by only praying for them. Something more is certainly required of us: for if we are bound to honour our sovereign, we ought surely to pay a suitable regard and reverence to those, that are so nearly related to her: not to listen to every idle and scandalous report, which malice may propagate concerning them; but to think, and speak, of them with affection and respect; to admire and applaud their virtues; and to conceal, rather than publish, their failings. Waldo.

[t] A Prayer for the Clergy and people.] Holy Scripture is full of prayers for the Church of God, and particularly for the governors and pastors thereof, and all the ancient Liturgies have peculiar petitions for the bishops and the clergy, as well as for the congregations committed to their charge; Synesius, a primitive Bishop, writes to his clergy to pray for him in all their churches; and our Saxon Councils ordain daily prayers shall be made for the bishop and for the Church of God; which order we observe in this ancient form. Dean Comber.

The Church, for which this prayer is offered, is excellently described by "bishops, curates, and the people committed to their charge." By curates here are not meant stipendiaries, as now it is used to signify, but all those, whether parsons or vicars, to whom the bishop, who is the chief pastor under Christ, hath committed the cure of souls of some part of his flock, and who are thus the bishop's curates. The bishop with these curates, and the flock or congregation committed to their charge, make up a Church. For according to our Saviour's definition, a Church is a "shepherd, and his sheep that will hear his voice:" to which St. Cyprian's description agrees, "The Church is a congregation of believers united to their bishop, and a flock adhering to their shepherd; whence you ought to know," says he, "that the Church is in the bishop, and the bishop in the Church, and they that are not with the bishop, are not in the Church." Now because the bishops are the guides and governors of the Church, so that all acts of the Church are ordered and directed by them, as the same St. Cyprian says; therefore the custom of the Church always was, and not without reason, to pray particularly by name for their bishop, as they did for the king.

To make this Church, to gather it from among infidels and heathens, and to preserve it from all her subtile and potent enemies, "by the healthful Spirit of his grace," is an act of as great power, and a greater miracle of love, than to create the world. "Although thou beest wonderful, O Lord, in all thy works, yet thou art believed to be most wonderful in thy works of piety and mercy," says St. Augustin: and therefore the preface is suitable, "Almighty God, who alone workest great marvels, send down upon thy Church, bishops, curates, and the congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of thy grace." Bp. Sparrow.

In this prayer we beseech Almighty God, that He, "who alone worketh great marvels;" who hath in all ages marvellously protected his Church against the devil and wicked men; who endued his apostles with marvellous and miraculous gifts on the day of Pentecost, and by their means many others; who doth and ever will produce marvellous effects on the hearts of believers by the ministry of his word and sacraments; and who only can do such things; would "send down the healthful," that is, the healing, strengthening, and saving "Spirit of his grace, on all bishops and curates;" persons to whom the cure or care of souls is intrusted: for this the word "curates" signifies throughout the Prayer Book, not merely those persons, who assist the proper incumbent; and likewise on "all congregations committed to their charge." And we further beseech Him, not only to bestow on them at first good dispositions; but, "that they may truly" and lastingly "please him," to "pour upon them his continual blessing," like a kindly "dew" descending from above. "For neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase," 1 Cor. iii. 7. Abp. Secker.

[u] — the healthful Spirit of thy grace;] The Spirit of God's grace is, according to the Scripture idiom, God's gracious Spirit. And is therefore called healthful, because He brings health, that is, holiness, to the soul. Dr. Bennet.

As the influences of the Holy Spirit, in a greater or less degree, are absolutely necessary to be experienced by every individual that would be a Christian indeed: so they are more especially by those, who are appointed to teach the way of salvation to others. For he that teacheth, and he that learneth, must be assisted by the same master: they must be renewed by the same grace, and derive their spiritual health from the same source. We acknowledge this, when we pray, that God would send down upon his ministers, and the congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of his grace. Rogers.

[x] — our Advocate and Mediator, Jesus Christ.] An advocate is one that pleads the cause of another in a court of justice. Therefore Jesus Christ is called our Advocate, because He pleads our cause with his offended heavenly Father, and causes our pardon to be sealed, and our persons, accused by our sins, to be acquitted by Him. He is also our Mediator: that is, the person, who transacts the grand affair of reconciliation between God and his creatures. He intercedes for us, and is continually offering up his own merits for our sakes, to rescue and skreen us by his all-perfect righteousness from that damnation, to which we otherwise must have been eternally liable. Dr. Bennet.

Neither ministers nor people must ask for the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, with a view to advance their own glory and importance in the Church. The honour of our Advocate and Mediator must be the grand end of our petitions. It is Jesus who procures for us, by his intercession with the Father, both the Spirit and the blessing. Let Him have the honour of all the good we have ever received; and of all the hope, and joy, and comfort we have ever experienced. And as nothing can tend more effectually to promote his glory and the promotion of his religion in the world, than that his Church should be governed by wise and pious rulers; his ordinances conducted by zealous and holy ministers; and his house filled with humble, teachable, and godly people; we have good reason to pray that the Lord will give grace to all bishops and pastors of his Church, that they may diligently preach his word, and duly administer the godly discipline thereof; and that He will grant to the people, that they may obediently follow the same; that all may receive the crown of everlasting glory, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen. Rogers.

[y] A Prayer of St. Chrysostom.] Where ancient Liturgies afforded proper prayers, our Reformers chose to retain them rather than compose new ones: therefore, as some are kept from the Western offices, so this is taken out of the Eastern, where it is daily used in the Liturgies both of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom, who is agreed to be the author of it. And it is very proper for a concluding prayer. Dean Comber.

It is taken from the middle of St. Chrysostom's Liturgy; but much more judiciously placed in the close of ours. It first thankfully confesses the great goodness of our blessed Redeemer, in disposing our minds, of themselves so variously and wrongly inclined, to ask unanimously of Him such things as we ought, and encouraging our applications by such explicit assurances of hearing us. Then it submits entirely to his wisdom, in what manner, and how far, He will think it for our good to grant us any of our particular requests: begging nothing absolutely, but what He hath absolutely engaged to bestow on our prayers and endeavours; namely, that practical "knowledge" here "of his truth," his doctrines and precepts, his promises and threatenings, that hereafter we may attain "everlasting life" and happiness. Abp. Secker.

Neither this nor the following benedictory prayer is at the end of either the Morning or Evening service, in any of the old Common Prayer Books; which all of them conclude with the third Collect. But the prayer of St. Chrysostom is at the end of the Litany, from the very first book of King Edward; and the benedictory prayer from that of Queen Elizabeth; and there also stood the prayers for the King, the Royal Family, for the Clergy and people, till the last review. And I suppose, though not printed, they were always used, as now, at the conclusion of the daily service. For after the third Collect, the Scotch Liturgy directs, that "then shall follow the Prayer for the Queen's Majesty, with the rest of the prayers at the end of the Litany, to the Benediction." Wheatly.

[z] Almighty God, &c.] It is a general rule in our Liturgy, (except in the Litany, in some few of the Collects, and in the Hymn "Veni Creator Spiritus" in the Ordination service,) to address our prayers to the Person of the Father, in the name and through the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ. But the prayer of St. Chrysostom is directed immediately to the Son, as appears plainly from the promise referred to in the introductory part, which our Saviour made in his own person, whilst He dwelt on earth; and also from the omission of the usual words, "through Jesus Christ our Lord," at the end. Not that, when we address ourselves to one Person only in the blessed Trinity, we are to exclude the others from our thoughts; since they are one undivided nature or substance, the joint objects of our faith and worship. Accordingly it is justly remarked in the Nicene Creed, that "the Holy Ghost with the Father and the Son together is worshipped and glorified;" and, in the Athanasian, that "in all things the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped." Waldo.

[a] — common supplications] That is, joint or united: such as are "common" to more persons than one; or such as more persons than one bear part in. Thus "common supplications" are opposed to private supplications, or such supplications as a person pours forth in his closet, when no one joins in prayer with him. And for this reason our established Liturgy is called a "Book of Common Prayer," that is, a book containing such forms of prayer, as people meet together to join in, and with united hearts and affections to offer up to God at the same time. Dr. Bennet.

[b] — when two or three are gathered together in thy Name &c.] This is founded on that gracious promise of Christ, Matt. xviii. 19, 20, that "where two or three are gathered together in his name, he is in the midst of them;" that is, He will give them this assurance of his presence, that He "will grant their requests," 1 John v. 15. Perhaps we are but few at common prayer; but since we come as his disciples, in obedience to his precepts, to ask in his name alone, we are sure that Jesus is among us, and hears our prayers; and then such is his love to us and power with God, that we doubt not to obtain them. And oh! whom would it not move to lay aside all needless impediments, and come to prayers, when we are sure to meet the Lord Jesus there! Dean Comber.

[c] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.] It was ever the custom to dismiss the people from religious assemblies with a "final blessing" both in the Jewish and Christian Church, pronounced by the priest, and received by the people on their knees; nor ought any one to go out before it was given. The Jews had a form of God's making, and ours is indited by the Spirit, with which St. Paul uses to close his Epistles. Dean Comber.

This form of blessing seems to have been delivered to the Church, that it might be used instead of the Jewish form, with which the priest under the law dismissed the congregation. The reason of its being changed was undoubtedly owing to the new revelation made of the three Persons in the Godhead. For otherwise the Jews both worshipped and blessed, in the name of the same God as the Christians; only their devotions had respect chiefly to the Unity of the Godhead, whereas ours comprehend also the Trinity of Persons. Wheatly.

The words are somewhat altered from what they are in the text whence they are taken. For, 1. the minister makes use of the term "us," instead of "you," including himself with the people: 2. the word "evermore" is added. By the former of these alterations the Church has turned this form into a prayer, rather than a blessing. It is also expressly called a "prayer" in the rubrick before the prayer for the queen. The minister therefore is to kneel whilst he utters it, as he does in using the other prayers: and the congregation are to speak it mentally to God, to whom it is addressed. Dr. Bennet, Dr. Bisse.

The former things being done, it only remains, that on departing from God's more immediate presence in his Church, we intreat for ourselves and one another, as we do accordingly in the words of Scripture, the continual presence of the holy Trinity, wherever we go: that "grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," which will secure to us "the love of God" the Father, and "the fellowship," that is, the communication of the needful warnings and assistances, "of the Holy Ghost." Abp. Secker.

Nor are these only desired for us, but pronounced over us, and conveyed to us by the Ambassador of heaven, from whose mouth when we have received this blessing, let us bow our heads, and return home in peace, saying, "Amen, Amen," and God shall make it good. Dean Comber.

Thus we have attempted to set before the reader the several parts or offices of the Morning or first service of our Church: which upon this imperfect view appear so rational in themselves, so exact in their proportions, and so apt in their connexions; that we may venture to affirm, that thus far our holy Mother doth "worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," 1 Chron. xvi. 29. Dr. Bisse.

Here endeth the Order of Morning Prayer throughout the Year.

THE ORDER FOR

EVENING PRAYER,

DAILY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

¶ At the beginning of Evening Prayer the Minister shall read with a loud voice some one or more of these Sentences of the Scriptures that follow. And then he shall say that which is written after the said Sentences.

WHEN the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive. Ezekiel xviii. 27.

I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me. Psalm li. 3.

Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Psalm li. 9.

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. Psalm li. 17.

Rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. Joel ii. 13.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him: neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws which he set before us. Daniel ix. 9, 10.

O Lord, correct me, but with judgement; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing. Jer. x. 24. Psalm vi. 1.

Repent ye; for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. St. Matth. iii. 2.

I will arise, and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. St. Luke xv. 18, 19.

Enter not into judgement with thy servant, O Lord; for in thy sight shall no man living be justified. Psalm cxliii. 2.

If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us: but if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 1 St. John i. 8, 9.

DEARLY beloved brethren, the Scripture moveth us in sundry places to acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness; and that we should not dissemble nor cloke them before the face of Almighty God our heavenly Father; but confess them with an humble, lowly, penitent, and obedient heart; to the end that we may obtain forgiveness of the same, by his infinite goodness and mercy. And although we ought at all times humbly to acknowledge our sins before God; yet ought we most chiefly so to do, when we assemble and meet together to render thanks for the great benefits that we have received at his hands, to set forth his most worthy praise, to hear his most holy Word, and to ask those things which are requisite and necessary, as well for the body as the soul. Wherefore I pray and beseech you, as many as are here present, to accompany me with a pure heart, and humble voice, unto the throne of the heavenly grace, saying after me;

¶ A general Confession to be said of the whole Congregation after the Minister, all kneeling.

ALMIGHTY and most merciful Father; We have erred, and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have offended against thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done; And there is no health in us. But thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. Spare thou them, O God, which confess their faults. Restore thou them that are penitent; According to thy promises declared unto mankind in Christ Jesu our Lord. And grant, O most merciful Father, for his sake; That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life, To the glory of thy holy Name. Amen.

¶ The Absolution, or Remission of sins, to be pronounced by the Priest alone, standing; the people still kneeling.

ALMIGHTY God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may turn from his wickedness, and live; and hath given power, and commandment, to his Ministers, to declare and pronounce to his people, being penitent, the Absolution and Remission of their sins: he pardoneth and absolveth all them that truly repent, and unfeignedly believe his holy Gospel. Wherefore let us beseech him to grant us true repentance, and his holy Spirit, that those things may please him which we do at this present; and that the rest of our life hereafter may be pure, and holy; so that at the last we may come to his eternal joy; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

¶ Then the Minister shall kneel, and say the Lord's Prayer; the people also kneeling, and repeating it with him.

OUR Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, The power, and the glory, For ever and ever. Amen.

¶ Then likewise he shall say,

O Lord, open thou our lips.

Answer. And our mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

Priest. O God, make speed to save us.

Answer. O Lord, make haste to help us.

¶ Here all standing up, the Priest shall say,

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

Answer. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

Priest. Praise ye the Lord.

Answer. The Lord's Name be praised.

¶ Then shall be said or sung the Psalms in order as they are appointed. Then a Lesson of the Old Testament, as is appointed. And after that, Magnificat[a] (or the Song

[a] And after that, Magnificat] As soon as the blessed Virgin was filled with the Holy Ghost she uttered this divine canticle, which is the very first hymn recorded in the New Testament, and may be reckoned the first fruits of the Spirit; and therefore it hath been anciently used among the Christians, and is received at this day into the service of all the reformed Churches of Holland and Germany, as well as retained in ours, where it is placed very fitly after the first lesson at evening prayer, in which are usually set forth those acts of God's gracious providence over the pious, and those prophecies and promises of a Saviour to come, for which this hymn doth praise the Lord: the blessed Virgin then experienced God's goodness to his servants, and saw the accomplishment of all his promises, and in this form she expressed her joy and gratitude; and when we hear in the lesson like examples of his mercy, and are told of those prophecies and promises which are now fulfilled in Christ's birth, we may be expected to rejoice with her in the same words. Dean Comber.

The hymn after the first lesson, called "Magnificat" from the word with which it begins in the Latin, was used anciently by the Western Church; and continues to be used by the Protestants abroad. It is the song of the blessed Virgin Mary) in English, as followeth.

Magnificat. St. Luke i.

MY soul doth magnify the Lord: and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

For he hath regarded: the lowliness[e] of his hand-maiden.

For behold, from henceforth: all generations shall call me blessed.

For he that is mighty hath magnified me: and holy is his Name.

And his mercy is on them that fear him: throughout all generations.

He hath shewed strength with his arm: he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

He hath put down the mighty from their seat: and hath exalted the humble and meek.

He hath filled the hungry with good things: and the rich he hath sent empty away.

He remembering his mercy hath holpen his servant Israel: as he promised to our forefathers, Abraham and his seed, for ever.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost; of the blessed Virgin, recorded by St. Luke, i. 46—55, on the confirmation, which she received at Elisabeth's house, of what the angel told her, that she should become the mother of our Lord, by the operation of the Holy Ghost: and it expresses most naturally the transport, which on that occasion she must feel: but like the hymn of Zacharias, in phrases of the Old Testament, to be interpreted from the New: of which matter I have already spoken. See page 26, note e.

"My soul doth magnify the Lord," doth acknowledge the infinite greatness of his power and mercy: "for he hath regarded the lowliness of his hand-maiden;" that is, "the low estate;" for so the original signifies, and so it is expressed in our Bibles; not the humility of the mind, which the Holy Virgin was too humble to ascribe to herself. "From henceforth all generations shall call me blessed:" as we do accordingly, both by repeating this hymn, and in our common speech. "For he that is mighty hath magnified me," hath raised me to great honour: "and holy is his name:" his truth, his justice, his mercy, his concern for the goodness as well as happiness of his creatures, are gloriously manifested in this wonderful dispensation. "He hath shewed" in times past, and will as certainly now, as if it were done already, "strength with his arm," supernatural power, for the erection of the kingdom of his Son: and hath often scattered, and will again, "scatter" and defeat "the proud" opposers of it, by means of those very "imaginations of their hearts," in which they exult. "The mighty" among the Jews and heathen "shall be put down from their seat, and humble and meek" Christians "exalted" in their stead. "They, that hunger and thirst after righteousness," Matt. v. 6, shall be "filled with" "spiritual good things; and the rich," that rely on the vain and false treasures of their own wisdom and merit, He will convict of being "poor and blind and naked," Rev. iii. 17, "and so send them empty away." "He hath holpen his servant Israel," all that by obeying Him become his people, "as he promised to our forefathers, Abraham" the father of the faithful, "and his" true "seed;" thus "remembering his" covenanted "mercy," which shall last "for ever." This is the triumph of the holy Virgin; and every part of it should be our own likewise. For God "hath regarded our low estate," together with hers, and "magnified" us, and made us "blessed." And we should magnify and bless Him continually for it. Abp. Secker.

[e] For he hath regarded the lowliness] Or low estate "of his hand-maiden." She does not speak here of her humility, or lowliness of spirit, though of that indeed she was an eminent example, but of the meanness and obscurity of her condition; admiring the goodness of God, who in his infinite wisdom "raiseth up the poor out of the dust," and "chooseth the weak things of the world, and things that are despised," that is, the meanest and lowest of his servants, to be the instruments of conveying his greatest blessings to the sons of men. Various instances of this sort are recorded in the sacred writings, but none so remarkable as this of the blessed Virgin, who was raised from poverty and disgrace, to be distinguished by the highest honour, to be "highly favoured and blessed among women." "For behold," says she, "from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed; for he that is mighty hath magnified me, and holy is his name." In her was to be accomplished the ancient prophecy, that "a Virgin should conceive and bear a son," Isa. vii. 14. Of her was to be born the Redeemer of Israel, the Saviour of the world, the Holy One, the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace. Well therefore might all after-ages "call her blessed:" well might they celebrate her memory, the fruit of whose womb was "the Author of eternal salvation:" well might they admire her, as a pattern of true meekness, and piety, and purity of manners: but farther than this we dare not go. To invoke her, as the queen of heaven; to pray to her, and worship her, as one having divine power, is the height of profaneness and impiety: a direct breach of "the first and great commandment." How must her meek and humble spirit have been offended and shocked, could she have foreseen the idolatrous adoration of the Church of Rome, who not only "call her blessed," but place her upon an equality with the blessed Lord of heaven and earth; nay, in some sense, make her superior to our Saviour, by beseeching her to "command her Son" to grant their requests! Waldo.

[f] Or else this Psalm;] Instead of the "Magnificat," made by the most excellent of the daughters of David, we sometimes use a Psalm of David's own composing, out of which part of the "Magnificat" was taken, namely, Luke i. 54, "He hath remembered his mercy and truth toward the house of Israel:" which is the fourth verse of this Psalm, and as there "the strength of God's arm" is celebrated, so is "the power of his Cantate Domino. Psalm xcviii.

O Sing unto the Lord a new song: for he hath done marvellous things.

With his own right hand, and with his holy arm: hath he gotten himself the victory.

The Lord declared his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

He hath remembered his mercy and truth toward the house of Israel: and all the ends of the world have seen the salvation of our God.

Shew yourselves joyful unto the Lord, all ye lands: sing, rejoice, and give thanks.

Praise the Lord upon the harp: sing to the harp with a psalm of thanksgiving.

With trumpets also and shawms: O shew yourselves joyful before the Lord the King.

Let the sea make a noise, and all that therein is: the round world, and they that dwell therein.

Let the floods clap their hands, and let the hills be joyful together before the Lord: for he cometh to judge the earth.

With righteousness shall he judge the world: and the people with equity.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost; holy arm" magnified here also, ver. 2. And indeed there is a great similitude between them, only this seems more proper, when the evening first lesson mentions some great and eminent deliverance of God's people. Dean Comber.

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

In the 98th Psalm, which our Prayer Book tells us may be used, and in some places frequently is, instead of the "Magnificat," we exhort one another to "sing unto the Lord a new song;" words, denoting in the book of Revelation, v. 9; xiv. 3, Gospel praises: and we foretel that "all lands" shall join in it, "with trumpets and shawms," another instrument of wind musick, which in our Bible is called a cornet: whence we may conclude, if it needed proof, that musical instruments are lawful in Christian worship. This future time of universal thanksgiving is described to be, when God shall "remember," that is, shall give evidence that He hath never forgot, "his mercy and truth towards the house of Israel," according to the flesh; and not only they, but "all the ends of the world shall see his salvation." No wonder, that even the irrational and inanimate parts of nature are called upon, by a lofty figure of speech, to celebrate that glorious day: "the sea" to "make a noise, and all that therein is: the floods" to "clap their hands, and the hills to be joyful together before the Lord:" partly for the present happiness of that period, in which possibly the lowest of God's works may share; but chiefly for the approach of the next and concluding scene of Providence, when He shall "come" finally, "with righteousness to judge the world, and the people with equity." Abp. Secker.

When the first lesson treats of some great and temporal deliverance granted to the peculiar people of God, we have the 98th Psalm for variety; which, though made on occasion of some of David's victories, may yet be very properly applied to ourselves, who, being God's adopted children, are a "spiritual Israel," and therefore have all imaginable reason to bless God for the same, and to call upon the whole creation to join with us in thanksgiving. Wheatly.

[g] —after that, Nunc dimittis &c.] After the second evening lesson out of the Epistles of the holy apostles, this hymn is most commonly used; the author of it is supposed to be that holy doctor whom the Jews call Simeon the Just, son of the famous Rabbi Hillel, a man of eminent integrity, and one who opposed the then common opinion of the Messiah's temporal kingdom. The occasion of composing it was his meeting Christ in the temple when he came to be offered there, wherein God fulfilled his promise to him, that he should not die till he had seen the Messiah; taking Jesus therefore in his arms, inspired with joy and the Holy Ghost, he sang this "Nunc dimittis:" and though we cannot see our Saviour with our bodily eyes as he did, yet He is by the writings of the apostles daily presented to the eyes of our faith; and if we were as much concerned for heaven, and as loose from the love of this world as old Simeon was, and as we ought to be, we might upon the view of Christ in his holy word by faith, be daily ready to sing this hymn; which was indited by the Spirit, recorded in holy writ, and is adopted into the publick service of all Christian churches, Greek and Latin, reformed and Roman, and used to be sung in extraordinary by divers saints and martyrs a little before their death. Dean Comber.

This hymn, called from the Latin beginning of it "Nunc dimittis," expresses the gratitude of good old Simeon, "a just man and devout," as we read in St. Luke, ii. 25—32, "and waiting for the consolation of Israel; to whom it was revealed, that he should not die, till he had seen the Lord's Christ." Accordingly, "he came by the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, he took him up in his arms," (image to yourselves the scene, I beg you,) "and blessed God, and said: Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," that is, in comfort, "according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared" to set "before the face of all people." And the following sentence hath a strong appearance of being designed by the Holy Ghost to intimate, whether the speaker of it perceived the design or not, that, contrary to the expected and natural order of things, Christ should first "be a light to lighten the Gentiles;" then afterwards, "the glory of God's people Israel." To perceive the fitness of Simeon's thanksgiving for our use, it needs only to be remembered, and ever should in repeating it, that we also "have seen the Lord's salvation." For though we have not yet beheld our Saviour with our bodily eyes; to that of faith He is exhibited continually in the Nunc dimittis. St. Luke ii. 29.

LORD, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace: according to thy word.

For mine eyes have seen: thy salvation,

Which thou hast prepared: before the face of all people;

To be a light to lighten the Gentiles: and to be the glory of thy people Israel.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

¶ Or else this Psalm[h]; except it be on the Twelfth Day of the Month.

Deus misereatur. Psalm lxvii.

GOD be merciful unto us, and bless us: and shew us the light of his countenance, and be merciful unto us:

That thy way may be known upon earth: thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise thee, O God: yea, let all the people praise thee.

O let the nations rejoice and be glad: for thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Let the people praise thee, O God: yea, let all the people praise thee.

Then shall the earth bring forth her increase: and God, even our own God, shall give us his blessing.

God shall bless us: and all the ends of the world shall fear him.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

¶ Then shall be said or sung the Apostles' Creed by the Minister and the people, standing:

I Believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth:

And in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, Born of the Virgin Mary, Suffered under Pontius Pilate, Was crucified, dead, and buried, He descended into hell; The third day he rose again from the dead, He ascended into heaven, And sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Ghost; The holy Catholick Church; The Communion of Saints; The Forgiveness of sins; The Resurrection of the body, And the life everlasting. Amen.

¶ And after that, these Prayers following, all devoutly kneeling; the Minister first pronouncing with a loud voice,

Gospel history and sacraments; we may meet Him in his Church; we may converse with Him in our private meditations. And this we should think happiness enough for us here, whatever else we want or suffer; and be always prepared, and always willing, to "bless God," and "depart in peace." Abp. Secker.

This hymn comes very properly after the second lesson, which is always taken out of the New Testament, wherein is contained and delivered to us that Gospel, the enjoyment and participation of which is the ground and foundation of the whole hymn. It should be added, that this hymn is addressed to God: and since it may be used as the personal address of every devout Christian, no one should repeat it after a careless manner: but consider to whom it is repeated, and utter the whole after a suitable manner. Dr. Bennet.

[h] Or else this Psalm;] The parallel to the former evangelical hymn is this Psalm of David, who prayed for that "saving health," which old Simeon rejoiced to see, Ps. lxvii. 2; Luke ii. 30; and both of them praised God upon the foresight they had, that it would be "made known" to us, and to all people, as it is this day by the voices of the apostles. Since David indited this Psalm for a form of prayer, for the sending of this salvation, and of praises to God, to be used by those who should see it accomplished, it cannot but be very suitable for our use, after we have heard out of the Epistles, how this salvation appeared to us, and to all men. Dean Comber.

This Psalm is a prophetick prayer, that through "the light of God's countenance," his gracious illumination, "the way" of his providence and man's duty to Him "may be known upon earth, his saving health," the means by which He heals and saves men's souls, "to all nations:" who are invited to "rejoice and be glad," because "he shall judge the folk righteously," shall govern and reward the people of the world, (for so the word, "folk," signifies, and was not a low expression formerly,) by the equitable and merciful rules of Christianity. For "then," on our doing this, "the earth shall bring forth her increase" more plentifully; "and God, even our own God, shall give his blessing," temporal and spiritual; for "godliness hath promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come," 1 Tim. iv. 8. Abp. Secker.

This is one of the psalms that were introduced in King Edward's second Liturgy. Wheatly.

This Psalm is sometimes called "Deus misereatur," because in the Latin version it begins with these words.

The Lord be with you.
Answer. And with thy spirit.
Minister. Let us pray.
Lord, have mercy upon us.
Christ, have mercy upon us.
Lord, have mercy upon us.

¶ Then the Minister, Clerks, and people, shall say the Lord's Prayer with a loud voice.

OUR Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

¶ Then the Priest standing up shall say,

O Lord, shew thy mercy upon us;
Answer. And grant us thy salvation.
Priest. O Lord, save the Queen.
Answer. And mercifully hear us when we call upon thee.
Priest. Endue thy Ministers with righteousness.
Answer. And make thy chosen people joyful.
Priest. O Lord, save thy people.
Answer. And bless thine inheritance.
Priest. Give peace in our time, O Lord.
Answer. Because there is none other that fighteth for us, but only thou, O God.
Priest. O God, make clean our hearts within us.
Answer. And take not thy holy Spirit from us.

¶ Then shall follow three Collects; the first of the Day; the second for Peace; the third for Aid[i] against all Perils, as hereafter followeth; which two last Collects shall be daily said at Evening Prayer without alteration.

The second Collect at Evening Prayer[k].

O God, from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed; Give unto thy servants that peace which the world cannot give; that both our hearts may be set to obey thy commandments, and also that by thee we being defended from the fear of our enemies may pass our time in rest and quietness; through the merits of Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Phil. ii. 13. Prov. xvi. 1. John xiv. 27. Phil. iv. 7. Luke i. 68. 71. 74, 75.

The third Collect, for Aid against all Perils[l].

LIGHTEN our darkness, we beseech thee, O Lord; and by thy great mercy defend us from all perils and dangers of this night; for 2 Sam. xxii. 29. Ps. xviii. 28. Ps. lxxxiv. 12. Old Tr. cxxi 3, 4.

And it is very properly used after the second lesson, which is always taken out of the New Testament; because therein we may conveniently express our desires of the farther propagation of the Gospel. This Psalm is also a prayer to God, and therefore it must not be barely repeated, but addressed to our Maker in the most solemn manner. Dr. Bennet.

[i] —the second for Peace; the third for Aid &c.] Though the words of these Collects be different from those of the second and third Collects for morning prayer, yet the subject is the same: only the former are suited to the morning and these to the evening. They are of ancient use in the Western church. Dean Comber.

[k] The second Collect at Evening Prayer.] Peace is so desirable a blessing, we cannot ask it too often; and since there are two kinds of peace, external and internal peace, we beg outward peace in the morning to secure us against the troubles of the world, in which the business of the day engageth us; and inward peace in the evening to comfort and quiet our minds when we are to take our rest. Dean Comber.

The former of the two Collects, peculiar to evening prayers, is taken from a Latin form, at least 1100 years old. It begs for the greatest of blessings here below, that joyful peace of mind, which our Saviour promised his disciples: "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you," John xiv. 27. And since it cannot be obtained, but by "holy desires, good" and prudent "counsels" for the execution of them, "and just actions," done in consequence of both; so we petition Him, "from whom all" these "proceed," to grant it us by means of them; that, our hearts being set" by his grace "to keep his commandments," and our ways "defended" by his providence "from the fear of our enemies," we may find "the work of righteousness, peace; and its effects, quietness and assurance for ever," Isa. xxxii. 17. Abp. Secker.

[l] The third Collect, for Aid against all Perils.] This is peculiar to and proper for the evening. We are always indeed environed with danger; but none are more dismal, sudden, and unavoidable, than those of the night, when darkness adds to the terror, and sleep deprives us of all possibility of foresight or defence; so that he must be an atheist, and worse than heathen, who doth not then by a special prayer commit himself to God's providence, the knowledge of which doth enlighten our minds, and makes us full of inward peace and comfort when we are in the darkest shades of night: therefore we pray with David, "Lighten our darkness, we beseech thee, O Lord," Ps. xviii. 28. Light signifies, in Scripture, knowledge and comfort, and under this metaphor we pray for both, namely, that our understandings may the love of thy only Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Prayer for the Queen's Majesty.

O Lord our heavenly Father, high and mighty, King of kings, Lord of lords, the only Ruler of princes, who dost from thy throne behold all the dwellers upon earth; Most heartily we beseech thee with thy favour to behold our most gracious Sovereign Lady, Queen VICTORIA; and so replenish her with the grace of thy Holy Spirit, that she may alway incline to thy will, and walk in thy way: Endue her plenteously with heavenly gifts; grant her in health and wealth long to live; strengthen her that she may vanquish and overcome all her enemies; and finally, after this life, she may attain everlasting joy and felicity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the Royal Family.

ALMIGHTY God, the fountain of all goodness, we humbly beseech thee to bless the Prince Albert, Albert, Prince of Wales, and all the Royal Family: Endue them with thy holy Spirit; Enrich them with thy heavenly grace; prosper them with all happiness: and bring them to thine everlasting kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the Clergy and people.

ALMIGHTY and everlasting God, who alone workest great marvels; send down upon our Bishops, and Curates, and all Congregations committed to their charge, the healthful Spirit of thy grace; and that they may truly please thee, pour upon them the continual dew of thy blessing. Grant this, O Lord, for the honour of our Advocate and Mediator, Jesus Christ. Amen.

A Prayer of St. Chrysostom.

ALMIGHTY God, who hast given us grace at this time with one accord to make our common supplications unto thee; and dost promise, that when two or three are gathered together in thy Name thou wilt grant their requests; Fulfil now, O Lord, the desires and petitions of thy servants, as may be most expedient for them; granting us in this world knowledge of thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting. Amen.

2 Cor. xiii.

THE grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore. Amen.

---

be enlightened with the knowledge of his providence, and our hearts cheered with the assurance of his protection. Dean Comber.

This latter Collect, taken in part from an office of the Greek Church, prays more particularly for the safety of the ensuing night: that God's power may shine upon us, and "lighten our darkness;" that is, protect us, while we are unable to help ourselves, or even to know our danger. The same phrase is twice used in the book of Psalms. "Unto the godly there ariseth up light in darkness," Ps. cxii. 4. And again, "The Lord shall make my darkness to be light," Ps. xviii. 28. Abp. Secker. This Collect is particularly seasonable at night: for, being then in danger of the terrors of darkness, we by this form commend ourselves into the hands of that God, who "neither slumbers nor sleeps, and with whom darkness and light are both alike," Ps. cxxi. 3; cxxxix. 12. Wheatly.

Here endeth the Order of Evening Prayer throughout the Year.

¶ Upon these Feasts; Christmas-day[m], the Epiphany, Saint Matthias, Easter-day, Ascension-day, Whitsunday, Saint John Baptist, Saint James, Saint Bartholomew, Saint Matthew, Saint Simon and Saint Jude, Saint Andrew, and upon Trinity-Sunday, shall be sung or said at Morning Prayer, instead of the Apostles' Creed, this Confession of our Christian Faith, commonly called[n] The Creed of Saint Athanasius, by the Minister and people standing.

[m] Upon these Feasts; Christmas-day, &c.] The Creed, commonly called the Creed of St. Athanasius, is appointed to be said upon the days named in the rubrick, for these reasons: partly, because those days, many of them, are most proper for this confession of the faith, which of all others is the most express concerning the Trinity, because the matter of them much concerns the manifestation of the Trinity, as Christmas, Epiphany, Easter-day, Ascension-day, Whitsunday, Trinity Sunday, and St. John Baptist's day, at the highest of whose acts, the baptizing of our Lord, was made a kind of sensible manifestation of the Trinity; partly, that so it might be said once a month at least, and therefore on St. James, and St. Bartholomew's days; and withal at convenient distance from each time, and therefore on St. Matthew, Matthias, Simon and Jude, and St. Andrew's. Bp. Sparrow.

[n] — this Confession of our Christian Faith, commonly called &c.] The doctrines of Arius, which were first proposed at Alexandria, found a native of the same city to oppose them, and this was Athanasius. The integrity of Athanasius, his courage in opposition, his fortitude under persecution, his constancy, and his purity of life, have extorted praises from those who contemn his principles, and ridicule his doctrines.

At the Council of Nice, he was a deacon attending on the patriarch of Alexandria, and the great maintainer of the catholick doctrine against the novelties of Arius; he soon after was elected patriarch of Alexandria himself; and passed the remainder of his life in a succession of expulsions and restorations, according to the prevailing opinions of the different emperors at Constantinople; and in every variety of fortune continued steady in his principles, and unshaken in his constancy.

His writings are come down to our times, and in them we find all the doctrines, and most of the identical expressions, which are now in the Creed that bears his name; but the Creed itself is generally allowed by the learned not to be of his composition.

The Creed, as it now stands in our Liturgy, is supposed to have been framed from the writings of Athanasius; to have been acknowledged by the Western church in France, Germany, Italy, and Spain, as early as the sixth century; and to have been received into the Liturgy in the eighth. The general testimony of the learned supposes Vigilius, an African bishop in the sixth century, to be the author; but Dr. Waterland, a divine in our own Church of great erudition, after proving that the Creed itself is mentioned before the sixth century, offers an opinion of his own, that it was composed in France, as early as the year 450, by Hilary bishop of Arles. It was not however admitted into the offices of the Roman church, at the earliest, till the year 930; in which it has continued ever since, and was received into our Liturgy at the time of the Reformation.

I mention these particulars, in order to shew, that a Creed, which is 1300 years old, and which has been generally received into the Church for 900 years, ought not to be treated lightly, or irreverently, as has been the case in our own country of late; or to be neglected, without considering its merit. Dean Vincent.

The design of the author, whoever he was, in compiling it, was to furnish the Church with a plain and clear account of the grand doctrines of the ever-blessed Trinity, and the incarnation of Christ; in opposition to the gross errors and heresies which had been maintained and propagated, with great zeal and industry, by the enemies of the true faith. For, as the apostles had long before foretold, "false teachers crept" into the Church, and "privily brought in damnable heresies, denying the Lord that bought them, even the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ," 2 Pet. ii. 1, and Jude 4. As these spread their poison, it became necessary to provide an antidote; for which purpose it was wisely ordered that creeds or summaries of the Christian faith, should be drawn up, and published for general use, to guard and defend the Articles of religion against the arts and malice of the enemy, who lay in wait to deceive, and employed every stratagem to undermine them. And, to oppose these hereticks the more effectually, it was found expedient to be more full and particular in stating and explaining the doctrines they attacked, than had been usual or necessary in the earlier and purer ages of Christianity. Hence Creeds became more numerous and enlarged, and some terms were introduced not perhaps strictly scriptural, in order to illustrate the doctrines of Scripture, and to obviate the false glosses and perverse interpretations of hereticks. Of these Creeds, none has been more generally and deservedly received and esteemed, than this which bears the title of St. Athanasius's; which our Church has adopted into her Liturgy, as a standard of the true faith, which all her members may have recourse to, and which they are all directed publickly to repeat on particular festivals: an injunction, which surely we ought to comply with; since it is an acknowledgment and declaration of our holding fast that faith, into which we were baptized. Waldo.

As to the matter of it, it doth very fully and particularly condemn all the heresies that were of old in the time of this great bulwark of the catholick faith; forbidding us to confound the Persons of the Trinity, with Sabellius, or to divide the substance, with Arius and Eunomius: it shews us against Arius and Macedonius, that both the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God: it confesses Christ to be God, of the substance of his Father, against Samosatenus and Photinus, and man of the substance of his mother, against Apollinaris; yet he is not, as Nestorius dreamed, two, but one Christ, not by confusion of substance, as Eutyches held, but by unity of Person: so that this Creed is the quintessence of ancient orthodox divinity, and the means to extirpate all those accursed heresies, some of which our age hath seen revived; and therefore we have more need to hold and repeat this useful Creed. Dean Comber.

That this Creed is not Athanasius's is certainly true: but our Church receives it not upon the authority of its compiler, nor determines any thing about its age or author: but we receive it, because the truth of the doctrines contained in it "may be proved by most certain warrants of holy Scripture," as is expressly said in our eighth Article. I may add, that the early and general reception of this Creed by Greeks and Latins, by all the Western churches, not only before but since the Reformation, must needs give it a much greater authority and weight than the name of Athanasius could do, were it ever so justly to be set to it. Athanasius has left some creeds and confessions, undoubtedly his, which yet never have obtained the esteem and reputation, that this hath done: because none of them are really of the same intrinsick value, nor capable of doing the like service in the Christian churches. The use of it is, to be a standing fence and preservative against the wiles and equivocations of most kinds of hereticks. This was well understood by Luther, when he called it, "a bulwark to the Apostles' Creed;" and it was this and the like considerations that have all along made it to be of such high esteem among all the reformed churches, from the days of their great leader. Dr. Waterland.

The doctrine of the Trinity, as it is here proposed, has been the doctrine of the Gospel; the doctrine of the primitive church; the doctrine of almost every thing that can be called a church in all ages: in the Greek and Roman church, it survived in the midst of all the corruptions that arose: upon the Reformation there was not a Protestant church, but what received it in its fullest extent: Luther, Calvin, Beza, and all the wisest and best reformers, acknowledged the Athanasian Creed, and made it their profession of faith; the Puritans in our own country, the parent stock of all our modern dissenters, embraced it as readily as the Church of England herself: and, if many of these reject it now, despise, contemn, and deride it, they are neither true Calvinists nor Presbyterians, but shelter themselves under the general name of Independents, among whom it is said at present that every man's private opinion is his church.

I do not know that this is fact, nor do I wish to deal in misrepresentation; but I have no scruple to say that "Scripture is not of private interpretation;" that whensoever we go contrary to a stream, which has run in one channel for seventeen centuries, we ought to doubt our own opinions, and at least treat the general and concurring testimony of mankind with respect; that the reason of individuals is not true reason, but opinion; and that the standard of true reason is the well-weighed decision of learned and good men, brought to a centre, and comprehending all the wisdom that their united abilities could collect.

If therefore any one has his doubts on the intricacies of this question, let him first search the Scriptures, and settle his principles from thence; if he afterwards wishes to pursue his researches, let him not recur to the crude and hasty publications of the present day, in which assertions are rashly made without foundation in Scripture, antiquity, or the principles of any church; but to those learned writers who managed this controversy fifty years ago in our own country; or, if he has learning and leisure sufficient, to the primitive fathers themselves. Dean Vincent.

Many have argued against the use of this Creed; and some, with strange vehemence: partly from the doctrines, which it teaches; but chiefly from the condemnation, which it pronounces on all, who disbelieve them. Now the doctrines are undeniably the same with those, that are contained in the Articles of our Church, in the beginning of our Litany, in the conclusions of many of our Collects, in the Nicene Creed, and, as we conceive, in that of the Apostles, in the Doxology, in the form of Baptism, in numerous passages of both Testaments; only here they are somewhat more distinctly set forth, to prevent equivocations. Any one, who examines into the matter, will easily see it to be so. Accordingly our dissenting brethren, after they had long objected to other parts of our Liturgy, consented readily to subscribe to this Creed; the Articles of which are the common faith of the catholick church, or, by immediate consequence, deducible from it; and little or nothing more. There are indeed several things in them, beyond our comprehension, as to the manner; but the Scripture hath the same. There are expressions, which may seem liable to exception; but it must be for want of understanding them, or admitting fair interpretations of them. The assertion that "there is one Father, not three Fathers," and so on, may appear to the ignorant, needless and trifling: but was levelled against heresies, then in being, which took away all distinction between the three Persons. That "none is before or after other" means, (as the following words, "but the whole three Persons are co-eternal" prove,) that none is so in point of time, not that none is so in the order of our conceptions; for the Scripture directs us to consider the Father as first. That "none is greater or less than another" is reconciled to our Saviour's assertion, "the Father is greater than I," (John xiv. 28,) by what follows in the Creed, "Equal as touching his Godhead, inferior as touching his manhood" That He is "one, altogether, not by confusion of substance, but by Unity of Person" means, (for so the next words explain it) that as each of us is one man, not at all by blending the soul and body into one substance, for they are still distinct, but "altogether," by a mysterious union of the two; so He is one Christ, not at all by blending the divine and human nature into one substance, but "altogether," intirely and solely, by an union of them, yet more mysterious than the former is.

The condemnation, contained in two or three clauses of this Creed, belongs, (as the most zealous defenders of our faith in the holy Trinity agree, and as every one, who reads it considerately will soon perceive) not to all, who cannot understand, or cannot approve, every expression in it; but only to such as deny "the Trinity in Unity," or three Persons who are one God. "This" alone is said to be "the catholick faith." The words that follow after, "for there is one Person of the Father," and so on, are designed only to set this forth more particularly. And the conclusion from the whole is, not that "in all things," which are "aforesaid," by the use of every term above mentioned, but "in all things, AS IS aforesaid; the Unity in Trinity is to be worshipped:" meaning, that as at first it was said, that in all acts of faith we are to believe in each Person, so here it is added, that in all acts of worship we are to adore each: never considering one, even while addressed distinctly, as separated or separable from the other two. Now this Trinity in Unity we apprehend to have been, ever since it was fully received, a fundamental article of the Christian faith. And yet those, who believe not even so much, the Creed no otherwise teaches "cannot be saved," or "shall without doubt perish," than as our Saviour teaches concerning the whole of the Gospel: "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. Our condemnation is no more hard and uncharitable, than his. And neither is so: because both are to be interpreted with due exceptions and abatements. Suppose a collection of Christian duties had been drawn up: and it had been said, in the beginning or at the end of it, "This is the catholick" practice, "which except a man" observe "faithfully, he cannot be saved:" would not every one understand, that allowance must be made for such things, as a man through involuntary ignorance mistook, or through mere infirmity failed in, or was truly sorry for, as far as he knew he had cause? Why then are not the same allowances to be understood in speaking of doctrines? For when the Creed says, that "whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the catholick faith;" it doth not mean that true faith is more "necessary" than right practice; but that naturally it precedes it, and is to be first learnt in order to it. The intention therefore of the Creed, as well as of our Lord in the Gospel, is only to say, that whoever rejects the doctrine of it, from presumptuous self-opinion, or wilful negligence; and doth not afterwards repent of these faults: particularly if he is made sensible of them; or if not, at least in general, amongst his unknown sins; the case of such a one is desperate. But if want of information, weakness of apprehension, or even excusable wrongness of disposition, should make him doubt or disbelieve any or the main part of this Creed; nay, which is vastly a worst case, the whole revelation of Christianity; though we pass judgment on his errors without reserve; and, in general, on all who maintain them; yet personally and singly we presume not to judge of his condition in the next world. "To his own Master he standeth or falleth," Rom. xiv. 4. Abp. Secker.

It is not the province of a Creed to discuss the tenets which it delivers, or to investigate the formal nature and sin of heresy; but they must have paid little attention to Scripture, who are not aware, that those, who thus subject themselves to the severity of divine punishment, perish, not simply because they have abandoned the truth, but because they have abandoned the love of truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness. Their condemnation is, that "light is come into the world; and men loved darkness rather than light," John iii. 19.

No one, I presume, will be disposed to contend against the validity and equity of the argument, laying aside the authority upon which it rests. The damnatory clauses therefore of a Creed, applied to those who pervert or corrupt its doctrines, are founded equally on the grounds of reason, and the authority of Scripture.

But the use of them so applied is not barely justifiable. Both prudence and a charitable regard to the offenders themselves, as well as to those who may be misled by their example, renders it a duty incumbent upon every Christian church, to hold up this most awful consideration, that, as the highest degrees of happiness assigned to our nature are the rewards of a Christian faith in a good conscience; so does the greatest degree of judicial misery, Matt. xxiii. 14, await those who shall purposely poison these waters of salvation; and thus frustrate, so far as they are enabled, the salutary ends of the Gospel with respect to others.

With regard to those too who probably might be affected by the popular influence of novel propositions, it was surely but consistent with that pious zeal for the happiness of others, which is the distinguishing mark of Christian morality, to apprise them, that, as the very end of their religion, the salvation of their souls, could be obtained only by the means, which that religion prescribes, a faith in its genuine doctrines was as indispensable as obedience to its precepts; and that whosoever will, therefore, in a Christian sense of the word, be saved, must before all things hold the catholick or primitive and unaltered faith; for as there is no other name under heaven, by which men can be saved, that is, by covenant secure life and immortality: because there is but one Mediator between God and men, Christ Jesus; so there is no other Gospel, nor any other doctrines deducible from the Gospel which we possess, that are not consistent with those taught in the primitive or catholick church. There is therefore a necessity, if we would be saved as Christians, to maintain whole and inviolate, so far as in us lies, the primitive or catholick faith. Bp. Cleaver.

[q] Whosoever will be saved, &c.] The meaning of this term in its primary signification, and as it is applied to common subjects in common discourse, means a preservation from threatening perils, or from threatened punishments: but in an evangelical sense, and as it occurs in the New Testament, it includes much more. It means the whole Christian scheme of redemption and justification by the Son of God, with all the glorious privileges and promises contained in that scheme. It means not merely a deliverance from danger or from vengeance, but a federal right to positive happiness purchased by the merits, and declared to mankind by the Gospel, of Christ Jesus our Lord. St. Paul calls it, "the obtaining of the salvation, which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory," 2 Tim. ii. 10. "Whosoever" then, says the Creed, "will" thus "be saved," will be desirous to secure the glorious promises of the Gospel, must pursue it upon the terms, which that Gospel proposes; and particularly, must embrace the doctrines which it reveals. "Above all things," or in the first place, as the foundation, on which he must hereafter build a holy practice, and a covenanted title to pardon for past deviations from it, "it is necessary that he hold the catholick" or universal "faith," that faith which was "once delivered to the saints," and which is to be delivered unto them to the end of the world. Archdeacon Dodwell.

[r] Which Faith except every one &c.] "Which faith," that is, "the catholick faith," before spoken of, which is another name for the true and right faith as taught in Scripture; called catholick, or universal, as being held by the universal church of Christ, against which "the gates of hell" shall never prevail. The meaning then is, that every one is obliged, under pain of damnation, to preserve, as far as in him lies, the true and right faith, in opposition to those that endeavour to corrupt it either by taking from it, or adding to it. That men shall perish eternally for unbelief, for rejecting the faith in the lump, cannot be doubted; when it is expressly said, (Mark xvi. 16,) "he that believeth not, shall be damned:" and as to rejecting any particular branch or article of it, it must of consequence be a sin against the whole; against truth, and peace, and therefore damnable in its own nature, as all wilful sins are without repentance. As to the allowances to be made for invincible ignorance, prejudice, or other unavoidable infirmities; as they will be pleadable in the case of any other sin, so they may, and they will also, be pleadable in this: but it was foreign to the purpose of the Creed to take notice of it in this case particularly, when it is common to all cases of like nature, and is always supposed, and understood, though not specially mentioned. Dr. Waterland.

[s] — he shall perish everlastingly.] Shall finally forfeit his claim to the benefits of the Christian covenant: shall be for ever excluded from the only stated claim of promised mercy. And "without doubt" he, who does not embrace the truths proposed by revelation, has no title

[r] And the Catholick Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, &c.] This new manifestation of the object of our adoration is what is peculiar to the professors of our religion, and indispensably necessary to the right notion of salvation as laid down in the sacred writings. The belief of a God, of a Providence, of duty owing in this life, of an account to be given of it in the next, is common to all that are in any degree reasonable creatures, and pretend to what is called natural religion. But the worship of the holy Trinity is appropriated to Christian believers; is that which Mahometans, Jews, and Pagans ridicule and blaspheme; but which the eternal Son of God came down from heaven to reveal to and to establish in his Church upon earth. This requiring of worship to the sacred Three cuts off all pretence of its being a speculative or uninteresting doctrine. This made it practical in the highest degree, and made the practice instructive to the understanding, as well as expressive of the devotion of the heart. It implied an acknowledgment of the real divinity of each, as nothing but that truth could justify this practice; and, that truth being admitted, this duty necessarily arose from it.

It was prescribed, indeed, not only by precept, but by the actual exercise of it: and the baptismal institution was at once an injunction of this duty, and an eminent instance of the discharge of it. The solemn dedication of all disciples to the service of "the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," in the authoritative method of their first admission into the covenant of salvation, was the highest act of worship; and whilst it fulfilled a present performance of it, bound to the future perpetual exercise of it. That we "worship one God in Trinity," is what we have done already, and what we then professed ourselves obliged for ever to do hereafter. Archdeacon Dodwell.

The doctrine of the Trinity is doubtless the first and fundamental article of our faith; and for a Christian to deny it, is the greatest contradiction that can be. For to such we may well apply the words of St. Paul, "unto what then were ye baptized?" The form of baptism, as prescribed by our Saviour Himself, is a plain acknowledgment of the doctrine of the Trinity; that is, of three divine Persons, distinguished by the titles of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, constituting one divine Being or nature, which we call God. To be baptized into the name of these three, is to acknowledge their divine power and dominion over us, and to dedicate ourselves to them, as the objects of our faith, hope, and worship. Agreeably hereto, we are told, that "the catholick faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity;" that is, as distinguished by three Persons: and "Trinity in Unity;" that is, three Persons united in one God; the word "Trinity" signifying nothing more than "Three;" so that to object to the use of this word, because it is not found in Scripture, is most absurd. It is the doctrine, not the word, we contend for; and if three divine Persons, or agents, are mentioned as they are throughout the Bible, and at the same time we are told that there is but one God, we cannot, I think, express this doctrine more properly than by the words Trinity in Unity. As to the proofs of this great article of our faith, they are so numerous, and so clear and obvious to every impartial and unprejudiced reader of the Bible, that I shall not recite them. The argument drawn from our baptism is strong and conclusive; and the more it is weighed and considered, the more convincing it will appear. Besides, the names, attributes, and acts of the Deity are so often ascribed to the Son and Holy Spirit throughout both the Old and New Testaments, particularly in the latter, as to leave us no doubt of the divinity of their nature; since God, who has declared that He "will not give his glory to another," would never have thus dignified the highest of created beings. Waldo.

[s] Neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the Substance.] Here would be no need of these particular cautions, or critical terms, in relation to this point, had men been content with the plain primitive faith in its native simplicity. But as there have been a set of men, called Sabellians, who have erroneously taught that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are all one Person, who was incarnate, and suffered, and rose again, making the Father (and Holy Ghost) to have suffered as well as the Son (from thence called Patripassians), hence it becomes necessary to caution every pious Christian against "confounding" the Persons, as those men have done. And as there have been others, particularly the Arians, who have pretended very falsely, that the three Persons are three Substances, and of different kinds, divided from each other, one being before the other, existing when the other two were not, as also being present, where the other two are not present; these false and dangerous tenets having been spread abroad, it is become necessary to give a caution against "dividing the Substance," as these have done, very much to the detriment of sobriety and truth. Dr. Waterland.

If it be said that Person is not a Scripture word, as applied on this occasion, it would be sufficient to say, that it is a word, that best sets forth the sense of Scripture, so as not to confound the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, with each other, but to keep up the distinction between them without dividing the Substance. But, in reality, we have the authority of Scripture for using this very term in speaking of the distinction between the sacred Three. The Son of God is said by St. Paul to be "the express image of his Father's person," Heb. i. 3. The same Apostle elsewhere says, "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the person of Jesus Christ," 2 Cor. iv. 6. Our translators have injured the sense of this text, by rendering it, "in the face of Jesus Christ," because the original word might in itself bear that meaning: but the context shews that it cannot bear it in that place; and the same translators have rightly rendered the same word in a passage very little before it, "if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave any thing, for your sakes forgave I it in the person of Christ," 2 Cor. ii. 10. Thus both the Greek words (ὑπόστασις and πρόσωπον) signifying a Person, are in the New Testament applied to the Son of God as distinct from the Father; and the Church had therefore even Scriptural authority for using this expression, and speaking of the error of "confounding the Persons." Archdeacon Dodwell.

[t] For there is one Person &c.] The Creed having thus far declared what "is the catholick faith," and "set forth in order a declaration of those things, which are most surely believed among us," proceeds now to the proof of it, and introduces, under particular heads, a demonstration of the general truth of a "Trinity in Unity." In this respect it differs, not in substance, but in form, from other Creeds; for whilst they teach, assert, and acknowledge the genuine doctrines of Christianity, they do not use arguments, but leave men to the perusal of their Bible for the evidence of those truths, and undertake no more than to recapitulate a summary of the principal contents of it. Whereas this Creed goes on in the argumentative method to shew, why we ought not, in our exposition or belief of this article, either to "confound the Persons, or to divide the Substance." Archdeacon Dodwell.

John v. 17, 18. Phil. ii. 5, 6. Heb. i. 8. Acts v. 3, 4. 1 Cor. vi. 19. Col. i. 16, 17 1 Tim. i. 17.

Before the proper divinity of Christ was questioned by Arius, few words and little explanation were necessary; before the Persons of the Godhead were confounded by Sabellius, no affirmation to the contrary was demanded. But, when these men began to judge the articles of faith by reason; when they applied reason to combat plain and positive assertions in the word of God; they demanded satisfaction upon points that were not the object of reason, but of faith; and when no satisfaction could be given them, they levelled Scripture to their reason, instead of building their faith on Scripture; they interpreted by a figure what is literal, they distorted what was plain.

If reason is the noblest gift of God, still let us not raise it to an equality with divine wisdom; if we ask what is truth, and search after truth, let us restrain ourselves within the bounds that God has fixed to reason. Let the wisest then try their reason in contemplating God Himself, his existence, omnipotence, prescience, eternity, or any other attribute: and if their reason is not checked in its flight; if truth, demonstrative truth, which they require, is to be found; if they are not stopped short with mystery, that word which they deride, that idea which they abhor; let them boast of a reason which other men have not, and which is peculiar to themselves.

If God has revealed Himself by reason to the heart of the heathen, if God has revealed Himself to the Hebrew in the Old Testament, I maintain that there is still inexplicable mystery in both revelations; and if there are additional mysteries in the Christian revelation, so be it; we are content to embrace these mysteries as articles of faith, to bow down our reason and our opinions before the word of God, to believe that He will not, He cannot deceive us, and that, if we are mistaken in interpreting his word, He will pardon our infirmity, and reward us for our intention, if not for our knowledge.

We confess then the Trinity in Unity to be a mystery; but if Christ is called God in Scripture, and the Holy Ghost God, and yet we read, "Hear, O Israel! the Lord thy God is one God," what remains for us but to adore in silent humility, what we cannot comprehend; and allow, with the Athanasian Creed, that, though every Person by Himself is Lord and God, yet there are not three Gods or three Lords, but one God and one Lord.

The same reasoning applies to all those repetitions in the Creed, which some assert offend their ears, and distract their minds; for, if Christ is God and the Holy Ghost God, they must be uncreate, incomprehensible, and eternal; these are all attributes of the Deity, and each Person severally must partake of these attributes, if He partakes of the Godhead.

The substance of the Godhead is an equal mystery. All pious men, and the catholick church itself, would have been silent on this head if they had been permitted; but when Sabellius maintained on one hand, that the three Persons were only three names, or three operations, or three modes of expressing one God; and the Arians, on the other, taught that the Son was not of the same substance with the Father; the church was either obliged to profess that Christ was not God, as He is styled in Scripture, or to declare, with the Athanasian Creed, that we neither confounded the Persons, as the Sabellians did, nor divided the Unity, as the Arians did. For, if Christ is not of the same substance with the Father, then is He not perfect God; then two different substances make two different Gods, a God superior, and a God inferior; our idea of God is confounded; we see no reason why He is called God in Scripture, or what we are to understand by the title.

It is agreeable to the same deduction, that we are compelled to acknowledge that "in this Trinity none is afore or after other, none is greater or less than another; but the whole three Persons are co-eternal together and co-equal." The title of God given to the second and third Person implies this; for though we understand that the Father is first in order, as unoriginate, that is, derived from none; the Son second, as begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghost third, as proceeding from both; though we confess that the Father is supreme in office, and that the Son and Holy Ghost condescend to inferior offices; still in duration, dignity, and other attributes peculiar to the Deity, they are co-equal.

Would to God, that questions of this sort had never been agitated, or professions of this kind never been required of us! Reason and language fail us, while we mention these subjects; and, while we are compelled to renounce the doctrines of our adversaries, we tremble at the ground we stand on ourselves.

I speak this not with a spirit of doubt, but in all humility of soul; for if we say, with St. John, "the Word was God," or, with St. Paul, that, "being in the form of God, he thought it not robbery to be equal with God," we cannot disallow the deduction of the Creed, without explaining away the meaning of the texts; and if we depart from the plain and literal sense of the Scripture, we may explain away our whole religion.

The conclusion of all these several assertions in the Creed is, that the Unity in Trinity and Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped. Worship follows the idea of God; and if we are told on one hand that the worshipping of angels is a sin, which St. Paul expressly declares; and on the other that the angels are commanded to worship the Son; and that the saints in heaven do worship Him; what doubt can we have of worshipping the three Persons in the Godhead, or the Godhead in the three Persons? Dean Vincent.

[u] —incomprehensible,] The English version here varies from the original. In the Latin, which was the language in which this Creed was first penned, it stands thus; "the Father immense, the Son immense, and the Holy Ghost immense." When this translation was first made in our native tongue, the word "incompre-

And yet they are not three Almighties: but one Almighty.

John i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Acts xx. 28; v. 4. 1 Cor. vi. 19. So the Father is God, the Son is God: and the Holy Ghost is God.

And yet they are not three Gods: but one God.

And yet not three Lords: but one Lord.

For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity: to acknowledge every Person by himself to be God and Lord;

So are we forbidden by the Catholick Religion: to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

The Father is made of none: neither created, nor begotten. John v. 26.

The Son is of the Father alone: not made, nor created, but begotten. John i. 14. 18; iii. 16. 18. Heb. i. 5, 6. 8. 10, 11; v. 5. 1 John iv. 9.

So there is one Father, not three Fathers; one Son, not three Sons: one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

hensible" was not confined to the sense it now bears, as inconceivable, or beyond or above our understanding; but it then meant not comprehended within any limits, and thus answered to the original expression and notion of immensity. Archdeacon Dodwell.

[x] So that in all things, as is aforesaid: the Unity in Trinity, &c.] The reference, here made to what had been said before, belongs to the beginning of the Creed, where it had been said almost in the very same words, "The catholick faith is this, that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity." It was there laid down as a positive assertion, as a declaration of the professed doctrine of the church. It is here resumed as an inference from all the particulars, that had since been taught and proved from Scripture and reason. Had that doctrine and worship been acquiesced in, as plainly drawn from the baptismal form, that short sentence had in this respect been Creed sufficient. But when men, in attempting to explain the Trinity, advanced, or seemed to advance, notions repugnant to the divine Unity; or when, in adhering to that most fundamental point, they destroyed the distinctions of the sacred Three, which had been established in words as plain as the Scripture could use, then such errors were to be renounced in form; and it was judged necessary, that the members of the Church should in such instances be directed to declare what they did not believe, as well as what they did believe. Whatever notion "confounded the Persons," or "divided the Substance," was equally to be rejected, and every sentence which is inserted in this Creed, has a view to some error or heresy on the one side or the other.

However it was particularly necessary to prove the several attributes of each Person, as here specified, the uncreatedness, the incomprehensibility, or infinity, the eternity, the divinity, the lordship, or supreme dominion, of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, in order to intitle them to worship from us, and to justify us in the joint exercise of it. St. Paul severely censures those ignorant idolaters, who, "when they knew not God, did service unto them, which by nature are no Gods." (Gal. iv. 8.) And God Himself by his prophet declares adoration to be unalienably his sole prerogative. "I am the Lord; that is my name, and my glory will I not give to another," Isa. xlii. 8. Yet it is the declared design of the Father Himself, that "all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father," John v. 23. St. Paul adds expressly, "When he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him," Heb. i. 6. And we find this injunction obeyed and exemplified by the whole host of heaven, Rev. v. 12, 13. Every benediction likewise "in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost;" every oath and appeal made to Christ, and to "conscience as bearing witness in the Holy Ghost," is a solemn act of adoration, intended as an authoritative pattern. This part of the Creed concludes with the repetition of the definitive sentence at the beginning of it. Archdeacon Dodwell.

[y] He therefore that will be saved, must thus think of the Trinity.] He, that will secure a title to the promised salvation through Christ, must embrace the doctrines that Christ has revealed, and obey the rules that Christ has established. He must profess the belief and adore the Persons, of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; for, without this, he cannot so much as be admitted a member of the Church. He must "with his heart believe this unto justification, and with his mouth make confession thereof unto salvation," as St. Paul speaks, Rom. x. 10. The doctrine of the Trinity, if true, must be a truth of great importance, for it is connected with every article of our religion, whether more or less speculative or practical. The acknowledgment or the rejection of it alters the very notion of our justification and salvation, and either represents it as a mystery of mercy in the conjunction of infinite justice, undeviating righteousness, and unlimited goodness, or as the easy grant of a tender Being, who has more regard to the happiness than to the holiness of his creatures.

On this account so much stress is laid on the necessity of embracing this article, and it is said, that "he must thus think of the Trinity, who would be saved." He who has such instruction offered, and such evidence of it laid before him, is answerable for his neglect, if he does not admit the truth; and falls finally short of the only federal title to mercy: without our determining any thing concerning their states who never heard of Christ; or theirs, to whom the truths of the Gospel are imperfectly proposed, or unfairly represented; or theirs, who, under all advantages in these respects, have yet perhaps equal difficulties to struggle with, through personal incapacity, or unsurmountable prepossessions. "To their own Master these stand or fall," Rom. xiv. 4. We are only to apply "to the law and to the testimony," and to say, what they must believe and do to be saved, who would secure their title to salvation upon the terms prescribed in the Gospel.

Now the proofs of the general doctrine of the "Trinity in Unity" are plain, and short, and easy, open to every understanding. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are distinguished from each other by peculiar acts and offices. Yet divine names, titles, attributes, and offices, are ascribed to each of them; and the Unity of the Deity is as unquestionably established. To this general doctrine alone belong the condemnatory sentences, and not to the particulars in view in the observations following, which may safely be unknown, where the opposite errors are never heard of. But, if ignorance be an excuse for not understanding orthodoxy, it is no excuse for embracing heresy. If the controversy be looked into, the review of this Creed cannot fail of being of use in it. It cannot but be observed, that the several heresies contradict each other, and do in their turn support each part of this Scriptural doctrine of a "Trinity in Unity." The Sabellians allow the strict and real divinity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and though they "confound the Persons" they do not "divide the Substance." The Arians allow the distinction between the sacred Three in the highest degree, for they look on them as three distinct Beings; and they do thereby "divide the Substance" though they do not "confound the Persons." Take the acknowledgment of the former for the undivided Unity, and that of the latter for the real subsistence of a Trinity; and the orthodox Creed will stand the more confirmed, clear of their inconsistencies and palpable opposition to some of the plainest passages in the sacred writings. Archdeacon Dodwell.

[z] Furthermore, it is necessary &c.] From the doctrine of the Trinity, the Creed passes on to that of the "incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ;" the right belief of which it declares to be "necessary to everlasting salvation." The word "incarnation," though not to be met with in Scripture, expresses precisely what we read there in other words, even that "great mystery of godliness," as the Apostle calls it, "God manifest in the flesh," 1 Tim. iii. 16. With an account of this wonderful dispensation St. John begins his Gospel, declaring that the Word, or the Son of God, who "was in the beginning with God, and was God;" "by whom all things were made; in whom was life," &c. (all which expressions he uses to shew his true and proper divinity) that this same divine Person "was made flesh" or was incarnate, and "dwelt among us," &c.; that is, He who was truly God, by taking our nature upon Him, became truly man; "being made in all things like unto his brethren," sin only excepted. This doctrine, as well as that of the Trinity, having been denied by some hereticks, and greatly depraved and corrupted by others, the author of our Creed judged it necessary to state it in the clearest terms possible; keeping close to the sense of Scripture, and guarding it carefully against all false glosses, and wrong interpretations. Waldo.

With respect to this article, namely, the doctrine of the incarnation, first, we profess to believe that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and man: this we assert in opposition to those, on the one hand, who thought Christ not fully and completely man, but a messenger from God, under a human appearance: and who supposed his suffering on the cross to be a mere representation or delusion of the senses; while on the other hand we resist the opinion of those who thought Him not fully God. It is for this reason we say, perfect God and perfect man, of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting; God as begotten of the Father before the worlds, man as born of the virgin in the world; and this we are compelled to say, because if He is not God, there is no covenant of redemption; if He is not man, the satisfaction on the cross is a delusion.

Equal to the Father as touching his Godhead, and inferior to the Father as touching his manhood. The equality to the Father has been proved already from St. Paul: the inferiority we the more readily acknowledge; because all the force of our adversaries is annulled by the concession. They are very full upon those texts "the Father is greater than I. There is none good but one, that is God. Of that day knoweth no man: no, not the Son, but the Father only." All these texts are literal Scripture, as much as those already quoted; but why are they produced against us, who never deny them? We confess the inferiority of the Son as well as they do, but not in their way. We grant that the Son while in flesh prayed to the Father, and acknowledged his own inferiority; but the Son in heaven is God, and sits on the right hand of God, partaker of the Divine Majesty. All the texts, that prove the inferiority of the Son as man, the subordination of the Son as the second Person, are good texts; but is there a single text to be produced from Scripture which will prove that He is not eternal, or not of the same substance with the Father? This is the point in question between us, and we challenge them to the proof. Dean Vincent.

[a] For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man: so &c.] This simile or comparison, the only one the author has ventured to introduce into his Creed, may serve to give us some faint idea, however inadequate, of the mysterious union of the two natures in our blessed Saviour; at least thus much we may learn from it, not to deny or disbelieve any article of faith, because we cannot fully comprehend it, nor to reject a doctrine as contradictory or impossible, because we cannot explain it; for, according to that way of reasoning, we may believe nothing. How can we account for, or explain, the manner of our living, or moving, or thinking? Yet shall we therefore deny that we live, move, and think? So in regard to the union of soul and body; how it is effected, I am sure the wisest man living cannot explain; but that they are so united, cannot be denied. That two such different and contrary substances, as spirit and matter, should be so closely and intimately joined together in the human species, never to be separated till death, and to be reunited at the general resurrection, and so to remain to all eternity, is to our short-sighted and imperfect faculties truly amazing and unaccountable; but still there is nothing in it impossible or contradictory; nothing but what the wisest and most learned persons, as well as the ignorant and illiterate, firmly believe. And if we thus assent to an undoubted truth, relating to our own nature, though we cannot fully comprehend, or explain it: surely we ought not to dispute against what the word of God reveals to us concerning the divine nature, and its union with ours, however it may exceed our capacities to understand it. We should rather admire and adore "the wisdom of God in a mystery; even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory," and to accomplish our salvation, 1 Cor. ii. 7. Waldo.

[b] Who suffered for our salvation, &c.] The remaining part of this Creed relates to other articles founded on these already considered, but less controverted and more immediately practical. These shew the importance of those principles on which they are established; representing the end of this mysterious incarnation, the completion of it, its evidence, its effects, and its infinite consequence to us in our final happiness or misery, according to our improvement by, or neglect, or misapplication of it. This is the great truth with which we are to awaken our hearers, not only "witnessing a good confession" of faith before enemies as well as friends, but shewing its influence on ourselves, and our zeal to promote its beneficial effects on others, by strict example and warm admonition, as well as by sound instruction; warning them to "flee from the wrath to come," and to secure, whilst it may be secured, a title to everlasting bliss. Archdeacon Dodwell.

[c] This is the Catholick Faith: which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.] This has been already explained of a federal title to the merits of Christ and the glorious privileges of his covenant in the secure promise of unmerited pardon, and even of endless happiness. But the requisite condition of obtaining this title, here specified, directs our view to suitable conduct, as well as to unfeigned assent. He does not "believe faithfully," who is not sincerely influenced by his faith to an holy life. This is an article never to be omitted or forgotten in our discourses on these doctrinal points: if our life is not amended and reformed, a speculative assent to these great truths may aggravate our sin and punishment, but cannot possibly atone for the one, or prevent the other, or even lessen either. It will add self-condemnation to both. Archdeacon Dodwell.

The sense of this concluding verse may be thus given. This is the sum and substance of the true doctrine of the Gospel, of that "faith, which was once delivered unto the saints," and which the catholick or universal church, still teaches, which if a man believe faithfully and sincerely, and lives suitably to that belief, he shall be saved; but, if he wilfully and obstinately refuses to believe, we condemn him not by any judgment of our own, we wish him no evil, but heartily pray for his conversion and salvation; referring him to the words of our blessed Saviour which we dare not dispute, or elude; "he that believeth not, shall be damned." Waldo.

From what has been already said it will be found, that damnatory clauses, or anathemas, as they are angrily called, deriving their authority from Scripture, should be considered as awful admonitions, which it hath seemed good to Divine wisdom to announce generally, in order to condemn an indifference of mind in matters of religious principle; to correct a fond admiration of change or novelty; and to intimidate, under the severest penalties of God's displeasure, the vain, or interested, from broaching their wild and pernicious heresies.

If it shall happen from the influence of prevailing heresies, that it may be expedient to draw up a summary of faith, not simply by a plain recital of positive articles, but to add likewise particular and guarded explications of them, in direct refutation of subtle and intricate errours, it may well happen, that terms or positions, thus calculated to preclude or obviate these errors, may, with the errors themselves, be sometimes too remote for vulgar apprehension.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;
As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

In such cases it will be evident, that neither articles of faith so conceived, nor the damnatory clauses accompanying them, will, or can be intended to, apply to those, who do not apprehend them.

Still will no just presumption against the utility of such a summary, or of such clauses, attach to them, even as they respect those, who may not at present understand their design. To these persons they will be nevertheless a security for the purity of their faith, whenever that faith shall be endangered by the misrepresentation of error, or artifice; for whenever they shall be tempted to admit false explications, or plausible objections to their faith, they will then at least be as capable of admitting such explications as are true; and, without delusively trusting to the apparent but unreal decision of their own judgment in matters beyond their reach, they will, in the Creeds of their church, always have the support of that authority, to which alone the unlearned ought to have recourse. A Creed of this kind may therefore be considered as a preservative against heresy, applicable as occasion shall require; and useful just so far as the danger of error shall occur.

If this Creed therefore be not in daily use, it will be desirable to remind the unlearned of such a preservative, by the repetition of it at stated times, and upon those occasions especially, when the great and leading objects of our faith are made the subjects of our meditation.

Such an use of it will have another important advantage, as it regards the unlearned: for, as it is previously made a test of the faith of their appointed teacher; so, by the stated repetition of it, it becomes a test of his perseverance in that faith; and they are thereby rendered as secure, as human provisions can render them, of the justness and consistency of his doctrinal instructions.

But to the publick at large a summary of this kind is valuable on many more accounts.

As an explicit and correct profession of the fundamental doctrines of our religion in the churches by which it is adopted, it manifests to the whole Christian world the extent and unity of that faith, which, existing from the commencement of the Gospel, has for the space of twelve or thirteen centuries been secured by the same form of words through the Latin or Western churches of Christendom. Thus again these churches present their institutes of religious faith more explicitly to the candid and mature examination of every liberal and well-informed mind, who is thereby enabled to judge of the degree of Scriptural authority, upon which they rest, and of the purity of the church, within whose pale he has been, or may wish to be, admitted.

The ministry are likewise thereby instructed more fully in the doctrines, which they undertake to teach, and forewarned more in detail of the heresies which they engaged to oppose; and, by these stated repetitions, are reminded of the strict obligations, which they have taken upon themselves; of the fraud, which they impose upon the religious establishment, so long as they receive the emoluments of a station and function, whilst they refuse to discharge the duties attached to them; and of the guilt, which they contract before God, when, by neglect or opposition to these doctrines, they discountenance articles of faith, which they voluntarily and publickly have engaged to promote. Bp. Cleaver.

With respect to the public reading of this Creed, which it is become the practice to omit in some places, it is desirable for the clergy to consider, how offensive this omission must be to the orthodox part of their congregation, who are thereby deprived of an opportunity of professing their faith publickly in the manner which the Church has directed. And they may be asked, whether is it more reasonable to offend those by an irregular omission; or to disgust the heterodox by reading what they are commanded? Waldo.

To the Sceptic, the Arian, and the Socinian, we do not expect to find such a Creed acceptable, because it was designed to restrain the fantastick and pernicious opinions started on their part upon the subjects contained in it.

But every firm and steady believer may still, and indeed ought to, hold high the value of the only Creed delivered to us from antiquity; which states that first and great principle of Christian revelation, the importance and necessity of a just faith.

Upon us, the ministers of the Church, especially, it is incumbent, as occasions offer, to explain and illustrate its design and uses to the more unlearned, as well as to obviate the crude exceptions made against its doctrines or language; to derive its due weight of authority from the venerable antiquity of its origin; and to draw an argument of its merits from the universal approbation, with which it has been received, and from the place which it now holds in the Confession, if not in the Liturgy, of every church in Europe, papal and reformed: from no one of which could it be removed, without authorizing, on the part of that church, a presumption, that its doctrines were erroneous.

It has now, indeed, for a long succession of ages borne so great a share in the just interpretation and support of our Christian faith, that it may well afford a doubt, how far without it this faith itself would, in the present degree of purity and correctness, be so well maintained; especially that important principle of it which stands foremost in this Creed, and which cannot meet our observation too often. This they have well judged, who, at different times, have proposed to us to part with it, merely to gain in return the applause of a liberal and candid concession, an inducement too usually proffered in contempt, and paid without sincerity.

Concessions, indeed, in matters of less importance, have too generally a very doubtful effect: but who would be responsible for a concession of such high concern? If this Creed be really what, I trust, the preceding considerations prove it to be, an important fence to the faith of that holy church, which Christ hath purchased with his blood; who would not tremble at the proposal of laying waste a fence, which, in any degree, hath afforded protection to what was obtained for us at so inestimable a price; and of inviting, by a voluntary surrender of our present security, renewed instances of insult in repeated and incessant attacks, to be made upon the terms and obligations of our Christian covenant? Bp. Cleaver.

When this Creed was written, it was both in the East and West churches accepted as a treasure of inestimable price by as many as had not given up even the very ghost of belief: howbeit not then so expedient to be publickly used as now in the Church of God. Hooker.

Upon the whole, it is exceeding useful and even necessary for every church to have some such form as this, or something equivalent, open and common to all its members; that none may be led astray for want of proper caution, and previous instruction in what so nearly concerns the whole structure and fabrick of the Christian faith. As to this particular form, it has so long prevailed and has so well answered the use intended, that, all things considered, there can be no sufficient reason for changing any part of it, much less for laying the whole aside. There are several other Creeds very good ones, (though somewhat larger,) which, had they been made choice of for common use, might possibly have done as well. The Creeds I mean, (of which there is a great number,) drawn up after the council of Chalcedon, and purposely contrived to obviate all the heresies that ever had infected the Christian church. But those that dislike this Creed, would much more dislike the other; as being still more particular and explicit, in regard to the Nestorian, Eutychian, and Monothelite heresies, and equally full and clear for the doctrine of the Trinity.

To conclude; so long as there shall be any men left to oppose the doctrines which this Creed contains, so long will it be expedient, and even necessary, to continue the use of it, in order to preserve the rest; and, I suppose, when we have none remaining to find fault with the doctrines, there will be none to object against the use of the Creed, or so much as wish to have it laid aside. Dr. Waterland.

THE LITANY.

¶ Here followeth the LITANY[d], or General Supplication[e], to be sung or said after Morning Prayer upon Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays[f], and at other times when it shall be commanded[g] by the Ordinary[h].

---

[d] Here followeth the Litany.] Till the last review in 1661 the Litany was designed to be a distinct service by itself, and to be used some time after the Morning Prayer was over. Wheatly. And in the rubrick before the Commination it was ordered, that after Morning Prayer is done, which was then done betimes, and while it was yet morning, not put off as since till towards noon, "the people shall be called together again to the Litany, by the tolling of a bell, after the accustomed manner." So that in those days the custom was to go home after Morning Prayer, and to come again to the Litany. Bp. Cosin.

[e] Here followeth the Litany, or General Supplication, &c.] The word Litany is used by the most ancient Greek writers for "an earnest supplication to the gods, made in time of adverse fortune:" and in the same sense it is used in the Christian church for "a supplication and common intercession to God, when his wrath lies upon us." Such a kind of supplication was the fifty-first Psalm, which begins with "Have mercy upon me," &c. and may be called David's Litany. Such was that Litany of God's appointing, Joel ii. 17; where, in a general assembly, the priests were to say with tears, "Spare thy people, O Lord," &c. And such was that Litany of our Saviour, Luke xxii. 44, which kneeling he often repeated with strong crying and tears, Heb v. 7; and St. Paul reckons up "supplications" among the kinds of Christian offices, which he enjoins shall be daily used, 1 Tim. ii. 1; which supplications are generally expounded Litanies for removal of some great evil. As for the form in which they are now made, namely, in short requests by the priest, to which the people all answer, St. Chrysostom saith it is derived from the primitive age. And not only the Western, but the Eastern church also, have ever since retained this way of praying. This was the form of the Christians' prayers in Tertullian's time, on the days of their stations, Wednesdays and Fridays, by which he tells us they removed drought. Thus in St. Cyprian's time they requested God for deliverance from enemies, for obtaining rain, and for removing or moderating his judgments. And St. Ambrose hath left a form of Litany, which bears his name, agreeing in many things with this of ours. For when miraculous gifts ceased, they began to write down divers of those primitive forms, which were the original of our modern office: and about the year 400 these Litanies began to be used in procession, the people walking barefoot, and saying them with great devotion. And Mamertus, bishop of Vienna, did collect a Litany to be so used, by which his country was delivered from dreadful calamities, in the year 460. And soon after Sidonius, bishop of Arverne, upon the Gothick invasion, made use of the same office; and about the year 500, the Council of Orleans enjoined they should be used at one certain time of the year, in this publick way of procession: and in the next century Gregory the Great did, out of all the Litanies extant, compose that famous sevenfold Litany, by which Rome was delivered from a grievous mortality, which hath been a pattern to all Western churches ever since; and ours comes nearer to it, than that in the present Roman missal, wherein later popes had put in the invocation of saints, which our Reformers have justly expunged. But by the way we may note, that the use of Litanies, in procession about the fields, came up but in the time of Theodosius in the East, and in the days of Mamertus of Vienna, and Honoratus of Marseilles, namely, in the year 460, in the West; and it was later councils which did enjoin the use of it in Rogation week; but the forms of earnest supplications were far more ancient and truly primitive. As for our own Litany, it is now enjoined on Wednesdays and Fridays, the two ancient fasting days of the Christians, in which they had of old more solemn prayers; and on Sundays, when there is the fullest assembly: and no church in the world hath so complete a form, as the curious and comprehensive method of it will declare. Dean Comber.

[f] —on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays,] Epiphanius referreth this order to the apostles. The Jews in their synagogues observed for their special days of assembling together those that dwelt in villages, Mondays and Thursdays besides the sabbath. The precedent of the Jews directed the church not to do less than they did. They made choice of Mondays and Thursdays, in regard of some great calamities, that befel their nation upon those days; and that they might not be three days together, without doing some publick service to God. The Church had the like reason of Wednesdays and Fridays, whereon our Saviour was betrayed and crucified; the moral reason of once in three days, with a convenient distance from Sunday, concurring. The observance of these days for publick assemblies was universal, and the practice of the oldest times. Bp. Cosin.

[g] —when it shall be commanded by the Ordinary.] Next to the Morning and Evening service in our Prayer Book stands the Litany, or most earnest supplication for averting God's judgments, and procuring his mercy. This earnestness, it was thought, would be best excited and expressed by the people's interposing frequently to repeat with their own mouths the solemn form of "beseeching" God to "deliver" and to "hear" them; in which however the minister is understood to join equally; as the congregation are in every particular specified by him. Such Litanies have been used in the Church at least 1400 years. And they were appointed first for Wednesdays and Fridays, these being appropriated to penitence and humiliation, and for other fasts: but not long after for Sundays also; there being then the largest congregation, and most solemn worship: and our Litany is farther directed to be used at such other times, as the Ordinary shall think proper. Originally it was intended for a distinct service; to come after the Morning Prayer, as the rubrick of our Liturgy still directs, and before the office for the Communion, at a proper distance of time from each: of which custom a few churches preserve still, or did lately, some remains. But in the rest, convenience or inclination hath prevailed to join them all three together: excepting that in some places there is a psalm or anthem between the first and second; and between the second and third, almost every where: besides that the latter part of the Morning Prayer is, most of it, ordered to be omitted, when the Litany is said with it. But still by this close conjunction many things may appear improper repetitions: which, if the offices were separate, would not. However, as it is, they, who use extempore prayers in publick, have small right to reproach us on this head. For doth it not frequently happen, that during one assembly of theirs, different ministers praying successively, or the same minister in several prayers, or perhaps in one only, shall fall into as many repetitions, as are in the different parts of our Liturgy, or more? But, be that as it will, to these last all persons would easily be reconciled, if an interval were placed, in their minds at least, between the services; and they would consider each, when it begins, as a new and independent one, just as if it were a fresh time of meeting together.

The Litany of our Church is not quite the same with any other: but differs very little from those of the Lutherans in Germany and Denmark. It is larger than the Greek; but shorter than the Roman, which is half filled up with the names of saints invoked: whereas we invoke, first, the three Persons of the holy Trinity, separately and jointly; then in a more particular manner our Redeemer and Mediator, "to whom all power is given in heaven and earth," Matt. xxviii. 18. Abp. Secker.

The posture, in which the minister is to repeat the Litany, is not prescribed in any present rubrick, expect that, as it is now a part of the Morning Service for the days above mentioned, it is included in the rubrick at the end of the suffrages after the second Lord's Prayer, which orders "all to kneel" in that place, after which there is no direction for "standing." And the Injunctions of King Edward and Queen Elizabeth both appoint, that "the priests, with others of the choir, shall kneel in the midst of the church, and sing or say plainly and distinctly the Litany, which is set forth in English, with all the suffrages following, to the intent the people may hear and answer, &c." As to the posture of the people, nothing needs to be said in relation to that, because, whenever the priest kneels, they are always to do the same. Wheatly.

If the Litany be, as certainly it is, our most fervent address to God, fit is it that it should be made in the most significant, that is, in the lowest posture of supplication. L'Estrange.

[h] Ordinary.] This word, which we have received from the civil law, means the person, who hath the proper and regular jurisdiction, as of course and of common right; in opposition to persons who are extraordinarily appointed. In some acts of parliament we find the bishop to be called "Ordinary;" and so he is taken at the common law, as having ordinary jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical. Dr. Burn.

[i] O God &c.] We have a divine command to use Litanies in time of trouble; for the Scripture saith, "Is any afflicted, let him pray," James v. 13. The person we pray to, is God, whose order is, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee," Ps. l. 15. The thing we pray for, is mercy; so David begins his great penitential, "Have mercy on me, &c." Ps. li. 1: and all the Litanies in the world begin with this solemn word, "Lord, have mercy on us:" so that this invocation is the sum of the whole Litany, being a particular address for mercy, first to each Person in the glorious Trinity, and then to them altogether: and the address is urged by two motives; first, because we are "miserable," and, secondly, because we are "sinners," upon both which grounds we extremely need "mercy:" which being as well a confession of faith, as an epitome of the whole Litany, every one is to repeat these four verses intirely after the minister. Dean Comber.

As we have the authority of Scripture for the people saying, "Amen" at the end of prayers, put up by the minister, so we have Scripture precedent for their joining vocally throughout the whole prayer. See Acts iv. 24. Dr. Bennet.

[k] O God the Father, of heaven: &c.] As we acknowledge every person by Himself to be God and Lord, so we worship each Person apart, beginning with "God the Father of heaven," that is, our heavenly Father, whose throne the heaven is; and as He is our "Father," He is gracious, as He is in "heaven," He is powerful, and can do whatever He pleases, Ps. cxv. 3. As for us, we confess ourselves to be "miserable sinners," and so need both his power to deliver us out of our troubles, and his mercy to pardon us for all our sins. Dean Comber.

We are "sinners" by breaking his laws: and we are "miserable sinners," by incurring all the punishments due to the breach of them. We are sinners against the Father of heaven, by forgetting his works, and the wonderful things He hath done for us; by being unmindful of the rock that begat us, and forgetting the God that formed us; by not glorifying God, as our Creator and Preserver, nor regarding the operations of his hand: so that we may say with the prodigal, "Father, we have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and are no more worthy to be called thy son." Dr. Hole.

[l] O God the Son, Redeemer of the world: &c.] The Arians, and other heretieks, denied the divinity of the Son, and so refused to worship Him; but we, with the true catholick church, give the Son the same worship with the "Father," John v. 23, calling Him not barely the Son of God, but "God the Son," that is, we own Him to be God equal with the Father, and make the same request to Him for mercy, giving Him the title of "Redeemer of the world," Heb. ii. 9; 2 Cor. v. 19; not the Redeemer of one sect or sort of men, as some parties proudly pretend, but the Redeemer of all mankind, and therefore of us, though we confess ourselves to be miserable sinners. Dean Comber.

The second Person of the Trinity hath here the name of God given to Him, equally with the Father: and it is given to Him by holy Scripture in sundry places. St. Paul calls Him "God blessed for ever," Rom. ix. 5; and elsewhere tells us, that "he thought it no robbery," or usurpation, "to be equal with God," Phil. ii. 6. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews brings in the Father, saying to Him, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom;" and again, when He bringeth Him into the world, He saith, "Let all the angels of God worship him," Heb. i. 6. 8. Where not only the divine name, but the divine nature, and divine honours, are ascribed to Him: which cannot be but to a divine person. Dr. Hole.

We have sinned not only against God the Father, but against his Son and our Saviour, by neglecting or refusing the tenders of salvation made by Him; by not closing so heartily as we should with the proffered terms of peace and reconciliation; by slighting his holy ordinances, rejecting his word, neglecting his sacraments, not duly repenting at his call, nor believing his promises, nor giving heed to the precepts of his Gospel, nor being thankful for his death, nor being mindful of his example, nor anxious for the welfare of those souls, which He bought so dear. To Him therefore we have cause to cry for mercy and pity. Dr. Hole, Dean Comber.

[m] O God the Holy Ghost, proceeding &c.] Many of the old hereticks, and especially Macedonius, denied the divinity of the "Holy Ghost" also; but we, with the catholick church, own Him to be very "God," and after St. Paul's example, do pray to Him as God, 1 Thess. iii. 12, 13, declaring that He "proceedeth" (not from the Father by the Son, as the Greeks hold, but) "from the Father and the Son," John xv. 26. Wherefore as He is of the same nature with the Father and the Son, we make the same petition to Him for "mercy."

We were baptized in his name, and therefore we must call on his name. Dean Comber.

We make the same supplication to the third Person in the Trinity, because we have sinned against Him as well as against the two former. For though we have not, it may be, fallen into the "unpardonable sin" against Him, Matt. xii. 32, yet the best of us have many other ways sinned against the Holy Ghost, and grieved this blessed Spirit, by quenching his good motions, by resisting his calls, by neglecting his gifts, contemning his graces, by not profiting by those ordinances which are the means He uses to convert, confirm, and comfort us, and by cherishing evil thoughts and pursuing wicked purposes in spite of the methods He uses for our sanctification. Dr. Hole, Dean Comber.

[n] O holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity, &c.] We have owned the Trinity of Persons, and now we confess as Scripture teacheth us, that these three are one God, 1 John v. 7, and so we worship the whole Trinity together "as three Persons and one God," repeating the same great and necessary request for mercy from the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Dean Comber.

This we find to be suitable to the ancient practice of the catholick church, which, after a solemn invocation of each person in the Godhead, joined them all in one and the same request for mercy. And our Church here teaches us to imitate their example by doing the same; and that for a very good reason: for every sin, which we commit against any one Person in the Trinity, is committed against the rest; and the mercy and pardon, which we desire, must come from the whole: yea, the misery, from which we expect to be relieved, proceeds not from any single Person, but from the joint and undivided concurrence of the whole Trinity. Dr. Hole.

A Litany being an earnest or vehement address to the throne of grace, the earnestness or vehemence of our Litany is seen in all its parts or divisions: namely, in the invocation, in the deprecations, in the intercessions, and in the conclusion.

First, in the invocation: which is addressed, not as in other prayers, to God in general, but to every Person in the Trinity separately, and then to all the three Persons jointly. By the separate invocation we are taught to acknowledge "every person by himself to be God and Lord;" and by the joint invocation to acknowledge also that "there are not three Gods nor three Lords." So that herein is contained a creed or confession of faith: and not only so, but also a confession of sin. We say that we are "miserable sinners." And as the first confession of sin in our Liturgy, and that of faith in the Apostles' Creed, were repeated after the minister by the whole congregation; so likewise are these short forms of invocation, wherein both those confessions are united. But if these serve to express our faith and humility, how much more our importunity? Nothing in any Liturgy, ancient or modern, was ever framed, more artful or more forcible than this invocation. Dr. Bisse.

[o] Remember not, Lord, our offences, &c.] Having opened the way by the preceding invocation, we now begin to ask; and because deliverance from evil is the first step to felicity, and the proper business of Litany, we begin with these deprecations, or, as St. Paul calls them, "supplications," 1 Tim. ii. 1, which he reckons as the first kind of prayers, made for removing of evil. And both the Eastern and Western church do thus begin their Litanies; and both theirs and ours are a paraphrase upon that piece of the Lord's Prayer, "Deliver us from evil." And whether we respect the evil of sin or the evil of punishment, it is never unseasonable for us miserable sinners to pray to our "good Lord" "to deliver us." Wherefore our Church (after a petition for forbearance) doth here in a curious method reckon up all the kinds of evil in the world, as well those of sin with the causes, effects, and kinds of them in the heart and in the life, in the sixth, seventh, and eighth petitions, as those of punishment, temporal and spiritual, in the ninth and tenth petitions, from all which we pray to be delivered: adding the means by which we desire to be delivered, namely, by all that Jesus did and suffered for us, in the eleventh and twelfth petitions; and the peculiar times when we would be delivered, in our life, in death, and at the last judgment, in the thirteenth petition. Dean Comber.

Here in the first place we pray to our Redeemer and Mediator, that He would not "remember our offences, nor the offences of our forefathers:" which He may not only with justice permit to intercept from us, as they naturally often will, the blessings, that we might otherwise have inherited; but, if we have imitated wicked ancestors, instead of taking warning by them, He may with equal justice punish us more severely, not indeed than we deserve, but than He would have done otherwise, to prevent the contagion from growing general and inveterate. Accordingly the second commandment threatens to "visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children:" and the Psalmist, according to the marginal, and perhaps righter translation, prays as we do, "O remember not against us the iniquity of them, that were before us," Ps. lxxix. 8.

The words, "and be not angry with us for ever," beg, that the corrections, which He doth see fit to inflict on us, for surely we all feel some, He would in mercy shorten. It is common language, to speak of afflictions, that last any time, as if they were endless. And the expostulation of David in the just quoted Psalm, "How long, O Lord? wilt thou be angry for ever?" ver. 5, fully vindicates this petition, which was doubtless taken from thence. Abp. Secker.

In the parts now about to follow it should be observed, that the words "Good Lord, deliver us," have a respect in every place to the sentence previously uttered by the minister: so that the prayer is to be understood thus: "Good Lord, deliver us from all evil and mischief, from sin, &c." These words, "Good Lord, deliver us," are put in the last place, that the people might not seem to beg deliverance from they knew not what; but, after they had mentally uttered the several particulars together with the minister, they might in this summary manner vocally beg deliverance from them all. And certainly no words could more properly be vocally uttered by them, than those, which are but few, and yet are the principal ones, and include the substance of the whole prayer.

The frequent use of "Good Lord, deliver us," is however no vain repetition. It is every time applied to distinct matter, and consequently makes a distinct prayer: and it is as if we should say frequently, as we certainly must, in any other prayer, such words as these, "Grant, O Lord, &c." "We beseech thee, &c."

What has been said of the words, "Good Lord, deliver us," may be easily applied to the following form, "We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord:" which has always a respect to the words going before; and every time that it is used, makes a distinct prayer.

It has been already observed, that, when a prayer is used by way of responses, both minister and people are to join, at least mentally, in the whole; though they vocally pronounce only their respective parts. This should be carefully remembered in the Litany, wherein there are extraordinary occasions for it. Dr. Bennet.

[p] From all evil and mischief; from sin, &c.] Having here besought our blessed Lord to deliver us "from all evil and mischief" in general, that is, from every thing bad and hurtful to us: we deservedly rank "sin" the foremost of such things; and pray, first, against the original cause of human wickedness, the secret "crafts" and open "assaults of the devil," and its dreadful consequences, "God's wrath and everlasting damnation;" then against the principal transgression of his laws by name, subjoining, "and all other deadly sin." By this we mean not to deny, that the just "wages of" every "sin is death," Rom. vi. 23; though "there are," as we learn from St. John, "sins, not unto death," 1 John v. 16, 17, that is, comparatively; but only to pray against the peculiarly deadly with peculiar earnestness. But still, that we may leave out none, we petition lastly to be delivered "from all the deceits of the world, the flesh, and the devil;" every iniquity of every kind and degree. Abp. Secker.

[q] From lightning and tempest; &c.] Then we proceed to deprecate the present sufferings, that our sins have merited: and intreat our merciful Redeemer to preserve us, both from such, as God's immediate hand inflicts; "lightning and tempest, plague" properly so called, "pestilence" or epidemick diseases of any sort, "famine and sudden death;" and from such also, as men's unreasonable passions produce; whether they be temporal, as "battle and murder;" or spiritual, as "false doctrine," with its fruits, "heresy and schism;" and what begets them all, "hardness of heart" in regard to God's commands, and "contempt of his word," which contempt was never more widely spread and infectious, than at present.

We have indeed been blamed for praying against "sudden death." But the whole Christian church hath done it from ancient time: and nature and reason, as well as religion, directs us to do it. Some, we own, and we wish they were many, may be always prepared thoroughly, in all respects, to die at any time. Yet even these may have cause to wish for warning of their death on account of other persons. Their example under the approach of it will usually be very instructive; and their dying advice more than ordinarily beneficial to their friends, dependents, and relations: whom also their being taken away at once may shock, to a degree, for which they would be extremely sorry, whatever they might otherwise choose for themselves. But, even on their own account, Christian humility would surely desire a little space for completer preparation. And they, who profess to wish the contrary, are they so very certain, as this implies, that every part, both of their worldly affairs and their eternal concerns, is in the best condition, to which it can be brought? Or may not possibly this appearing readiness to die at any time arise, either from a secret dread to think of dying at all, or a secret unbelief, more or less, of what will follow after death? But, whatever a few may imagine best for themselves, justly or unjustly; some previous notice is undeniably best for the generality: and common prayers must be adapted to common cases; always submitting it to God, to make exceptions, where He shall think proper. Abp. Secker.

[r] From all sedition, &c.] The former evils were levelled against our own persons and estate, but these aim at the ruin of the kingdom and the Church. Sedition and privy conspiracy endeavour to subvert the government; false doctrine and heresy attempt to destroy religion: to which (on occasion of our late accursed civil war) since his majesty's happy restoration, was added, "from rebellion—and schism:" and good reason was there so to do, since that rebellion and schism did murder one of our best kings, and thousands of his loyal subjects, and also pull the Church to pieces: we have seen the sad effects, and therefore we pray against the causes. Dean Comber.

[s] By the mystery of thy holy Incarnation; &c.] Having thus expressed from what things we desire to be delivered, we earnestly intreat our good and gracious Lord to shew this mercy to us, "by the mystery of his holy Incarnation," and so on: that is, by the means, and for the sake, of all that He hath done and suffered for us. The same manner of expression is used, not only in common speech on other occasions, and in the liturgies of the ancient church on this, but in the Scripture itself: where St. Paul "beseeches" Christians "by the mercies of God," Rom. xii. 1; "by the meekness and gentleness of Christ," 2 Cor. x. 1; "by his coming and their gathering together to him," 2 Thess. ii. 1: and Daniel intercedes with God thus, "According to all thy righteousness, let thine anger be turned away: defer not for thine own sake, O my God," Dan. ix. 16. 19. Abp. Secker.

The same vehemence of devotion, before noticed in the invocation, breathes likewise in the deprecations of the Litany, namely, in those petitions against evils, whether incident to the soul or body. Now these, being many in number, and differing in kind, are cast into small divisions, or short heads of prayer, in extent resembling the Collects: which however are not concluded, as the Collects are, by a bare assent, the people saying "Amen;" but by an earnest supplication, the people crying, "Good Lord, deliver us." Again: whereas the Collects are concluded in general, "through Jesus Christ our Lord," or the like form; after these, all the particulars of his merit, all that He did, suffered, and obtained for us, from "the mystery of his holy incarnation," to his "glorious ascension and the coming of the Holy Ghost," are summed up to strengthen and increase our faith. These are called by some obsecrations: and, being recited in order by the minister, and inforced by that repeated cry of the people, "Good Lord, deliver us," how do we in a manner, "take heaven by force!" Dr. Bisse.

[t] —by thy Cross and Passion; &c.] The ancient Fathers of the Greek church in their Litany, after they had recounted all the particular pains in Christ's passion, as they are set down in the four Gospels, and by all and by every one of them called for mercy and deliverance, as here we do, added after all, and shut up all with this petition, "By thine unknown sorrows and sufferings, good Lord, have mercy upon us, save, and deliver us:" for He felt more of them than we know, or can distinctly express. Bp. Cosin.

[u] In all time of our tribulation; &c.] As we have need of protection and deliverance continually, so we proceed to beg for it, not only "in all time of our tribulation," or adversity; but "in all time of our wealth," or prosperity; for, when we seem in the most flourishing state, we are often in the most danger of evil; and of sin, the worst evil. But, as "the hour of death" is a season of peculiar trial and terror; and "the day of judgment" will determine our lot for ever: we therefore intreat his more especial grace and favour at both. The former indeed fixes our condition at the latter. But still, as the best life and death obtain acquittal and reward, only through the pardoning goodness of our Judge; we have great cause to pray for ourselves, as St. Paul did for Onesiphorus, "that we may find mercy of the Lord in that day," 2 Tim. i. 18. Abp. Secker.

[x] We sinners do beseech thee to hear us, &c.] This part of our Litany, commonly called the intercessions, is instituted by God, who commands us to "make intercessions for all men," 1 Tim. ii. 1; and it is drawn after the best and most primitive forms, being used first in those ages wherein the Christian's charity was so large as to desire blessings for all sorts of men; a sordid or an evil man in his fear may pray for his own deliverance, but he must have a charitable soul who can with equal devotion pray for others, as for his own self: and he, who would so pray, cannot have a more methodical or comprehensive form than these intercessions, which reckon up every degree of men in their due place, and leave out none that we would wish to pray for. Dean Comber.

This part of our Litany is very properly introduced with the following supplication: "We sinners do beseech thee to hear us, O Lord God!" We acknowledge ourselves unworthy, through our manifold sins, to offer up our prayers to Thee, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and hast declared that Thou "hearest not sinners." Yet for the sake of "Jesus Christ the righteous" we beseech Thee to receive us, though vile and sinful, yet humble and penitent; and mercifully to accept our petitions which we are now going to present to Thee. the right way;" this sentence is not complete, till the people have answered, "We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord." The sense and stopping shew this here, as well as in the former part: and all these intercessions should be read accordingly; the minister keeping up his voice throughout the service. Waldo, Collis.

Because it may seem presumptuous for us to pray for others, since we are unworthy to pray for ourselves, before we begin, we acknowledge that we are "sinners:" but yet, if we are penitent, we know our prayers will be acceptable: and therefore, in humble confidence of his mercy, and in obedience to his command, "We sinners do beseech him to hear us" in these our intercessions, which we offer up, first, for the "holy Church universal," the common mother of all Christians, as thinking ourselves more concerned for the good of the whole, than of any particular part. After this we pray for our own Church, to which, next to the catholick church, we owe the greatest observance and duty; and therein, in the first place, for the principal members of it, in whose welfare the peace of the Church chiefly consists: such as is the "king," whom, because he is the supreme governor of the Church in his dominions, and so the greatest security upon earth to the true religion, we pray for in the three next petitions, that he may be orthodox, pious, and prosperous. And though at present we may be happy under him; yet because his crown doth not render him immortal, and the security of the government ordinarily depends upon the "royal family," we pray in the next place for them (and particularly for the heir apparent) that they may be supplied with all spiritual blessings, and preserved from all plots and dangers.

The Jews and Gentiles always reckoned their chief priests to be next in dignity to the king; and all ancient Liturgies pray for the clergy immediately after the royal family, as being the most considerable members of the Christian church, distinguished here into those three apostolical orders of "bishops, priests, and deacons;" though in all former Common Prayer Books they were called the "bishops, pastors, and ministers of the Church," except in the Scotch Liturgy, which for "pastors" had "presbyters."

Next to these follow those who are eminent in the state, namely, "the lords of the council and all the nobility," who by reason of their dignity and trust have need of our particular prayers, and were always prayed for in the old Liturgies, by the title of "the whole palace."

After we have prayed for all the nobility in general, we pray for such of the nobility and gentry as are "magistrates," or more inferior governors of the people, according to the example of the primitive Christians, and in obedience to the positive command of St. Paul, who enjoins us to pray "for all that are in authority," 1 Tim. ii. 2.

After these we pray for "all the people," that is, all the commons of the land, who are the most numerous, though the least eminent; and unless they be safe and happy, the governors themselves cannot be prosperous, the diseases of the members being a trouble to the head also.

And though we may be allowed to pray for our own nation first, yet our prayers must extend to all mankind; and therefore in the next place we pray for the whole world, in the very words of ancient Liturgies, namely, that "all nations may have unity" at home among themselves, "peace" with one another, "and concord," that is, amity, commerce, and leagues.

Having thus prayed for temporal blessings both for ourselves and others, it is time now to look inward, and to consider what is wanting for our souls: and therefore we now proceed to pray for spiritual blessings, such as virtue and goodness. And, first, we pray that the principles of it may be planted in our "hearts," namely the "love and dread" of God, and then that the practice of it may be seen in our lives, by our "diligent living after his commandments."

But though we receive grace, yet, if we do not improve it, we shall be in danger of losing it again; and therefore, having in the former petition desired that we might become good, we subjoin this that we may grow better: begging "increase of grace," and also that we may use proper means thereunto, such as is "meekly hearing God's word, &c."

From praying for the sanctification and improvement of those within the Church, we become solicitous for the conversion of those that are without it; being desirous that "all should be brought into the way of truth who have erred or are deceived."

But though those without the Church are the most miserable, yet those within are not yet so happy as not to need our prayers; some of them standing in need of "strength," and others of "comfort:" these blessings therefore we now ask for those that want them.

Having thus considered the souls of men, we go on next to such things as concern their bodies, and to pray for all the afflicted in general: begging of God "to succour all that are in danger," by preventing the mischief that is falling upon them; "to help those that are in necessity," by giving them those blessings they want; and "to comfort all that are in tribulation," by supporting them under it, and delivering them out of it.

And because the circumstances of some of these hinder them from being present to pray for themselves; we particularly remember them, since they more especially stand in need of our prayers, such as are "all that travel by land or by water," and the rest mentioned in that petition.

There are other afflicted persons who are unable to help themselves, such as are "fatherless children and widows:" who are too often destitute of earthly friends; and such as are "desolate" of maintenance and lodging; or are "oppressed" by the false and cruel dealings of wicked and powerful men: and therefore these also we particularly recommend to God, and beg of Him to "defend and provide for" them.

And after this large catalogue of sufferers, as well in spiritual as temporal things; lest any should be passed who are already under, or in danger of, any affliction, we pray next that God would "have mercy upon all men."

And then, to shew we have no reserve or exception in our charity or devotions, we pray particularly for "our enemies, persecutors, and slanderers;" who we desire may be partakers of all the blessings we have been praying for, and that God would moreover "forgive them, and turn their hearts."

After we have thus prayed first for ourselves, and then for others, we proceed to pray for them and ourselves, together: begging, first, whatsoever is necessary for the sustenance of our bodies, comprehended here under the "fruits of the earth."

And then, in the next petition, asking for all things necessary to our souls, in order to bring them to eternal happiness, namely, "true repentance, forgiveness of all our sins, &c. and amendment of life." Which last petition is very proper for a conclusion. For we know that if we do not amend our lives, all these intercessions will signify nothing, because God will not hear impenitent sinners. We therefore earnestly beg repentance and amendment of life, that so all our preceding requests may not miscarry. Wheatly.

[y] — to forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances;] This petition is somewhat differently worded from what we meet with in other places in the Liturgy: for here is a threefold distinction of "sins, negligences, and ignorances," for all which we implore the divine pardon. By the first, I apprehend, we are to understand our gross and deliberate transgressions; the recollection of which should fill us with the deepest sorrow and the most bitter remorse. By the second are meant our less heinous sins, into which we have been led by inadvertency, carelessness, or surprise; how many of which, alas! do the very best of us daily run into? And though these are by no means of so grievous a nature as the former, yet still they are sins, and ought to be acknowledged and repented of. All

"negligences" are at least to be considered as sins of omission, inasmuch as they are contrary to that "care" and "watchfulness," so expressly required of us in the Gospel. "Ignorances," which are the last mentioned, are so far sinful and criminal, as they are in any degree voluntary, or caused by a neglect of using the proper means of attaining knowledge. Where ignorance is absolutely unavoidable, it is a misfortune indeed, but no sin: but to plead it in any other case is rather an aggravation, than an extenuation of our guilt. Waldo.

The same fire of devotion, before noticed in the Litany, burns likewise in these intercessions: which, being cast, like the deprecations, into small portions, are, like them, not closed with an Amen, but by an earnest supplication, the people crying, "We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord." This interchangeable way of worship performed by turns between the minister and people, is of the same advantage to the worshippers in the Litany, as in the Psalms: it mutually relieves, and yet provokes and inflames the piety of the congregation.

But with this grateful interchange there is kept up the most exact order. For in the deprecations from evil, we proceed gradually from the evil of sin to the evil of punishment, from spiritual to temporal, from the greater to the less. In the intercessions for good we begin with the "holy Church universal;" then particularizing for the principal members of that part of it, established among us: proceeding in order for the queen and the royal family; for the orders and degrees of men in Church and state; first, for the spirituality, then for the temporality; for all bishops, priests, and deacons; for the lords of the council, and all the nobility and magistrates; and lastly, for all the people of the realm. Then we pray for all kinds of good for all men; for the piety of the faithful; for the conversion of the deceived; for the confirmation of the weak; for the relief of the afflicted; for the preservation of the distressed; for the reconciliation of enemies; for the grant of plenty, and things necessary for the body; and lastly, for the pardon of sins, and the things necessary for the soul: or, as in our Lord's prayer, for "our daily bread," and for "forgiveness of our trespasses." Let those who accuse our public prayers as too general in their forms; view this punctual and regular enumeration in our Litany of all evils that are hurtful, or of all goods that are expedient, for the bodies or the souls of men; either for the Church in general, or for any of its members in particular; let them seek diligently through their own performances, whether extemporary or composed; let them search all their assemblies, and "consider diligently and see, if there be any such thing" in their worship; so full in its matter, so regular in its method, and solemn in its expressions, as our Litany; or "hath been heard any thing like it." Dr. Bisse.

[z] Son of God: &c.] After going through the preceding petitions, we endeavour to excite our desires of a gracious acceptance to as much fervency as we can, by short but affectionate sentences, uttered alternately, in a sort of pious emulation, between the minister and people; and humbly importuning our Redeemer, as the eternal "Son" and spotless "Lamb of God," the Lord's "Christ," and the Lord of Christians, that He would "grant us" his promise and "peace," which includes all blessings, and "have mercy upon us," in bestowing what we have asked. For this purpose, it is acknowledged, we repeat several times the same words, with very little variations. But such "repetitions," far from "vain," Matt. vi. 7, are most expressive ones: the natural, the almost constant language of earnestness. Hence our Saviour in his agony, reiterated the same words thrice, Matt. xxvi. 44: and David in a transport of thanksgiving, even to the six-and-twentieth time, as may be seen in the 136th Psalm. And these very petitions, which we use, are warranted by the ancient offices of the Christian church. Abp. Secker.

In these addresses to our Saviour we beseech Him first, by his divinity, as He is the "Son of God," and so omniscient, omnipresent, and omnipotent, to "hear our prayers," and to become our advocate for their acceptance. Secondly, We beseech Him by his suffering for us, when He "became the Lamb of God," and died to "take away the sins of the world," John i. 29, that He will "grant us" an interest in "his peace," John xiv. 27, in the peace He made with God, and that peace of conscience following thereupon: and that "he will have mercy upon us," so as to pity us, and deliver us from the guilt and punishment of our offences. And again, as He is the "Lord Christ" our anointed Mediator, we beg of Him to "hear us," and procure a gracious answer to all these intercessions. Dean Comber.

These shorter intercessions, which follow upon the longer ones, and produce an agreeable variety in the Litany, are admirably calculated to give fresh vigour and earnestness to our devotion. No person who has attended seriously to the foregoing part, can join in this without feeling a peculiar warmth and fervency in his mind; whilst he thus renews his supplications, with an holy importunity, to the throne of grace. But to answer the pious design of the Church, and that these incentives to devotion may have their full effect, it is necessary that the minister, who officiates, should read every sentence with great energy and deliberation; making a proper pause after each, that the people may have time to answer. Waldo.

[a] Lord, have mercy upon us, &c.] Finally, that our conclusion may be suitable to our beginning, we close up all with an address to the whole Trinity for that "mercy," which we have been begging in so many particulars, and this one word comprehends them all, so that this is the epitome of the whole Litany; and considering how constantly, and how many ways we need mercy, surely we cannot ask it too often, and we ought every time to ask it with a renewed importunity, especially here, where the only impediment to all our intercessions, and that which alone can hinder them, is our sins; and, if we can obtain mercy for them, all our other requests shall certainly prevail. Dean Comber.

Ps. cxxiii. 3. Luke xviii. 13.

Lord, have mercy upon us.
Lord, have mercy upon us.

¶ Then shall the Priest[b], and the people with him, say the Lord's Prayer[c].

OUR Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

Priest. O Lord, deal not with us after our sins[d].

Answer. Neither reward us after our iniquities. Ps. ciii. 10.

This conclusion is no less excellent than the beginning, winding up and inforcing all with redoubled vehemency and flame of devotion. For how forcible must the supplications of the Church be, when the priest repeating twice that invocation, "O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world;" the people subjoining as often, "Grant us thy peace," "Have mercy upon us;" then followed and quickened with the alternate repetition of that primitive form, or lesser Litany, directed to the Trinity, "Lord, have mercy upon us; Christ, have mercy upon us; Lord, have mercy upon us:" and then shutting up all in that ever acceptable prayer of our Lord; how forcible, I say, how piercing, must this united cry of the congregation be? How must it come up unto God, like the cry of the Israelites, when "God heard their groaning, and had respect unto them?" Exod. ii. 24, 25.

It should be observed, that all the petitions, from the beginning of the deprecations to the end of the intercessions, are directed to the Son, the second Person in the Trinity, as the true and proper object of our worship: which appears from these expressions, "Spare thy people, whom thou hast redeemed with thy most precious blood:" "By thy holy incarnation, by thine agony, &c. Good Lord, deliver us." And so in the close, "Son of God, we beseech thee to hear us: O Christ, hear us." And then, as the Litany began with the Trinity, going on to the Son; so, at the close, from the Son it returns to the Trinity again, saying, "Lord, have mercy, &c." Dr. Bisse.

[b] Then shall the Priest, &c.] The last part of this devout Litany we call the supplications, which seem to have been first collected and put into this form, when the barbarous nations began to over-run the empire, about 600 years after Christ, though the particular sentences are either taken out of holy writ, or else gathered from ancient Liturgies; but considering the troubles of the Church militant, and the many enemies that every good man always hath in this world, this part of the office is suitable for all times. Dean Comber.

[c] — say the Lord's Prayer.] Pious antiquity usually annexed the Lord's Prayer to every office, to shew their high esteem of it, and their mean opinion of their own composures, which receive life and value from this divine form. We have expounded this prayer before, and are only to note here, that when our hearts are stirred up to devotion by the foregoing offices, we shall find ourselves very fit to put up these petitions with renewed affections, and so may supply the defects of our more careless repetition of it before. Dean Comber.

Having previously enlivened our devotion, we proceed to offer up, what deserves the most lively efforts of it, that perfect summary of all our petitions, "The Lord's Prayer:" which, though it occurs several times in the several services of the morning, occurs but once in this; and cannot easily be recited too often, provided it be with attention and affection. Abp. Secker.

[d] O Lord, deal not with us after our sins, &c.] We are all ready to say we suffer greatly, but the Church will have us remember we also suffer justly; yea, "God exacteth of us less than our iniquities deserve," Job xi. 6, and as David confesses, "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our wickedness," Ps. ciii. 10. Upon which plain affirmations of holy Scripture is this pious supplication grounded: in which we clear his justice in punishing us, but apply to his mercy to proportion his chastisements according to our ability of bearing, and not according to the desert of our offences. Dean Comber.

The word "after," in old English signifies "according to." Thus to "live after God's commandments." is to live according to them: and God's "dealing with men after their sins, or rewarding them after their iniquities," is his dealing with them, or rewarding them, according to their sins or iniquities; that is, as their sins or iniquities deserve. Dr. Bennet.

Hitherto the Litany hath dwelt on no single subject of prayer long; but comprehended a surprising variety of the most needful articles in a very narrow compass. The remainder is of a different nature. It considers our state here very justly, as furnishing perpetual ground of sad reflection to every thoughtful mind; and applies itself wholly to express to our heavenly Father the sentiments required in such a condition. The seemingly happiest persons in the world are very inconsiderate, if they do not discern a great deal to mourn over, in others and themselves. Yet, at the same time, the most afflicted are to blame, if they sink under, either what they see or feel. But the common duty of both is, "in every thing, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, to make their requests known unto God," Phil. iv. 6. And therefore this part of the Litany, though first introduced on occasion of extraordinary distress lying heavy on Christendom eleven or twelve hundred years ago, will be too seasonable in every age, till one of truer piety and more tranquillity shall come, than hath been yet known, or is likely soon to take place.

As the transgressions, by which we offend God, are the cause of our sufferings, these our supplications begin very properly, with intreating, in Scripture words, that on humbling ourselves before Him, He would not "deal with us after our sins, nor reward us after our iniquities," Ps. ciii. 10. Next to this follows, as is repeated in the sequel, an exhortation, "Let us pray;" which may appear somewhat strange, considering that prayers immediately precede in both places. But they are short ejaculations, not continued forms, like those which follow. And besides, this redoubled admonition, towards the conclusion of the office, will very usefully remind those, who may possibly be growing languid and inattentive, in how important a work they are engaged. Something there was of this kind, even in the heathen devotions. But in the old Liturgies of Christian Greece, "Let us pray; let us pray earnestly; let us pray more earnestly;" often returns. (See p. 33, note u.)

And the succeeding prayer, which is of ancient use in the Western church, deserves our utmost earnestness. It begs of Him, who, as the Psalmist assures us, "will not despise a broken and contrite heart," which phrase has been already explained, (see the note on the Sentences, p. 2,) that "in all our troubles" he will both "assist us to make our prayers before him" as we ought, "and graciously hear us:" that so the designs of our enemies, visible and invisible, may be disappointed, and we may feel and express a just gratitude for our deliverance. To this the congregation answer, not as usual, Amen: but in a short form of Scripture words, Numb. x. 35; Ps. lxxxix. 9, more strongly expressive of pious fervency. The minister instantly returns another Scriptural address to God, Ps. xliv. 1; pleading with him, and suggesting to us, "the noble works," done by Him for his Church and people in general, and many good persons in particular; which, if we have not seen with our eyes, "we have heard with our ears;" holy writ, and other history hath related them: or "our fathers have declared them to us," partly as performed "in their days," partly "in the old time before them." And since "his arm is not shortened, that it cannot save; nor his ear become heavy, that it cannot hear," Isa. lix. 1; the congregation again petition Him, in the same words as before, only changing one for another, still more pathetick; that He would "arise, help and deliver them" for the "honour" of "his name:" not for our merits, but his own glorious perfections, and the instruction of his creatures; that we and all men may learn to love and praise and serve Him. Yet to this we are indispensably bound, even while the painfullest view of our sorrows and wants is before our eyes: and therefore in the midst of our supplications we proceed immediately to ascribe that glory to the sacred Three, which ever has been, and is, and will be, their due; whether infinite wisdom allots to us prosperity or adversity. Nor is the mixture of doxologies with complaints less common in acts of worship, than it is reasonable. The book of Psalms uses it frequently: the old Latin and Greek Liturgies use it on this very occasion: and surely in our private devotions, even when most afflicted, we still give praise to God.

But though we own it our duty to glorify Him in the severest sufferings, if it be his will that we should undergo them; yet, conscious of our weakness, we go on to beg his protection against them, or deliverance of us from them, in mutual ejaculations of the utmost warmth: not that moving expressions will any otherwise incline Him to grant mercy, than as they fit us to receive it, by imprinting on us a just sense of our dependence; which, if used with sincerity, they naturally do.

Then we close this part of the Litany with a more continued form of address to our merciful "Father;" composed originally above 1100 years ago; corrupted indeed afterwards, by intreating God to "turn from us" all "evils" for the sake of the intercession of his saints; but reformed in our Liturgy, not only by leaving out that addition, but by inserting for completer security a new clause; "Grant, that in all our troubles we may put our whole trust and confidence in thy mercy." And thus it is, that we borrow from the church of Rome. By this prayer, so amended, we humbly confess our infirmities and unworthiness: yet beg, that, notwithstanding both, we may, if God sees it proper, escape the afflictions, which we fear; but if not, that, being still assured of his goodness to us, we may with Job "though he slay us, trust in him," Job xiii. 15; and that, for proof of this, we may as faithfully do our duty under the heaviest pressures, as the highest exaltation;

A Prayer of St. Chrysostom.

ALMIGHTY God, who hast given us grace at this time with one accord to make our common supplications unto thee; and dost promise, that when two or three are gathered together in thy Name thou wilt grant their requests: Fulfil now, O Lord, the desires and petitions of thy servants, as may be most expedient for them; granting us in this world knowledge of thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting. Amen.

THE Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore. Amen.

" and evermore serve him in holiness, and pureness of living, to his honour and glory;" saying with Job again, " shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord," Job ii. 10; i. 21. Abp. Secker.

Thus have we gone through the consideration of this excellent and peculiar office of our Church; and upon the whole we may affirm, that as in the Liturgy in general we may be said to " worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," so in the Litany we worship Him in the perfection of beauty. Dr. Bisse.

May God give us grace to use these and all our devotions in so right a manner, that, from praying to Him amidst the troubles and sorrows of this world, we may be taken, in his good time, to praise Him for ever amidst the joys of the next, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Abp. Secker.

[e] Prayers and Thanksgivings, upon several occasions,] Though the various miseries of mankind are exactly enumerated in the Litany, yet they are but barely mentioned there, and at some times some particular evils lie so heavy upon us, and some great mercies are so necessary for us, that it is requisite we should have solemn forms upon such occasions to annex to this office, that so it may fully suit all our necessities. Solomon supposes there will be special prayers made in the temple in times of war, drought, pestilence, and famine, 1 Kings viii. 33. 35. 37; and Lactantius observes, that the very Gentiles addressed themselves to the gods, in times of war, plague, and drought. Tertullian also notes that the Christians did make extraordinary prayers on such occasions. And both the Greek and Latin church have their several offices for such times, out of which these prayers are taken, which are not designed for a complete office; because when any judgment continues long, and grows general, our governors draw up a peculiar office, and enjoin it to be observed with solemn fasting: only these prayers are continually to be said with the Litany upon such occasions, that so, according to that law of Charles the Great, "In time of famine, plague, and war, the mercy of God may be immediately implored, without staying for the king's edict." Dean Comber.

Only the two first prayers, namely, for rain, and for fair weather, were in the first book of Edward VI. and there placed at the end of the Communion Service. But in the second book of Edward VI. these two with the three following, namely, in time of dearth, war, and plague, were all five inserted in the place where they now stand. But their respective thanksgivings were added by order of King James the First.

Note also, that the five foregoing prayers are deprecations; whereas the three following, namely, for ember-weeks, for the parliament, for all conditions of men, are intercessions: these were added at the last review, 1661. Dr. Bisse.

Drought, deluge, or excessive rain, famine, rebellion, war, tumult, plague, and pestilence, are among the most dreadful visitations of the Almighty. These judgments He sometimes sends upon the earth, that the inhabitants of the world may learn righteousness. But so much have we of these realms been indebted to the mercy of his providence, that, within the remembrance of more than the present generation, some of these forms have not been found necessary. The forms themselves, however, are so plain and perspicuous, that no particular elucidation of them can be required. It may, therefore, be enough to observe, that similar prayers occur in the scarcity and dearth, which we do now most justly suffer for our iniquity, may through thy goodness be mercifully turned into cheapness and plenty; for the love of Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be all honour and glory, now and for ever. Amen.

ancient Liturgies, from which some of these appear to be chiefly taken; and that each is well suited to the emergency to which it is appropriated by our Church. Shepherd.

These occasional Prayers and Thanksgivings are only to be made use of, when we are generally distressed upon emergencies; not, as some persons may desire, when they think them requisite, but when there is a grievous necessity. Collis.

[f] In the time of War and Tumults.] In this prayer we address ourselves to the Almighty Governor of all things, whose justice in punishing us sinners with this evil we acknowledge, and whose mercy to deliver us from it, on our true repentance, we hope for, and cannot hope for it else; complaining of the pride and malice of our enemies; of which they must be guilty, if the war on our side be lawful, otherwise there would be peace; and in the genuine spirit of Christianity, intreating that the one may be "abated," the other "asswaged;" which is praying for them, as well as ourselves. And till they suffer their dispositions to be mended, we beg that their "devices" and enterprises may be "confounded," which word, as dreadful as it sounds too often in passionate common speech, means here no more than disappointed; and this is the worst we wish, even to those "who hate us, and despitefully use us," Matt. v. 44. Abp. Secker.

[g] In the Ember Weeks, &c.] "Ember" is a word of uncertain derivation. Some suppose it signifies ashes, and some abstinence. Abstinence or fasting, it is commonly known, was anciently accompanied with the act of sitting upon ashes, or of sprinkling ashes upon the head. In the Western church, the ember-weeks were styled, "the fasts of the four seasons." This title, as well as the usage mentioned above, appears to favour the derivation already given. But others derive ember from a Saxon word, signifying course, or circumvolution; for the ember-weeks return at fixed and certain periods, and are fasts in course.

The ember-days are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, and December 13. The weeks in which these days fall are called ember-weeks; and the Sundays immediately following are, according to ancient institution, appointed by the 31st canon of our Church for the ordination of the Clergy.

These two prayers, though the latter of them is found in the Scottish Liturgy, were added to our Book of Common Prayer only at the last review. The intention of the forms is sufficiently obvious: and as the ordina-

And to those which shall be ordained to any holy function give thy grace and heavenly benediction; that both by their life and doctrine they may set forth thy glory, and set forward the salvation of all men; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

tion of ministers is a subject of primary importance, it is to be regretted that one or other of the forms is not more generally read on the Wednesday and Friday in the ember-week, in such of our parish churches as have service on these days. Whether they were intended to be read every day in the ember-weeks, or only on every ember-day in the week, is a question that has not universally been answered in the same way. The words of the rubrick appear to countenance the former practice. Shepherd.

The former of these two prayers is thought to be most properly used in the early part of the week, as it is for the ordainers and the ordained; to guide the minds of the bishops and their assisting pastors, that they may, with wisdom and fidelity, make choice of persons, well qualified by their learning and piety, to be admitted into the offices of the ministry. The other is proper to be used toward the latter end of the week, to beseech God to afford the grace of his Holy Spirit to all those, who have been made choice of, and who are to be admitted to the office of a priest, or the administration of a deacon. Collis.

In this appointment our Church follows the constant custom of the catholick church, and that seems derived from the original precedent of the apostles themselves. See Acts xiii. 2, 3. A custom of the highest importance to be continued for ever in the Church; to the end, that all those, who are appointed to feed the flock of Christ, may be true and lawful shepherds, having "entered in by the door," I mean, the apostolical way of ordination, by prayer, and laying on of the hands of the bishop, and not hirelings, who climb up some other way. Dr. Bisse.

[h] A Prayer that may be said after any of the former.] This short devout Collect is joined to the ancient Litanies of the Western church, and, since sin is the cause of all the foregoing judgments, this may be added to any of the former, as a prayer for pardon of sin; for which reason also it is used by some devout men, (when they use the Church-prayers in private,) instead of the Absolution. Dean Comber.

This prayer is not repeated so frequently as its excellence seems to require. It is drawn up in the metaphorical, but expressive, language of Scripture; has been long employed in the conclusion of Litanies, and other forms of prayer, by the churches of the West, and retains strong marks of primitive devotion. This Collect I have seen in some of Henry's Primers: but it is in neither of Edward's books, having been restored to the Common Prayer only in the reign of Elizabeth. Shepherd.

It is generally placed wrong in our Common Prayer Books, namely, after the prayer for all conditions of men; having been so placed by the ignorance or carelessness of the printers at the review just after the Restoration, and been continued there notwithstanding the interference of the commissioners at that time. In the sealed books, which by the Act of Uniformity are ordered to be kept in all cathedral or collegiate churches, in the courts of Westminster, and in the tower of London, it stands before the prayer for the Parliament. Collis.

[i] A Prayer for the High Court of Parliament,] Not only did the primitive Christians pray for the senate of heathen Rome, but the Gentiles used to sacrifice in the beginning of their public councils, which used also to be held in some sacred place: and surely we Christians ought not to shew less devotion, especially when we have so good a composition, to offer up our desire in, as this prayer is. Dean Comber.

This other occasional prayer "for the High Court of Parliament" is of the like publick importance to the state as the former, namely, for the ember-weeks, is to the Church; and so both jointly to our constitution; in which the Church and State are so united and linked together by the fundamental laws of this realm, that they cannot be divided without being destroyed: a maxim fully proved by the consultations of that memo-

More especially, we pray for the good estate of the Catholick Church: that it may be so guided and governed by thy good Spirit, that all who profess and call themselves Christians may be led into the way of truth, and hold the faith in unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life. rable Parliament, which overturned both, and which gave occasion to have this very prayer added here to our publick intercessions after the Restoration. Dr. Lisse.

[k] — to be read during their Session.] If the Houses adjourn themselves for a fortnight or a longer time, it is still the same session: but, if they are prorogued for a shorter time, it is not reckoned a part of it, they not being then impowered to do business, as upon adjournments they are. This prayer was composed at the last review, and, it is said, by Dr. Brabourn. Collis. See the conclusion of the next note.

[l] — under our most religious and gracious Queen] This is a very fit prayer for a blessing on the consultations of parliament. But it may be asked how the compilers of it could venture to call in it every one of our kings, in all time to come, "most religious." Now certainly they did not intend to prophesy, that, in the common meaning of the word, they always would be so; nor yet to require, that we should call them so in a sense that was not true. And therefore they must either mean by "religious," what it sometimes means in the language, from which it is derived, the object of most awful regard, sacred, a title frequently ascribed to kings: or indeed rather, "most religious" must be understood in the same manner, as the next word to it, "gracious," constantly is, without the least difficulty or scruple, both in the Liturgy and out of it: and as the titles "most Christian," and "most Catholick," are; to denote the good qualities, which princes profess and should have; and therefore their subjects are willing and ought to hope they have; and, by reminding them, endeavour that they may have. Accordingly this very epithet "most religious" was constantly ascribed to all successive emperors in St. Chrysostom's and St. Basil's Liturgies, the common ones of the Greek church, as it is to all successive kings in ours. The intention being thus cleared, the lawfulness of joining in the expression is evident. In the prudence of choosing it originally we are less concerned. Yet in defence of that we may plead, that this prayer was composed and originally used in the reign of a prince, acknowledged to be unfeignedly religious, King Charles the First. Abp. Secker.

The first and last parts of this prayer are taken from one with the same title, among the additions and alterations made in the Litany and Prayers of the Church by the command of King Charles the First. The intermediate part appears to have been new at the Restoration. Edit.

[m] A Collect or Prayer for all Conditions of Men, &c.] We are expressly commanded to pray for all men, 1 Tim. ii. 1. And though we do so in the Litany and Communion office, yet, that it might not be omitted any day, this Collect is added to supply the place of the Litany, and, when that is not used, this is: hence some call it "the lesser Litany," and it teaches us to express a hearty charity to all, especially to the afflicted, and to those that are sick, who are usually prayed for in this form. Dean Comber.

In this Collect we extend our intercession to all nations on earth, that God's "name may be hallowed" among the heathen, where it is not yet known; and his "kingdom" of grace may "come," where it is not yet preached. But more especially we pray for the holy catholick church, that in it by the guidance and government of God's Spirit, his "will may be done on earth, as it is in heaven:" and thus is this Collect visibly built upon the plan of our Lord's prayer. And I must observe, that as in the Creeds we acknowledge one holy catholick church; so in our prayers we always count our own Church, as contained and embodied in it. Wherefore, neither in this intercession, nor in the Litany, nor in the prayer for the church militant, is there any express mention of the Church of England, or of this Church as any ways distinct or separate from others: so great is her charity to all national churches; and so great her duty to the catholick Church, "the mother of them all." See page 31, note p.

In this intercession for all mankind, for all Christians in all wants, there is provided a clause whereby any person may be prayed for in particular, if visited with any kind of affliction, especially if with bodily sickness, which is chiefly intended in this place. Dr. Bisse.

Neither this form, nor the following one of general thanksgiving, is taken from any other Liturgy: both are excellent; and every one, who desires it, may, by signifying that desire, have a separate share in either. This provision is a very useful and comfortable one: and we commend to thy fatherly goodness all those, who are any ways afflicted, or distressed, in mind, body, or estate; [especially those for whom our prayers are desired,*] that it may please thee to comfort and relieve them, according to their several necessities, giving them patience under their sufferings, and a happy issue out of all their afflictions. And this we beg for Jesus Christ his sake[n]. Amen.

persons would do well, on all fit occasions, to take the advantage of it. Only they, who have received benefit by being prayed for, should not forget to return thanks: but conscientiously avoid our Saviour's reproof, "Were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?" Luke xvii. 17.

The general thanksgiving may perhaps to some appear superfluous, after we have thanked and praised God in the use of the psalms and hymns. But it was inserted at the Restoration, because others complained it was wanting. Abp. Secker.

Before the addition of this prayer, which was made at the last review, the Church had no general intercession "for all conditions of men," except on those days upon which the Litany was appointed. For which reason this Collect was then drawn up, to supply the want of that office upon ordinary days; and therefore it is ordered by the rubrick "to be used at such times, when the Litany is not appointed to be said:" consonant to which it is now, I believe, a universal practice, and a very reasonable one, I think, to read this prayer every evening, as well as on such mornings as the Litany is not said.

The form has been generally ascribed to Bishop Sanderson: but it is a tradition at St. John's College, in Cambridge, that Bishop Gunning, who was sometime master there, was the author. It is said to have been originally drawn up much longer than it is now, and that the throwing out of a great part of it, which consisted of petitions for the king, the royal family, clergy, &c., who are prayed for in other collects, was the occasion why the word "finally" comes in so soon in so short a prayer. It is not improbable that the Bishop might have designed to comprehend all the intercessional collects in one; but that the others who were commissioned for the same affair, might think it better to retain the old forms, and so only to take as much of Bishop Gunning's as was not comprehended in the rest. Wheatly.

[n] —for Jesus Christ his sake.] This is a mistake, either of the printers or of the compilers. The English language, to express different connexions and relations of one thing to another, uses, for the most part, prepositions. The Greek and Latin among the ancients, and some too among the modern languages, as the German, vary the termination or ending of the substantive to answer the same purpose. These different endings are in those languages called cases. And the English being derived from the same origin as the German, that is, from the Teutonick, is not wholly without them. For instance, the relation of possession, or belonging, is often expressed by a case or a different ending of the substantive. This case answers to the genitive case in Latin, and may still be so called; though perhaps more properly the possessive case. Thus "God's grace:" which may also be expressed by the preposition; as, "the grace of God." It was formerly written "Godis grace." We now very improperly always shorten it with an apostrophe, even though we are obliged to pronounce it fully: as "Thomas's book;" that is, "Thomasis book;" not "Thomas his book," as it is commonly supposed. So that "Christ his sake" is a mistake for "Christis sake," or as now commonly written, "Christ's sake." Bishop Lowth.

[o] Thanksgivings.] Notwithstanding the Hallelujah, the Gloria Patri, and daily psalms, it was thought by some that our Liturgy wanted forms of praise, upon which account the particular thanksgivings were added in the time of King James I. and this general one at the time of King Charles II.'s restoration. Dean Comber.

This, which is admirably composed, is said to have been drawn up by Bishop Sanderson. Wheatly.

[p] A General Thanksgiving.] After the general intercession there follows likewise a general thanksgiving. For though in the psalms and hymns after the lessons, with the several doxologies interspersed, we have every where "set forth God's most worthy praise;" yet it seemed meet also in a distinct and appropriate form of thanksgiving "to render thanks for the great benefits we have received at his hands;" which, according to the first exhortation, we therefore do, beginning with that original blessing, "our creation," then "preservation," attended with all these secondary benefits and "blessings of life," "but above all," because the greatest of all, "our redemption," attended with all "the means of grace and hope of glory," thus ascending gradually through the long scale of blessings received at God's hand, from temporal to spiritual, from the first to the last, from our coming forth to our returning to Him again. Dr. Bisse.

For Peace and Deliverance from our Enemies.

O Almighty God, who art a strong tower of defence unto

Indeed this is a more methodical summary of the several mercies of God "to us and to all men," than we had before: it furnishes an opportunity of thanking Him more expressly for the late instances of his loving-kindness to the members of our own congregation: and besides, as we cannot be too thankful to God, the acknowledgments, which we offered up at the beginning of the service, are very properly repeated at the end. For surely we ought to ask nothing of God, without remembering, what we have received from Him: which naturally excites both our faith and resignation; and proposes the way for that admirable Collect, with which we conclude. Abp. Secker.

After enumerating the blessings for which we return our humble and hearty thanks, the form from eucharistic becomes petitionary. We beseech God to make us truly sensible of his mercies, and really thankful for them; that we may shew our gratitude, and promote his glory, not only by celebrating his praises day by day in the publick assemblies of the Church, but by walking in the paths of holiness and righteousness all our lives. These petitions we enforce through the merits of Jesus Christ; and we conclude the whole with a doxology, in which we ascribe to the Son, with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, all honour and glory, world without end. Amen. Shepherd.

[q] For Rain, &c.] More particular thanksgivings being sometimes proper, we are supplied with forms on the six following occasions: (1) for rain; (2) for fair weather; (3) for plenty; (4) for peace, and deliverance from our enemies; (5) for restoring public peace at home; and (6) with two thanksgivings, either of which may be used, for deliverance from the plague, or other contagious sickness.

When the petitions which we may have offered up in any of the preceding occasional prayers, have been granted, and our desires fulfilled; when either a calamity has been removed, or a blessing vouchsafed; it is evidently the intention of the Church, that praise should be given to God, in the words of the appropriate thanksgiving here prescribed; that is, in all cases where the ordinary form is not superseded by one that is special, and enjoined by authority. These occasional thanksgivings we may pass over, after making one or two general observations. Some of them are partly taken from ancient offices; and the whole are judiciously composed; being not only well adapted to the occasions for which they are appointed, but, like the preceding prayers, with which they correspond, as plain and perspicuous, as they are rational and devout. The occasional thanksgivings were composed in the reign of James, and annexed to the Litany; in 1662, they were detached from it, and printed as they now appear, after having been sanctioned by a convocation, and authorized by the Act of Uniformity. Shepherd.

2 Chron. vii. 14. Jer. xxxi 13. Ps. xxx. 2. 11.

Heb xiii. 15. Jude 25. Nehem. ix. 5. Ps. cxlv. 5; xci. 9—11.

AS the service, which has been now examined, is almost every where separated, and very properly, from the following one, namely, the Communion service, by the singing of a psalm, this appears a convenient place for saying a little concerning that branch of publick worship, which in many places is too much disregarded.

As singing is capable of expressing strongly every state, in which the mind can be, towards every object; so there never was perhaps any one nation upon earth, civilized or barbarous, that did not make this a part of the honour paid by them to the God whom they adored. We find in the Old Testament, it was practised by the Jews, before their law was given, as well as after. The book of Psalms consists wholly of religious songs: and directs the "saints of the Lord, to sing unto him, and give thanks for a remembrance of his holiness: to sing unto the honour of his name, and make his praise glorious; to sing praises unto our God, while we have our being," Ps. xxx. 4; lxvi. 2; cxlvi. 2. The prophets foretel that, in the Gospel times, men shall sing for the majesty "of the Lord:" and, which brings the predictions home to us, "they shall cry aloud, and glorify God, in the isles of the sea," Isa. xxiv. 14, 15. Accordingly St. Paul, not only himself with Silas, even in prison, "sang praises unto God;" Acts xvi. 25; but appoints, that all Christians should "speak to themselves, and admonish one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, making melody with grace in their hearts to the Lord," Eph. v. 19; Col. iii. 16. And St. James prescribes, "Is any one merry?" in a joyful frame of mind, on account of blessings received, (for the word, mirth, comprehended anciently the most serious kind of gladness,) "let him sing psalms," James v. 13.

In pursuance of these rules, the first Christians made singing a constant part of their worship: as, besides the ecclesiastical writers, even a heathen, Pliny, informs us; and the whole congregation joined in it. Afterwards indeed the singers by profession, who had been prudently appointed to lead and direct them, by degrees usurped the whole performance. But at the Reformation the people were restored to their rights: and it made a much quicker progress for the pleasure and comfort, which they found in this practice: a circumstance, that ought to endear it to considerate persons not a little. And as the only way of singing, known in common parochial churches, is by the metre psalms; unless we join in that, we entirely omit this branch of our duty.

It is true the verse translation of the Psalms, generally used, is void of ornament; and hath expressions, often low and flat, sometimes obsolete. And I wish a better were substituted in its place. But still, in many other cases, ancient solemn forms of words are thought venerable, when they are far from elegant; not to say that the language of our forefathers, even where it may seem very uncouth at present, had in its time frequently full as much beauty and propriety, as ours. And several words of it have been, for that reason, revived by some of our best modern authors. But at least the matter comprised in the words, of which I am speaking, is so highly respectable, that the mind which is affected only by the phrase, and not by the sense, must be a light one indeed.

Again, it is true also, that the tunes to which the psalms are sung, are most of them plain and slow, and the voices of many in the assembly unharmonious, and apt to be ill-managed. But tunes, designed for the multitude to join in, who have never been regularly instructed, must be plain and slow, and such as they have been accustomed to: for which purpose the number should be moderate. Ours are many of them recommended, and as it were consecrated by long usage. Confessors for the protestant cause have composed them. Martyrs for it have yielded up their dying breath in them. And several of them are thought, by competent judges, no way deficient in real melody. Amongst a variety of people, part of them with bad ears, and most of them with untaught voices, there will be some who had better totally abstain; only attending to the sense, as well as the sound, of what is uttered by the rest: and others, that should moderate themselves to a prudent degree of lowness, till they have learnt how to exert themselves more properly. But all who are, or can be, qualified, (and there are a few who cannot,) should bear such a part as they are able. It may be done, without in the least disordering the more skilful singers, who perform the very useful office of raising and supporting the tune. This in many congregations is done by an organ, the charity children, or both. But then the organ should express the tunes plainly and distinctly, and make very moderate intervals between the lines: the children should be taught to sing in exact time and concert with it; and the whole congregation should accompany them fervently, yet with prudence. Taking this care, though there should still happen to be some little discords, they would be entirely lost in the general chorus: the effect of which would be noble and elevating, if we took rightly into our thoughts the whole of the matter instead of cavilling at minute particulars.

Consider the nature of a wild multitude, in its original state, met together at the call of some vehement ungoverned passion: how alarming the concourse, how frightful and horrid the confused and hideous cries of it must be. Then consider the same multitude, softened and cultivated by the gentle influences of religion, and unanimously assembling at stated seasons, to sing forth the praises of the wise and good Parent of all, and echo to each other the precepts of a rational, and mild, and beneficent life here, as the means of obtaining eternal felicity hereafter. Can there be a happier change of scene, a sweeter and more pleasing view? and, suppose the harmony made by them were ever so little better, than "shouting unto God with the voice of triumph," as the Scripture expresses it, and "making a joyful noise unto the Rock of their salvation," Ps. xlvii. 1, xcv. 1, yet what worthy and humane and pious heart is there, that would not be charmed with the sound, and zealously join in it? we are disposed thus on all occasions.

Amongst our ancestors, who judged of propriety as discreetly as ourselves, to say no more, the very highest joined humbly and cheerfully with the lowest of their fellow-Christians in the duty of psalmody, however artlessly performed. And it is worth our while to reflect what it is, either to disdain, or be ashamed, or be too indolent to lift up our voices to the honour of our Maker, when we come into his house professedly to worship Him, and He hath commanded that one part of his worship shall be this.

But if we will not employ our lips in the service, we may still fix our minds upon it: at least we should not hinder others from doing either. And particularly we should abstain from giving the bad example, and the offence, of indecently holding conversation at that time, for which there cannot surely be so pressing an occasion, but that it may very safely be deferred till after church, if not altogether omitted.

In the singing of Psalms, different persons use different postures. The prose psalms, I believe, are and ever have been repeated by all persons every where standing. In the verse psalms we all stand at the Doxology. And, in what goes before, the reason for doing it is exactly the same, and a very strong one: that the whole is sung to the glory of God, and often directly addressed to God. Accordingly we read in the Old Testament that not only the "Levites" were "to stand every morning to thank and praise the Lord, and likewise at even," 1 Chron. xxiii. 30; but that when "they waited with instruments of musick to praise the Lord, all Israel stood," 2 Chron. vii. 6; and that they said to the people, "Stand up and bless the Lord your God," Neh. ix. 5. We read likewise, that in a vision of St. John, in the book of Revelation, "a great multitude which no man could number, stood before the throne, and cried with a loud voice, Salvation to our God," Rev. vii. 9, 10: and in another, that "they who had gotten the victory over the beast, stood and sang the song of Moses and the Lamb," Rev. xv. 2, 3. Standing therefore, as it is plainly the fittest posture in itself, is the authorized one also: and, were it more uncommon than it is, would be far from a dishonourable singularity. But still, as very many in most congregations, either have by long habit been prejudiced in favour of sitting, or though they disapprove the custom, feel a difficulty of quitting it, unless every one did: they should not be censured for a practice by which they mean nothing amiss; but kindly encouraged to an alteration in this point, which we may thus hope will gradually become general. Abp. Secker.

To prevent improprieties in the performance of this excellent part of publick devotion, and to provide for due solemnity in it as well as in the rest, it is much to be wished, that ministers should not leave the choice of proper psalms to their parish clerks, but should take upon themselves the trouble of directing it; or rather, that they should once for all fix and establish a course of psalms, to be given out and sung in their order. By which means the congregations might be furnished with those which are most proper, and also with a due variety; and by degrees, the most useful parts of the Book of Psalms would be implanted in the minds of the people, and become familiar to them.

And to the end the Psalms, so chosen, may be sung in a more decent manner, it is further to be wished, that the people of every parish, and especially the youth, were trained up and accustomed to an orderly way of singing some of the Psalm tunes, which are most plain and easy, and of most common use; since that is the proper season of forming the voice as well as the mind: and the regularity, into which it is then cast with great ease, will remain with them during life; and not only enable them to contribute their part to the decency of this performance, but even, for the sake of that talent, will incline them to be constant in attending the publick service of the Church.

It is however by no means recommended, that the clergy should invite or encourage the introduction of those uncommon and ridiculous tunes, which have sometimes been brought into churches, and the consequence of which is, that the greater part of the congregation are silenced and do not join in this exercise at all: but that they should endeavour to bring their whole congregation, men and women, old and young, or at least as many as they can, to sing a few of the plainest and best known tunes in a decent, regular, and uniform manner, so as to be able to bear their part in them at the publick service of the Church. Bp. Gibson.

COLLECTS[b], EPISTLES, AND GOSPELS[c]

TO BE USED THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

[a] The Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, to be used throughout the year.] Concerning the feasts, &c. observed in the Church of England, the reader is referred to notes on the Tables and Rules, at the beginning of the Common Prayer Book.

[b] Collects.] For the meaning of this term, see note e, p. 36, on the Order for Morning Prayer.

The Collects, which follow, are some short, pious, and impressive prayers, collected out of the holy Scriptures, ushered in with such attributes of God, as are proper and suitable to the petitions contained in them, and offered up in the name and through the mediation of Jesus Christ. Dr. Hole. As on every day, or season, there is something more particularly commended to our meditations by the Church, so the Collect reflects chiefly upon that, though sometimes more generally upon the whole matter of the Epistle and Gospel, desiring inspiration, strength, and protection from God Almighty in the practice and pursuance of what is set before us. But concerning the matter of the several Collects a particular account will be given as each occurs. Bp. Sparrow.

That most of the Collects are very ancient, appears by their conformity to the Epistles and Gospels, which are thought to have been selected by St. Jerom, and put into the Lectionary by him: for which reason many believe that the Collects also were first framed by him. It is certain that Gelasius, who was bishop of Rome in the year of our Lord 492, ranged the Collects, which were then used, into order, and added some new ones of his own: which office was again corrected by Pope Gregory the Great in the year 600, whose Sacramentary contains most of the Collects we now use. But our Reformers observing that some of these Collects were afterwards corrupted by superstitious alterations and additions, and that others were quite left out of the Roman Missals, and entire new ones, relating to their present innovations, added in their room; they therefore examined every Collect strictly, and where they found any of them corrupted, there they corrected them; where any new ones had been inserted, they restored the old ones; and lastly, at the Restoration, every Collect was again reviewed, when whatsoever was deficient was supplied, and all, that was but improperly expressed, rectified. Wheatly.

It was the opinion of our wise and pious Reformers that these Collects being found in the Romish mass book was no objection to the use of them. For they considered, that we ought to depart from the corruptions only of that church: and when these were intirely corrected, or cast off, they rightly judged that it would have argued in them a strange and even scandalous perverseness, not to retain those parts or offices, the soundness whereof was evident, by their being either expressly contained in, or undeniably founded upon, the word of God Himself. Dean Stanhope.

Subjoined is a table of the Collects for Sundays and other Holydays, as they now stand in our Liturgy: noting their origin, the time of their composition, and the principal variations they have undergone. The table, which was partly formed by Bishop Cosin, and published by Dr. Comber, is divided into three compartments. The first consists of the Collects retained from ancient Liturgies; the second, of such as were taken from ancient models, but were considerably altered and improved by our Reformers. The third, of such as were composed anew, and substituted in the place of others, which containing doctrines and positions, that to our Reformers seemed false, superstitious, or improper, were therefore rejected. By way of appendix is inserted a table, exhibiting the principal variations made in the Epistles and Gospels, at and since the Reformation.

The reader will observe, that the greater part of this class of Collects is found in Gregory's Sacramentary, which was composed before the year 600. All of these, therefore, are, at least, 1200 years old, and many of them are much older. For Gregory did not originally form the offices. He only collected and improved them. To wave all other proof of this, we have his own testimony, given in vindication of his conduct. "I have followed," says he, "a practice common in the Greek church, and have altered some old Collects, and added some new and useful ones." But the generality of the Collects in his Sacramentary he compiled from Liturgies, which, in his time, were esteemed ancient.

* Had Dr. Comber said Missal instead of Breviary, he would have been more correct. For though the Collect of the day was used in the Breviary, yet it was taken from the Missal. Thus in our Morning Prayer, the rubrick directs that the first Collect, that is, the Collect of the day, "shall be the same that is appointed at the Communion." By members of our Church, and dissenters, the Breviary, Missal, and Ritual, three very different books, are at present generally confounded. The Breviary contains matins, lauds, &c.; and if the reader considers it as corresponding with our daily service, he will not form a very erroneous opinion. The Missal, or Mass Book, answers to "the order of the administration of the Lord's Supper," together with "the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels to be used throughout the year." The Ritual is composed of occasional Offices, namely, Baptism, Matrimony, Visitation of the Sick, &c.

OWE no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that

[c] Epistles and Gospels] The Epistles are certain portions of Scripture selected for the most part out of the writings of the apostles, containing many excellent rules and precepts for instruction and comfort in all conditions. They are called Epistles, because they were sent by way of letter by the apostles to the several churches or places to which they are inscribed: for which reason they still retain the same name. Dr. Hole. Though some few of these portions are taken from the Acts, or other of the canonical books, they all receive their denomination from the greater part. Dr. Nicholls.

The Gospels are taken out of the writings of the four Evangelists, who relate the life and actions of our blessed Saviour; as the doctrine that He taught, and the miracles by which He confirmed it; both which, being of great use for the strengthening of our faith and hope in Him, are piously ordered to be read every Lord's day in the ears of the people. And in honour to our Saviour, whose words and works they are, the Church hath commanded them to be read and heard standing; which is a posture of reverence and resolution to adhere and stand to them. Dr. Hole. See the note on the rubrick before the Nicene Creed.

That the use of Epistles and Gospels peculiar to the several holydays was ancient, appears first by ancient Liturgies: secondly, by the testimony of the ancient Fathers. Let St. Augustin testify for the Latin church, in his preface to his comment upon the Epistle of St. John, and in his tenth Sermon. "We heard first," says he, "the apostolical Lesson, then we sang a Psalm, after that the Gospel was read." Now let St. Chrysostom testify for the Greek; "The minister stands up, and with a loud voice calls, Let us attend: then the Lessons are begun:" which Lessons are the Epistles and Gospels, as appears in his Liturgy, which follow immediately after the minister hath so called for attention.

The fitness of the Epistle and Gospel for the day it belongs to, and the reason of the choice, will plainly appear, if we observe that these holy festivals and solemnities of the Church are of two sorts; the more high days, or the rest. The first commemorate the signal acts or passages of our Lord in the redemption of mankind; his incarnation and nativity, circumcision, manifestation to the Gentiles; his fasting, passion, resurrection and ascension, the sending of the Holy Ghost, and thereupon a more full and express manifestation of the sacred Trinity. The second sort is of inferior days, that supply the intervals of the greater, such as are either the remaining Sundays, wherein, without any consideration of the sequence of time, (which could only be regarded in the great feasts,) the holy doctrine, deeds, and miracles of our Lord, are the chief matters of our meditations, or else the other holydays. And for all these holy times we have Epistles and Gospels very proper and seasonable; for not only on high and special days, but even on those also, that are more general and indifferent, some respect is had to the season, and the holy affections the Church then aims at: as mortification in Lent; joy, hope, newness of life, &c. after Easter; the fruits and gifts of the Spirit and preparation for Christ's second coming in the time between Pentecost and Advent. But these things will be shewn in the discourse of the holydays severally. As for the Lessons, although they have another order, and very profitable, being for each day of the week, following usually the method of chapters, and taking in the Old Testament also, (the Communion dealing chiefly with the New, as most fit for the nature of that service,) yet in them also regard is had to the more solemn times by select and proper readings, as hath been shewed: this being the Church's rule and method (as she hath it from the apostle) "that all things be done unto edifying," that we may be better acquainted with God, and with ourselves, with what hath been done for us, and what is to be done by us. And this visible as well as audible preaching of Christian doctrine by the solemnities and readings, in such an admirable order, is so apt to infuse by degrees all necessary Christian knowledge into us; and the use of it to the ignorant is so great; "that it may well be feared" (as a reverend person hath forewarned) that "when the festivals and solemnities for the birth of Christ and his other famous passages of life, and death, and resurrection, and ascension, and mission of the Holy Ghost, and the Lessons, Gospels, and Collects, and Sermons upon them, be turned out of the Church, together with the Creeds also, it will not be in the power of weekly sermons on some heads of religion to keep up the knowledge of Christ in men's hearts, &c." And no doubt, for this and other good reasons which He gives us, it was, that the primitive Christians were so exact and religious in these solemnities and meditations on the occasions of them; and therefore the Sermons of the Fathers were generally on the readings of the day, as hereafter is shewed. And we have from another the like hand, thus: "The blessings of God, whereof these solemnities renew the remembrance, are of that esteem to the Church, that we are not able to express too much thankfulness in taking that occasion of solemnizing his service. And the greatest part of Christians are such, as will receive much improvement in the principal mysteries of our faith by the sensible instruction, which the observation of such solemnities yieldeth. The remembrance of the birth, the sufferings, the resurrection of Christ, the coming of the Holy Ghost, the conversion of the Gentiles by sending the apostles, the way made before his coming by the annunciation of the angel, and the coming of the Baptist, as it is a powerful mean to train the more ignorant sort in the understanding of such great mysteries, so it is a just occasion for all sorts to make that a particular time of serving God, upon which we solemnize those great works of his." Bp. Sparrow.

The Church has not appointed these following Epistles and Gospels, but upon special relation to the time wherein they are read. And it is admirable to see with what order and wisdom all things are disposed, that they might be the more suitable for putting us in mind of what we are about, or what we have to do. The whole year is distinguished into two parts; the one to commemorate Christ's living here on earth, and the other to direct us to live after his example. For the first are all the Sundays, appointed from Advent to Trinity Sunday: for the second, all the Sundays from Trinity to Advent again. And because the first part is conversant about the life of Christ, and the mysteries of his divine dispensation, therefore, beginning at Advent, is the memory of his incarnation celebrated; and after that, his nativity; then his circumcision; his manifestation to the Gentiles; loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear his nonage; his doctrine; his miracles; his passion; his burial; his resurrection; his ascension; his sending of the Holy Ghost; all in the most perfect order: in all which we see the whole story and course of our Saviour in manifesting Himself and his divine mysteries to the world. So that the Gospels, read through this part of the year, have their chief end and purpose, to make us know, and remember orderly with grateful hearts, what excellent benefits God the Father hath communicated to us, first by his Son, and then by his Holy Spirit; for which unspeakable goodness we fitly end this division of the year, with giving praise and glory to the whole blessed Trinity.

The second part, which contains all the Sundays after that till Advent, being for our guidance during our pilgrimage in this world, hath such Gospels in order appointed, as may most easily and plainly lead us in the true paths of Christianity: that those, which are regenerated by Christ, and initiated into his faith, may know what virtues to follow, and what vices to eschew. Thus, in the first part, we are to learn the mysteries of the Christian religion; and, in the second, to practise that which is agreeable to the same. For so it behoves us, not only to know, that we have no other foundation of our religion, but Christ Jesus, born, and crucified, and risen for us; but also to build upon this foundation such a life as He requires of us. And because the first part ends with Pentecost, the giving of a new law in our hearts, therefore the second part is to begin with the practice of that law: that as the children of Israel did pass the desert by the direction of Moses, so we may pass through this world by the guidance of our Saviour; and, overcoming at last our spiritual enemies, we may come to our heavenly dwelling-place, and there remain with Him for ever. Bp. Overall.

The Epistles (for so the whole collection of them is commonly called, taking its denomination from the far greater part,) are portions of Scripture, chiefly consisting of moral precepts. Some few indeed must be excepted; which are either passages prophetical of our blessed Saviour, with regard to his first or second coming; or else historical, relating the memorable acts of the saints, whom the Church commemorates; or doctrinal, illustrating the ends and advantages of our Lord's actions or sufferings. Amongst those Epistles (strictly so called) some have a more immediate regard to questions of great importance, between the Jews and Christians, at the time when they were written. Yet are they not so confined to the controversies then depending, but that they, at the same time, help to explain many essential points and privileges of our religion: such as are highly necessary to be understood, and capable of bringing improvement to ours, and to all ages of the Church.

In the Gospels we are furnished with the strongest evidences of our faith. The mysteries of our Lord's incarnation and nativity, the miracles He wrought, the parables He spoke, the holy exhortations He has left us, whether in publick discourses to the multitudes, or in private conferences with his own disciples; the history of his life and death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven; the promises of his Holy Spirit, and predictions of the many wonderful things, which his followers, thus assisted, should be enabled to perform, in confirmation of the truth: these, upon the matter, make up the substance of this part of our service. Which gives us a perfect system for the establishment of our faith, as the Epistles have been observed to do, for the direction of our manners.

It were therefore heartily to be wished, that the excellency and usefulness of those Scriptures, chosen for the instruction and edification of our people, were more generally laid to heart: that men were duly sensible of the happiness of that communion, in which such effectual care is taken for their souls, that all who frequent our publick assemblies, are secure of being taught, even there, the whole of that, which is necessary to their salvation. And I hope I may take leave to recommend this (as I conceive) very reasonable instance of modesty and prudence, that such deference may be paid to the authority and wisdom of our governors, as for our flocks to make those passages of Scripture the subject of their private study and meditation, which have been judged most proper for their publick instruction. For, although our Church do, as indeed she ought, indulge the free use of the whole book of God to all her children, and as liberally impart unto them, in the course of daily lessons throughout the year; yet, since these passages are singled out for such times as are supposed to draw the greatest numbers together, this, methinks, is a fair intimation, and fit to be taken by the generality of people, that such portions of the Bible are not only of singular profit, when rightly understood; but that they are likewise best suited to the capacities of common men, and consequently, if attended to with diligence and honesty, in less danger of being misunderstood. Dean Stanhope.

The Epistles and Gospels are thought to have been at first selected by St. Jerome, and put into the Lectionary by him. It is certain that they were very anciently appropriated to the days whereon we now read them; since they are not only of general use throughout the whole Western church, but are also commented upon in the homilies of several ancient fathers, which are said to have been preached upon those very days, to which these portions of Scripture are now affixed. So that they have most of them belonged to the same Sundays and Holydays we now use them on, for above twelve hundred years; as I might easily shew also from several authorities.

In all the old Common Prayer Books, except the Scotch one, the Epistles and Gospels were taken out of the Great Bible, neither of the two last translations being extant when the Common Prayer was first compiled. But in regard of the many defects which were observed in that version, and upon the petition of the Presbyterian commissioners at the Savoy conference, the commissioners on the Church side concluded that all the Epistles and Gospels should be used according to the last translation. Wheatly.

[d] — a Vigil or Eve,] See note on the Table of Fasts, &c. at the beginning of the Common Prayer Book.

[e] The first Sunday in Advent.] For the greater solemnity of the three principal holydays, "Christmas-day," "Easter-day," and "Whitsunday," the Church hath appointed certain days to attend them: some to go before, and others to come after them. Before "Christmas" are appointed four "Advent-Sundays," so called, because the design of them is to prepare us for a religious commemoration of the "Advent," or coming of Christ in the flesh. The Roman ritualists would have the celebration of this holy season to be apostolical, and that it was instituted by St. Peter. But the precise time of its institution is not so easily to be determined: though it certainly had its beginning before the year 450, because Maximus Taurinensis, who lived about that time, writ a homily upon it. And it is to be observed, that for the more strict and religious observation of this season, courses of sermons were formerly preached in several cathedrals on Wednesdays and Fridays, as is now the usual practice in Lent. And we find by the Salisbury Missal, that before the Reformation there was a special Epistle and Gospel relating to Christ's Advent, appointed for those days during all that time. Wheatly.

It should be observed here, that it is the peculiar computation of the Church, to begin her year, and to renew the annual course of her service, at this time of "Advent," therein differing from all other accounts of time whatsoever. The reason of which is, because she does not number her days, or measure her seasons, so much by the motion of the sun, as by the course of our Saviour; beginning and counting on her year with Him, who, being the true "Sun of Righteousness," began now to rise upon the world, and, as "the Day-star on high," to enlighten them that sat in spiritual darkness. Bp. Overall, Wheatly.

The lessons and services therefore for the four first Sundays in her liturgical year, propose to our meditations the twofold Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ; teaching us that it is He, who was to come and did come, to redeem the world; and that it is He also, who shall come again, to be our Judge. The end proposed by the Church in setting these two appearances of Christ together before us at this time, is to beget in our minds proper dispositions to celebrate the one and expect the other: that so with joy and thankfulness we may now "go to Bethlehem, and see this great thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us," even the Son of God come to visit us in great humility: and thence, with faith unfeigned and hope immoveable, ascend in heart and mind to meet the same Son of God in the air, coming in glorious majesty to judge the quick and dead. Bp. Horne.

[f] The Collect.] The Collect appointed for the day, which is taken out of both the Epistle and the Gospel, and relates to both, puts us in mind of a double advent or coming of the Son of God: the one respects this life, when He came as a Saviour "to visit us in great humility;" the other respects the life to come, when He shall come as a Judge "in his glorious Majesty to judge both the quick and the dead." And to prepare us for both, the Church teaches us to pray this day for "grace, that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, that at the last day we may rise to the life immortal."

The Epistle for the day, out of which the Collect was taken, directs us to those graces of God's Holy Spirit, and acts of a good life, that are necessary to qualify and fit us to celebrate the coming of the Son of God in the flesh, and to make us partakers of the benefit and joy of his appearance. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel acquaints us with his humble, yet triumphant entry into Jerusalem. It should seem at first perhaps more proper to Christ's passion than his birth: but it is read now principally for those words in it, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord;" that is, Blessed is He for coming in the flesh, the cause of all our joy, for which we can never say enough, "Hosannah in the highest." Dr. Hole, Bp. Sparrow.

* There are some Epistles and Gospels which are not in the Lectionary, but were changed in the Roman Breviary for the better. The Reformers took these out of the Breviary, or rather the Missal; namely, the Gospels for St. Thomas, St. James, and All Saints' Days; the Epistle for St. Simon and St. Jude; both Epistles and Gospels for St. Paul, St. Matthias, and the Annunciation. Dean Comber, Shepherd.

and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof[g].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxi. 1.

WHEN they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples, saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me. And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophet, saying, Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass. And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them; and brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon. And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way. And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David; Blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest. And when he was come into Jerusalem all the city was moved, saying, Who is this? And the multitude said, This is Jesus the Prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple; and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves[h].

[g] It is the drift and design of this Epistle, to induce us to lay aside all wicked and sinful practices, that unfit us for the coming of our Saviour; and to adorn ourselves with all those graces and virtues, that serve to qualify us for his Advent, and to prepare us for the great festival of his Nativity.

Let us then from hence learn, first, to "cast off all the works of darkness," which are put to shame and discomfited by the light. Let us avoid the nightworks of "rioting and drunkenness, of chambering and wantonness, of strife and envying," which cannot bear the light, but seek darkness and disguises to cover their foulness and deformity. The night of ignorance and persecution is now farther spent with us, than it was with these Romans, and we are better instructed in the evil and danger of all sinful courses; and therefore it will not become us to live any longer in them, for if we do, "this will be our condemnation, that light is come into the world, and we love darkness rather than light, because our deeds are evil." Let us remember that it is beneath the dignity of a man, or the simplicity and sincerity of a Christian, to do what he dares not own, and to covet masks and vizards to hide the deformity of his ways: especially on considering, that they will ere long be exposed before angels and men, to his eternal shame and confusion of face; which should make us hate all those things that hate the light.

Secondly, Let us "put on the armour of light," which will defend us from all shame and rebuke now, and at last bring us to the light of everlasting life. Let us have "our loins girt about with truth, having on the breastplate of righteousness, and our feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace;" that being thus armed we may be furnished with spiritual strength enough to vanquish all temptations, and to quench all the fiery darts of Satan; looking for the blessed hope and appearance of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, especially now in the time of this mortal life, when the Son of God came to visit us in great humility, that we may be prepared for his second coming in his glorious Majesty, and from this mortal life may be translated to a blessed immortality; which God grant, for the merits of Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all glory and honour now and for evermore. Dr. Hole.

[h] The prophecy, alluded to in this Gospel, was delivered by Zechariah 500 years before the Advent of Christ. And St. Matthew affirmeth it to have had its accomplishment, when our Lord entered Jerusalem in the manner here described, amidst the acclamations of the attending multitude. The prediction was thus literally and most exactly fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth. No other king, with these characteristick marks about Him, ever thus came to Sion before Him; and, since the Jews rejected Him, they have lost their temple, their city, and their country; nor has there been any Sion to which their King might come. Jerusalem would not rejoice on the day, when the prophet had injoined her to rejoice, and therefore she has had cause to mourn from that day to this.

From this passage it appears that religion hath its joys: a prophet calleth us to exult and shout: and often as this holy season returneth, the Church seconds the call. Her services dispel the gloom of melancholy, and put gladness into the hearts of all her children. They are wonderfully calculated to renew good impressions in our minds, to increase our faith, to invigorate our hope, to blow up the sacred fires of devotion and charity, and to fill us with holy and heavenly tempers. They produce a joy, "which no man taketh from us," and in which "a stranger intermeddleth not:" they inspire a pleasure, which no pain can overcome, of which no time can deprive us, and which death will perfect and insure to us for ever. Perverse Jerusalem rejected joy, and chose sorrow for her portion. Glad tidings came to the Gentiles, and were gladly received. The Christian Church, formed of them, is now the daughter of Sion, and the new

The Epistle. Rom. xv. 4.

WHATSOEVER things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience, and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope. Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like minded one towards another, according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind, and one mouth, glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God. Now I say, that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers: and that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy Name. And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people. And again, Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles, and laud him, all ye people. And again, Esaias saith, There shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles trust. Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost[j].

Jerusalem. To her the promises are transferred and made good. She therefore obeyeth the prophet's injunction: she continually, with the holy virgin, "magnifieth the Lord, and her spirit rejoiceth in God her Saviour." Bp. Horne.

The impressions, most useful to be left on the reader's mind by this narrative, are such as regard the future coming of our Lord, prefigured by that of this day's Gospel. And in this type we all shall find subject for our imitation. These multitudes came out to meet Jesus riding on an ass; but the same Jesus shall one day "make the clouds his chariot, and ride upon the heavens as it were upon an horse," Ps. civ. 3; lxviii. 4. They sang the praises of the Son of David to a city, who would not receive Him as such; but He, who hath already demonstrated Himself to be that promised "Son of David," shall then come to convince the unbelieving world, that He is the very "Son of God." And we, like them, should all go forth to meet Him: like them, I say, with the sincerity of disciples, with the innocence of children. Let us, like them, cut down the "branches" from our trees; those worldly vanities and carnal affections, which, like luxuriant boughs, must be lopped off, and cast under the feet of this heavenly King, by stooping to his holy discipline. Let us too "spread" our hearts, as "they their garments;" that every faculty, and every thought, may be subject to his dominion; and labour to adorn the body of this mystical Head, the Church and doctrine of Christ. So shall this clothing of flesh, which must shortly be put off, be resumed again with joy; and, from a "vessel of honour and sanctification here," become his attendant and companion "into the heavenly Jerusalem." So shall we be qualified to bear our part, in the most exalted sense of these hymns and acclamations; and, in that day of salvation, shout forth with gladness and thanksgiving unspeakable, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord." Yea, blessed be He that cometh, not to suffer, but to reign; not to redeem, but to recompense. Hosannah to the meek Son of David! Hosannah to the glorious majesty of the Son of God! Blessed be the kingdom, which is come to rule our hearts by grace! Blessed be the kingdom that cometh to reward our obedience with glory! "Blessed be our peace, who died unto sin once! Blessed be our righteousness, who liveth for ever unto God," Eph. ii. 14; Rom. vi. 10; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; 1 Cor. i. 30. "Hosannah" to Him, who came to Jerusalem, to be judged in great humility! Hosannah to Him, who cometh with terrible pomp to judge both the quick and the dead! "Hosannah in the highest." Dean Stanhope.

[i] The second Sunday in Advent.] The Church, to prepare us farther for Christ's coming in the flesh, sends us this day, as Christ did the Pharisees, to the holy Scriptures, "for they are they that testify of him:" all the prophecies and promises concerning Him being recorded there for our benefit. The Collect for the day reminds us, that God hath "caused all holy Scriptures to be written for our learning," and teaches us to pray that we may receive and use them aright. The Epistle, out of which the Collect was taken, tells us likewise in the beginning, that "whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning," that is, that the history and prophecies of old, as well as the latter precepts or promises, were all designed for our instruction, "that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." The Gospel treats of Christ's second coming to judgment: an excellent preparative for the approaching commemoration of his first coming. Dr. Hole.

[j] The ends, for which St. Paul in this passage says the Scriptures were designed, are an excellent direction how to judge of our improvement by reading and hearing the word of God. He tells us, that the proofs to be produced of it are "patience," and "comfort," and "hope." Would a man then demonstrate that he hath profited by the Scriptures? Let him apply to himself these proofs. Hath he learned meekness and moderation to them who differ from him? Does he see the ignorance and infirmities of "weaker" Christians with temper and compassion; and, instead of

The Gospel. St. Luke xxi. 25.

AND there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring: men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable, Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled: heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away[k].

The Collect.

O Lord Jesu Christ, who at thy first coming didst send thy messenger to prepare thy way before thee; Grant that the ministers and stewards of thy mysteries[m] may likewise so prepare and make ready thy way, by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in thy sight, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Luke i. 17. 2 Tim. iv. 1.

1 Cor. iv. 5. 1 Tim. ii. 3.

The Epistle. 1 Cor. iv. 1.

LET a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful. But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgement: yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing by myself, yet am I not hereby jus-censuring and despising, labour to inform them better, and gain upon their affections by methods of gentleness, and all becoming condescensions? Can he bear the reproaches of them who are in the wrong, when he knows himself in the right? Can he put up injuries for God's sake, and quietly submit to affliction, when Providence lays it upon him? Does he support himself in hardships and temptations, under calumny and causeless contradiction, by the example of a suffering Saviour, and those other bright patterns of meekness and perseverance, whose trials and praises are recorded in those books? Does he labour diligently for peace and order, charity and godly unity? This if he does, he is instructed, and mighty in the Scriptures, indeed. But till the virtues, commemorated and commanded there, are copied out into his disposition and practice, "though he understand all mysteries and all knowledge," 1 Cor. xiii. 2; viii. 2, yet this apostle tells him roundly, that all this while "he is nothing," and "knows nothing, as he ought to know." Dean Stanhope.

[k] In its primary acceptation this prophecy relates to the destruction of Jerusalem. But the forms of expression and the images are for the most part applicable also to the day of judgment; and an allusion to that great event, as a kind of secondary object, runs through it. This is a very common practice in the prophetick writings, where two subjects are frequently carried on together. Thus our Saviour here holds out the destruction of Jerusalem, as a type of the dissolution of the world: giving thereby at the same time a most interesting admonition to his immediate hearers the Jews, and a most awful lesson to all his future disciples: so that the benefit of his predictions, instead of being confined to one occasion or to one people, is by this admirable management extended to every subsequent period of time, and to the whole Christian world. Bp. Porteus.

As the former propheey was fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, so will the latter be fulfilled at the general day of judgment, of which Jerusalem's visitation was a type. How will the glory and terror of that day dazzle the eyes and terrify the hearts of all the enemies of Christ! how will it delight the eyes and rejoice the hearts of all that love and fear Him, that serve and obey Him! Then indeed, when the "hearts" of wicked "men shall be failing them for fear," then may the righteous "look up and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh." Burkitt.

[l] The third Sunday in Advent.] The Collect for this day, adverting again to the first coming of Christ in the flesh, and to his second coming to judgment, reminds us, that, as there was a messenger to prepare his way for the one, so also there are ministers and stewards to make ready his way for the other: and furnishes us with a prayer, that as the former faithfully discharged his office at Christ's first coming, so the latter may perform theirs by way of preparation for his second. Who that first messenger was; and who the ministers and stewards now are, and how they are to perform their office in preparing the way of the Lord; the Epistle informs us as to the latter point, and the Gospel as to the former. Dr. Hole.

[m] — the ministers and stewards of thy mysteries] See 1 Cor. iv. 1. The mysteries of God are those counsels of the divine will concerning the salvation of lost mankind, which were kept wholly secret from the far greater part of the world, and discovered only in a small measure even to the Jews; but are now fully made known to all mankind by the apostles and other preachers of the Gospel, who are therefore called "the stewards" of them, because they are intrusted with them by God, and distribute and disperse the knowledge of them. Dr. Bennet.

tified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord. Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God[n].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xi. 2.

NOW when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them: And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me. And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? a reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in king's houses. But what went ye out for to see? a prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee[o].

[n] From this day's Epistle we may learn, 1. Who are the officers appointed to make ready the way for Christ's coming to judgment; namely, the ministers and stewards of his holy mysteries, who are therefore to be received and respected accordingly. We are here bid so to "account of them as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God;" and so to think them worthy of double honour, as well for his sake to whom they belong, as for the work's sake about which they are employed. Their calling is the highest upon earth, their employment the noblest, and their message the most honourable; they are the ambassadors of Christ, sent to treat with men about their everlasting peace and salvation. And as a prince reckons himself honoured, or affronted, in the good or bad usage of his ambassadors, so Christ accounts Himself respected or despised in the good or ill treatment of his ministers; and therefore the apostle gives a strict charge to all people, to "know them that are over them in the Lord, and admonish them, and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake," 1 Thess. v. 13. And the author to the Hebrews exhorts us to "obey them that have the rule over us in the Lord, and submit ourselves, for they watch for our souls, as they that must give account that they may do it with joy, and not with grief," Heb. xiii. 17.

2. If Christ's ministers are to make the way ready for his second coming, then we may learn hence to hearken to them and receive their message; the words they deliver are from God, and therefore to be received with all reverence and veneration, and to be counted worthy of all acceptation. As the ministers and stewards of God's house are to be faithful in delivering their Master's will, so are the people to be careful of receiving and observing it: "he that heareth you," saith Christ, "heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me," Luke x. 16. And dreadful will be the doom of all such, who shall be found despisers of God, and of Christ. Dr. Hole.

[o] From the method here taken by the Baptist, to satisfy his disciples that Jesus was the Christ, we may observe what sort of evidence the Christian religion stands upon. Miracles, done frequently, publickly, before unbelievers, before enemies, men who could not deny, and yet would have been glad with all their hearts to find any flaw in them, any shelter for their infidelity. These carried in them a sufficient conviction. But to whom? To all who would attend to them, who would compare prophecies and events, and acknowledge Him for the Messias, in whom these two concurred. But even these did not pretend to bear down prejudice and passion, peevish and resolute perverseness. Blessed are they that are not offended; because they submit to that proof, which Almighty God hath given of his truth, and are content to hearken to reason, in despite of all the solicitations of the world, and corrupt nature, to the contrary. But still "offended" many will be. Religion will always be spoken against; and the rock, on which our hopes are built, will continue "a stone of stumbling to the unbelieving and disobedient," 1 Pet. ii. 8. And since we have fair warning that thus it will be, this ought not to unsettle us in our principles, but rather to confirm us in the belief of a Gospel, the truth of which is manifest, even in this particular too. It should awaken our care and circumspection, that, while so many are ready to despise and take offence at Christ and his word, we be not found among them, that contribute to, or give just occasion for it. No: rather let us labour by a more vigorous zeal for God, and unwearied perseverance in well-doing, to put to silence the ignorance and malice of foolish and gainsaying men.

2. Secondly, It may not be unseasonable upon this occasion to observe the season proper for miracles. They are necessary to establish new doctrines, and to convert unbelievers: but, when alleged for doctrines sufficiently established already; when wrought or boasted of, only among people already possessed with a belief of the points they are made to countenance; when in a manner that seems to fear the being observed, or detected rather, by those of a contrary persuasion; they are then quite out of proper time and place, and do not create faith, so much as suspicion of fraud. Our Lord proved the force of his miracles, by shewing their agreement with the predictions, that such should be wrought by the Messias. But the same Lord hath warned us, that "in the last days" there shall be "lying wonders," Matt. xxiv. 24. 26; and therefore we have reason to believe, that the pretended workers of them in those days are "false prophets and false Christs." So great a difference there is between the miracles of Christ, which were foretold on purpose that men might believe and be saved by them; and those wonders of a

3. Lastly, When St. John Baptist is here said to "prepare the way of the Lord before him," we should do well to recollect wherein that preparation consisted. And every one in his station, but especially the ministers of the Gospel, who are messengers sent express upon this errand, should be careful to make ready the way to his second, as that harbinger did for his first, coming. For the preparations are in both cases the same; making guilty people sensible of their sins, reproving open wickedness, unmasking hypocrisy, beating down spiritual pride; importuning men to repentance, by representing, with a faithful zeal, the horrible mischiefs and dreadful conclusion of a wicked course of life, and the terrors of that Master, who, at his coming to purge the floor, will not fail to separate most nicely between the wheat and the chaff, and burn the latter with unquenchable fire. We shall do well to take the Baptist for an example of our conduct too, in giving weight to our doctrines by a life of severe virtue, by boldly rebuking vice, even in the greatest, when duty and a fit opportunity call us to it; and, if by this we fall under their displeasure, suffering with a constancy like his; and, even by our deaths, bearing testimony to God and his truth. These things duly attended to, would make a mighty change, even in a profligate and profane world. And, as it is our duty (ours especially who are ministers of Christ) to pursue them vigorously: so the blessed effects of reforming mankind are so very many, so very great, as to deserve our daily fervent prayers, that God would promote and succeed the good work. And this our Church hath taught us to recommend very pertinently to the divine favour and assistance in the Collect for this day. Dean Stanhope.

[p] The fourth Sunday in Advent.] This day being the Sunday immediately preceding the Nativity of our Lord, the Church calls upon us to expect Him with joy and to meet Him with exultation. The Collect for the day prays God to afford us the powerful assistance of his grace; that we may not be retarded by the weight of our sins, but may run with patience the race that is set before us. The Epistle recommends to us several Christian graces, very suitable to the near approach of so great a solemnity; namely, joy, moderation, trust, thanksgiving, and prayer: to all which is added the gracious promise of God's blessing upon those who cultivate them. The Gospel gives us a further account of St. John the Baptist, in the discharge of his office as our Lord's harbinger, and in the witness which he bore to Him. Dr. Hole, Dr. Nicholls.

[q] raise up thy power.] God is there said to "raise" or "stir up his power," when He exerts and shews it in a remarkable manner. See Ps. lxxx. 2; Deut. xxxiii. 2. Dr. Bennet.

[r] By "the peace of God" in this passage some suppose to be meant the reconciliation made with mankind in our blessed Saviour; a mystery far exceeding the comprehension, not of human only, but of all created and finite understandings. But the sense most apposite to the apostle's purpose seems to be, not only that peace, considered in itself, but a comfortable sense of, and firm persuasion, that we have a share in it; and that this will, even under the worst treatment, and heaviest afflictions, preserve the mind seriously affected with it, in such a state of undisturbed tranquillity as is not possible for any to conceive, whom their own happy experience hath not convinced. This sense seems to be much favoured by the just importance of that original word, which our translators render "keep." A military term, proper to garrisons; and intimating, that this inward peace is a strong guard, and impregnable defence, against all the tumults and tempests of a boisterous and uncertain world: such as will neither suffer our "hearts" to be overpowered, that is, our affections vitiated by immoderate fears, or hopes, or desires of earthly objects; nor our "minds" to be captivated, that is, our understanding and judgment to be imposed upon by false notions of temporal good or evil; but will set us above the world, and support and entertain us with spiritual consolations, the continual feast of a good conscience at present, and the prospect of bliss unspeakable and immortal afterwards.

And as this steady composure and serenity of mind may be applied to all the duties, recommended in the Epistle of this day, as their effect and reward; so it is immediately annexed, and seems in a special manner to belong to that of a devout and thankful application to God by prayer. Most seasonable therefore and wise is the use, which our excellent mother, the Church, makes of these words; in dismissing her children after the most solemn acts of worship, with this passage of St. Paul, in form of a blessing; imploring, that what he foretels and promises here, may be made good to the whole congregation. Most properly does she regard the distinction generally observed here between the "heart" and "mind," by begging that her children and members may be kept in the "knowledge and love thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that Prophet? And he answered, No. Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the Prophet Esaias. And they which were sent were of the Pharisees. And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that Prophet? John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one amongst you, whom ye know not: He it is who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose. These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing[s].

of God," and "of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord:" and most reasonably may it be expected, that this benediction will avail, since the nearer we approach to God our Saviour, by a spiritual communion in prayers and sacraments, and all other holy ordinances, the better we shall know Him; and the better we know Him, the more we shall be sure to love Him: and were that love entire, did He but reign in, and possess our hearts without a rival; we should then feel the best sense of that passage verified to the utmost, in a spiritual regard, and in our own particular case, that "the work of righteousness is peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever." Dean Stanhope.

[s] "This record of John" is well worthy of attention, particularly upon two accounts.

1. As it relates to himself, it sets him before us as an excellent pattern of true humility. To those questions of the Jews, which had a tendency to advance him in honour and esteem with the people, he returns answers in negatives so direct and plain, as would admit of no ambiguity, no doubt at all. To those which concern his true character he is content with such replies, as refer to a past prophecy concerning himself, and leave them to draw the consequences. The glorious things, spoken of John elsewhere, he might, without any breach of truth, have declared to those Jews of himself; but that eminent messenger, sent to prepare the way of the Lord, that figurative Elias, who came in the spirit and power of the Tishbite, that "prophet and more than a prophet," that excellent person, than whom "there had not risen a greater among them that are born of women," describes himself only in the character of a "voice crying in the wilderness:" the lowest of all the characters, by which the ancient prophets had represented him.

2. The testimony which he bore to our blessed Lord, is conceived in terms so respectful and magnificent, that, whilst it still farther shews his humility by precluding all comparison between Jesus and him, it seems also to contain a clear intimation of our blessed Lord's divine nature and excellencies. "He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose." For what excellencies, less than divine, could justify that awful distance they express, between so eminent a person, and the holy Jesus? They are not words of compliment and form, but of strict truth and equity. And yet it will be very hard to understand them so, if the comparison be stated, only between one prophet and another, only between the prince and so venerable a harbinger: in short, if we understand them any otherwise than thus, that even He that "was more than a prophet," and "than whom there had not risen a greater ever born of women," Matt. xi. 9. 11, was notwithstanding so many degrees inferiour to Him, whose way he came to prepare, because He was so the son of a woman, as to be more than man: the Son of God, and Himself very God. And thus considered, the passage, now before us, is so far from an affected strain of depressing himself, and magnifying his Master; that, could St. John have found any terms yet more lowly, they were still all far less than were due to that infinite distance, that essential greatness, between which, and the most exalted of all its creatures, there is no comparison, nay, not any manner of proportion, upon which a comparison may be founded. Dean Stanhope.

[t] The Nativity of our Lord,] This feast of our Saviour's nativity seems to have had its beginning in the first, or at least in very early, times of Christianity. We have no certain evidence of the exact time when it was first observed, yet it appears plainly to have been very early received all over the West. And the immemorial observation of it is an argument of its primitive institution. Dr. Nicholls, Nelson.

And that no one may want an opportunity to celebrate so great a festival with a suitable solemnity, the Church both excites and assists our devotion, by an admirable frame of office fitted to the day. In the first Lessons she reads to us the clearest prophecies of Christ's coming in the flesh; and in the second Lessons, Epistle, and Gospel, shews us the completion of those prophecies, by giving us the entire history of it. In the Collect she teaches us to pray, that we may be partakers of the benefit of his birth, and in the proper Psalms she sets us to our duty of praising and glorifying God for this incomprehensible mystery. Wheatly.

[u] —commonly called Christmas-day.] Mass was a word for festival, of Saxon origin, whence our Christmas: retained also in Candlemas, Martinmas, Michaelmas, &c. Todd.

On this festival we commemorate the incarnation of the Son of God, that great mystery of godliness, the prime pillar of our religion, and the firm foundation of all our hopes and expectations. Dr. Hole. The Collect reminds us of the Son of God having taken upon Him our nature, and been born of a pure virgin: and teaches us to pray, that we, having been born again in our baptism into a spiritual life, and received the adoption of sons, may daily be renewed in the spirit of our minds, by the operation of the Holy Ghost. Dr. Nicholls.

The Epistle for the day acquaints us, 1. with one great end and office of Christ's incarnation; namely, to reveal to us the mind and will of his Father, which He did more fully and clearly than had been done by

The Epistle. Heb. i. 1.

GOD, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom: Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands: they shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail[x].

any or all of the prophets before. 2. It sets forth the high dignity and greatness of his person, being equal in glory and greatness to the Father, from whom He came, ver. 3. 3. It shews us his exceeding great pre-eminence above the angels in sundry instances and particulars; from the fourth to the tenth verse. 4. It concludes with the eternity of his duration, shewing it to be before the worlds, which He made by his power; and that He will be after them when all things will be destroyed.

The Gospel represents Him to us both in his divine and human nature: by the one He is equal with God, by the other He is made like unto men. Both of these are mentioned by St. Paul, Phil. ii. 6, 7: and are more largely set forth in this Gospel. As He is God, He is styled here "the Word, the Life, and the Light of the world;" which glorious titles are given to Him in a way peculiar to Him, and not to be affirmed of any other. As He is man, He is said to be "made flesh, and to dwell among us;" the Gospel begins with the one, and ends with the other. Dr. Hole.

This was called in the first of Edward VI. "The second communion;" for there was another before it: the one to set forth his nativity of the blessed Virgin Mary, for which the Epistle was Titus ii. the Gospel, St. Luke ii; the other to set forth his eternal generation, which is that now continued by us, following the alteration made in the fifth of Edward VI. In the Church of Rome, and here in England aforetimes, they had three masses or services of communion upon that day, whereof this is the last. Bp. Cosin.

[x] It was the object of the apostle in this chapter to prove the just pre-eminence of the Christian dispensation above any other, by insisting especially upon the excellence of the person, by whom this revelation was imparted to us. "God spake in times past to our fathers by the prophets;" but "to us in these last days he hath spoken by his Son." He therefore goes on to prove the dignity of this last messenger to be so far superior to that of any other, as to admit of no likeness, no comparison between them: that He hath excellencies peculiar to Himself, and such as are communicable, not only to none, no not the best of the sons of men; but to none, no not the noblest creatures, of any other kind. In a word, that He is of a nature truly divine, of the same essence and eternity with God the Father; and his Son, in a manner and sense so proper and particular, as no other, however called such in Scripture, is, or must be understood to be.

The result is that the Gospel claims a just pre-eminence above any other revelation of God's will to mankind; because, not only the first and remote declarer, but the immediate publisher and dispenser of it, was a person truly and strictly divine. So that when God spoke to our forefathers by the prophets, it was by men, who in all points (their particular inspiration excepted) stood upon a level with those they spoke to: but when He spoke to us by his Son, He spoke by Himself, and without the ceremony of an inferior messenger. An honour and advantage this to us, a kindness and condescension in Him, which at all times deserves to be considered: but, at this festival especially, should be remembered with the most zealous expressions of wonder and praise. Dean Stanhope.

The condition of the Person, whose nativity we this day celebrate, is of the greatest consideration. For He, that cried in the manger, that sucked the paps of a woman, that hath exposed Himself to poverty and a world of inconvenience, is "the Son of the living God," of the same substance with his Father, begotten before all ages, before the morning stars: He is God eternal. He is also, by reason of the personal union of the divinity with his human nature, the Son of God; not

The Gospel. St. John i. 1.

IN the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light. That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth [y].

Saint Stephen's Day [z].

The Collect.

GRANT, O Lord, that, in all our sufferings here upon earth by adoption, as good men and beatified angels are; but by an extraordinary and miraculous generation. He is "the heir" of his Father's glories and possessions; not by succession, for his Father cannot die; but by an equality of communication. He is "the express image of his Father's Person" according to both natures: the miracle and excess of his Godhead being, as upon wax, imprinted upon all the capacities of his humanity. And after all this, He is our "Saviour," that to our duties of wonder and adoration we may add the affections of love and union, as Himself, besides his being admirable in Himself, is become profitable to us. Here then are concentrated, in a mysterious and incomprehensible manner, the prodigies of greatness and goodness, of wisdom and charity, of meekness and humility: if we consider Him in the bosom of his Father, where He is seated in a station of love and essential felicity: and in the manger, where love also placed Him, and an infinite desire to communicate his felicity to us. As He is God, his name is in heaven, and He fills all things by his immensity: as He is man, He is circumscribed by an uneasy cradle, and cries in a stable. As He is God, He is seated upon a super-exalted throne: as man, exposed to the lowest state of uneasiness and need. As God, clothed in a robe of glory, at the same instant when we may behold and wonder at his humanity, wrapped in cheap and unworthy cradle bands. As God, He is incircled with millions of angels: as man, in the company of beasts. As God, He is the eternal Word of the Father, eternal, sustained by Himself, all-sufficient, and without need: and yet He submitted Himself to a condition imperfect, inglorious, indigent, and necessitous. And this consideration is apt and natural to produce great affections of love, duty, and obedience, desires of union and conformity to his sacred person, life, actions, and laws: that we resolve all our thoughts, and finally determine all our reason and our passions and capacities upon that saying of St. Paul, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed," 1 Cor. xvi. 22. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

[y] From the representation which this day's Gospel contains of "the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh," 1 Tim. iii. 16, many duties result. 1. Let us admire and adore the infinite love and goodness of God in this astonishing condescension, that He, who was one with the Father, and of the same divine nature with Him, should stoop so low as to assume our human nature, with all its weaknesses and infirmities, for us men and for our salvation. 2. Let us contemplate the infinite power and unsearchable riches of divine wisdom in this transaction; that God should find out a way to reconcile sinners to Himself by his Son's taking upon Him sinful flesh, and thereby giving satisfaction in the same nature that offended; by which means justice and mercy met together, and righteousness and peace have kissed each other. 3. From the Word's having been made flesh and having dwelt among us, let us learn to preserve our nature more pure and undefiled from fleshly lusts, considering how highly that nature has been honoured by an union with the Godhead. Lastly, let us celebrate this mysterious union of our nature with his in that holy sacrament of Christ's body and blood, ordained on purpose for a memorial of it. The Word was made flesh that He might make us partakers of his Holy Spirit, which is conveyed to us in that holy feast appointed for that end; there we may spiritually behold that flesh torn, and that blood poured out, which he assumed merely to make our peace; and shall we refuse to remember and rejoice in that atonement? Rather let us take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord, who thus humbled Himself for our exaltation; let us compass his altar with praises and thanksgivings, and offer ourselves to Him, who thus freely offered and united Himself to us; that being made one with Him, we may for ever dwell in Him, and He in us. Amen. Dr. Hole.

[z] St. Stephen's Day.] Immediately after Christmas follow, as attendants upon this high festival, St. Stephen, St. John, and Innocents; not because this was the very time of their suffering, but because none are thought fitter attendants on Christ's nativity than the blessed martyrs, who have laid down their lives for Him, from whose birth they received spiritual life. And there being three kinds of martyrdom; 1. "In will and deed," which is the highest. 2. "In will," but "not in deed." 3. "In deed," but "not in will:" in this order they attend. St. Stephen first, who suffered both in will and deed. Next St. John, who suffered martyrdom in will, but not in deed, being miraculously delivered out of the boiling cauldron, into which he was put before Port-Latin in Rome. Lastly, the holy Innocents, who suffered in deed, but not in will; yet are reckoned amongst the martyrs, because they suffered for Christ: whose praise these his witnesses confessed, and shewed forth not in speaking, but in dying. See the Collect for the day. Bp. Sparrow.

As the interests of religion and virtue require, that due regard be paid to the memory of pious and good persons; and as they, who have laid down their lives for God and their duty, have given the strongest proofs of attachment to the noblest cause; so the Christian church hath, from the beginning, shewn distinguished honours to those professors of its holy faith, who have sealed their testimony to it with their blood. The first martyr, or witness, of this kind, after the blessed Jesus Himself, was St. Stephen, a man "full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost, and of power, and of wisdom," Acts vi. 3. 5. 8. 10: whose death is related in Acts vii. 59, 60. And we find in the next verse but one, that "devout men carried him," with decent solemnity, "to his burial," and made great "lamentation over him;" undoubtedly mixed with equal triumph, that he had finished his course in so exemplary a manner: nor were they withheld from it by fear of the resentment, to which so publick an instance of respect must provoke his murderers and all their adherents. Two of the most ancient monuments of ecclesiastical history, that we have, excepting the New Testament, are the accounts of the martyrdom of Ignatius and Polycarp, both disciples of St. John, written at the time of their suffering by the churches of Antioch and Smyrna, of which they were bishops. And in those they mention, as of course, their purpose of celebrating yearly the festival of their birth-days, of their entrance into a better life, for the commemoration of their excellent graces, and the incitement of others to imitate them. Thus did they provide, that "the righteous should be had in everlasting remembrance," Ps. cxii. 6; and observed the more particular direction, given to that intent in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "Remember them, which have (had) the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith follow, considering the end," the event, "of their conversation," Heb. xiii. 7. The rest of the primitive churches appear to have followed the same rule; and each to have honoured the more eminent of their own martyrs, who had been usually their teachers also, by anniversary assemblies for preserving the reverence due to their characters, and offering up thanks to God for their examples.

But the increase of their numbers, and the adoption of the sufferers of one church into the Liturgies of another, and the admission of eminently good persons, who had "not resisted unto blood," Heb. xii. 4, and the frequent grants, which in subsequent ages were made, of so high a distinction, with little care of previous inquiry, multiplied the returns of these solemnities very improperly and inconveniently. Then besides, a still greater evil was, that praises and panegyricks too soon grew to be immoderate, and afterwards impious. In the vehemence of national encomiums and exclamations, the saint was called upon as present, until at length he was thought so: and what at first was merely a bold and moving figure of speech, became at length in good earnest a prayer: which requested of a dead man, who was not able to hear it, not only that he would intercede with God in behalf of his fellow-servants, but that he would himself bestow such blessings upon them, as no creature hath in his power. Things being found in this condition at the Reformation, it was necessary both to abolish intirely these unlawful addresses, and to limit the original sort of commemorations to a moderate list of persons, indisputably worthy of them. Accordingly no day is appointed by our Church for the celebration of any other, than the principal saints mentioned in the New Testament, it being hard to stop, if more were added. And amongst these, St. Stephen is the only one, who stands solely on the foot of being a martyr: as indeed it was fit, that the foremost, the leader, of that "noble army" should be distinguished, and chosen, as it were, to represent the rest. Abp. Secker.

St. Stephen, whose festival is this day celebrated, was an early proselyte to Christianity, and a man of singular holiness, being described to be "a man full of the Holy Ghost," Acts vi. 5. He was the first person chosen by the apostles into the then new-erected office of deacons. He was brought before the sanhedrim, or Jewish council, for preaching that the Jewish economy should be abrogated, and the temple destroyed, Acts vi. 14. But Stephen vindicating his doctrine, by several passages of the Old Testament, and making therefrom some reflections on the cruel and persecuting temper of the Jews; they outrageously carried him out of the city and stoned him, Acts vii. 58. I do not find exactly how ancient the celebration of the festival of St. Stephen is; it was probably observed in St. Chrysostom's time, who has several homilies upon his memory, which may be thought to be preached upon this festival, in one of which he calls him the top of the martyrs, the Stephanos, or crown of the Church. In the second homily he calls him the "glory of the Church," the "champion of religion," the "leader up of the martyrs." Gregory Nazianzen, in another oration upon him, calls him the "Great Stephen, whose temples were bound with the first crown of martyrdom." Dr. Nicholls.

Of the Collect for this day it may be particularly noted, that, as the Church offers up some of her Collects directly to the second Person of the Trinity, so one of them is this for St. Stephen's day, and very properly: for as St. Stephen in the midst of his martyrdom prayed to Jesus, saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," and, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" so the Church, in imitation of this blessed proto-martyr, upon his day calls upon the Lord Jesus also, desiring of Him such a spirit as that of St. Stephen, to love and pray for our enemies, which is that heroical and transcendent virtue, which is peculiar to the Christian religion. Bp. Sparrow.

The Collect reminds us both of the sufferings and the virtues of St. Stephen. The Epistle, out of which the Collect was taken, calls the same things to our remembrance and imitation. The Gospel which contains our Saviour's prophecy of the sad fate and destruction of Jerusalem, acquaints us with many more that drank of St. Stephen's bitter cup, and were put to death by stoning; which occasioned the Church's selection of this portion of Scripture to be read on this day; in which we are told of Jerusalem's killing the prophets, and stoning them that were sent to it, and of the sad consequences that ensued thereupon; for it brought that utter ruin and destruction upon the city, as not to have one stone left upon another. Dr. Hole.

Acts vii. 55, 56. 60. Heb. ii. 18.

O blessed Jesus, who standest at the right hand of God to succour all those that suffer for thee, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

¶ Then shall follow the Collect of the Nativity, which shall be said continually unto New-year's Eve.

For the Epistle. Acts vii. 55.

STEPHEN, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up stedfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, and cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep[a].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxiii. 34.

BEHOLD, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city; that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered my children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord[b].

[a] In the circumstances of the heroick action here described, it is easy to discover a variety of matter, conducing much to the honour of the saint now commemorated, and to the edification of every pious Christian.

1. We have here the great mercy and goodness of God, in vouchsafing to St. Stephen such extraordinary measures of his grace, such a comfortable and delightful prospect of the glories of heaven, to sustain and fortify him, in the conflicts of his approaching death, for the sake of his blessed Son. And this is contained in the 55th and 56th verses.

2. We have likewise the stedfastness and vigour of St. Stephen's faith, in committing his soul to Jesus, at his last minutes, Acts vii. 59: an action, which does evidently imply a firm belief, (1.) That his soul was a substance distinct from his body; (2.) That it should not die with, but continue to exist when separated from, the body; (3.) That the same Jesus, whom he had acknowledged to be very man, is likewise very God: one able to hear and grant this prayer, and to preserve the souls commended to his protection and care. And, (4.) That the spirits received by Him, are in a state of safety and happiness.

3. Here is an admirable pattern of meekness and charity; ver. 60; of tender compassion for them, who have none for us; and of forgiving our bitterest and most bloody enemies; even then, when, if ever, our angry resentments might seem allowable. For all this is the result of St. Stephen's praying, that the guilt of his death might not be charged to the men, who most wrongfully inflicted it: doing this, at the very instant of their executing their malice, and adding to his agonies: and persevering in this invincible charity to his last breath, as if God's mercy to these hardened wretches were the thing, which of all others, he was most concerned to intreat, with the dying accents of a tongue to speak no more. Thus not only imitating that blessed Lord, for whom he was content to be so barbarously murdered, but, by his example, confirming the truth of St. Paul's assertion, that, "though a man have all faith, so that he could remove mountains, and though he give his body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth him nothing," 1 Cor. viii. 2, 3.

If we hope in earnest to attain St. Stephen's happiness, we should rather make his virtues than his vision our pattern; and provided we have but the former, the matter is not great if God do not allow us the latter. Let us therefore make the right improvement of having this eminent saint in remembrance, and endeavour, as well as pray, that our minds may be brought to his holy frame. So that in all our afflictions, but especially in any to which it shall please God to call us for "the testimony of his truth, we may stedfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory which shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost," whose necessary graces are never wanting to any who diligently seek and use them, "may" attain to that eminent instance of charity, to "love and bless our persecutors." Thus shall we find the help and favour of Him "who standeth at the right hand of God, to succour all them who suffer for him;" and who, if not appointed to suffer for, yet do their utmost to live and die, in his true faith and fear, the "blessed Jesus, our only Mediator and Advocate." Dean Stanhope.

[b] We have here a prediction concerning the Jews, and a severe denunciation upon them. 1. A prediction, foretelling what cruel usage they should inflict upon the first disciples and apostles of Christ, killing and crucifying some, scourging and stoning others: which accordingly was fulfilled in the stoning of St. Stephen, the crucifying of St. Peter, the scourging of St. Paul, and the putting of St. James to death with the sword. 2. A severe denunciation, that upon them should come Saint John the Evangelist's Day[c].

The Collect.

John i. 4; vii. 12. Eph. v. 14. 1 John i. 5 7.

MERCIFUL Lord, we beseech thee to cast thy bright beams of light upon thy Church, that it being enlightened by the doctrine of thy blessed Apostle and Evangelist

John xxi. 21; xii. 35. Rom. xiii 13. Eph. v. 8. John viii. 32. Col. i. 12.

Saint John may so walk in the light of thy truth, that it may at length attain to the light of everlasting life: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 St. John i. 1.

THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life: (for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us;) That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, That God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

all the righteous blood shed upon the earth from Abel to Zacharias, the last prophet, whose murder is mentioned by name in the Old Testament, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20. These words are to be understood, not as if the intent of Christ's sending the prophets was that the Jews might put them to death; but that this would be the consequence of their being sent. Our Lord concludes with a pathetick lamentation over Jerusalem, expressive of his vehement affection towards them, and the sincerity of his desire for their salvation: so that we are at a loss whether more to admire his great kindness and compassion to the Jews in general, and to Jerusalem in particular; or the amazing obstinacy and wilfulness of this people in rejecting so great favour, condescension, and kindness of the Lord Jesus Christ. "I would have gathered you," said Christ, "but ye would not:" and so their "house was left unto them desolate;" an alarming proof how wholly the ruin and destruction of sinners is chargeable on their own wilfulness and obstinacy; and how deplorably and inexcusably they will perish, who perish by their own wilfulness under the Gospel. Burkitt.

[c] St. John the Evangelist's Day.] St. John the Evangelist was by birth a Galilean, the son of Zebedee and Salome; his elder brother was James, not he who was surnamed "the Just," and who was the brother of our Lord, Matt. xiii. 55; Gal. i. 19, and the son of Alpheus, Mark iii. 18. He, and his brother James, were named by our Saviour "the sons of thunder," Mark iii. 17, for their peculiar zeal and fervency for his honour, which we see manifested in St. John's sedulous assertion of our Lord's Divinity. He was the most beloved by our Saviour of all his disciples, John xiii. 23. After staying some time with the blessed Virgin in his house at Jerusalem, to whose care by our Saviour she was committed, John xix. 27, probably till her death; he then travelled to preach the Gospel in Asia; but some say she accompanied him to Ephesus. But however, that he preached in Asia Minor, the best writers of antiquity allow, and he was probably the founder of the seven churches, Ephesus, Smyrna, &c. mentioned in his Apocalypse, Rev. i. 4. From Ephesus he was carried prisoner to Rome, upon account of the doctrine he taught, some think, from a malicious accusation of Ebion, others of Apollonius; and this in the year of Christ 92. There he was condemned to be thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil, but, being miraculously preserved, came out from thence alive. Afterwards he was banished into the island of Patmos, one of the Sporades, where he wrote his Revelation. He was afterwards by Nero the emperor recalled from his banishment, and then returned to Ephesus, where he reclaimed a young man, his former convert, relapsed into a dissolute course of life. He wrote his three Epistles to confute the heresy of Basilides, and other hereticks, who denied the divinity of our Saviour. Last of all he wrote his Gospel, to supply the omissions of the other Evangelists, some few years before his death. He survived till the reign of Trajan, and died above ninety years of age. Dr. Nicholls.

We celebrate this day the memory of St. John the Evangelist, who, being Christ's "beloved disciple," or "the disciple whom Jesus loved," that leaned on his bosom, and was admitted to the more private passages of his life, fitly accompanies the festival of our Lord's nativity.

The Collect for the day beseeches God's grace upon his Church, that it may duly profit by the doctrine of this blessed Apostle and Evangelist. The Epistle contains the matter, the reason, and the end of his writing his Epistles, which were all designed for the good and benefit of the Church. The Gospel, after mentioning our Lord's final charge to St. Peter, records a remarkable conversation that passed between our Saviour and him concerning St. John, in which our Saviour obscurely intimated, that the disciple should not die till the dissolution of the Jewish polity, a prophecy which history records to have been punctually fulfilled. This conversation is followed by a declaration concerning the truth of the Gospel written by the apostle. Dr. Hole, Dean Stanhope, Shepherd.

If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us[d].

The Gospel. St. John xxi. 19.

JESUS said unto Peter, Follow me. Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee? Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, That that disciple should not die; yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things, and we know that his testimony is true. And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose, that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written[e].

[d] Let the considerations, arising from this passage of Scripture, be so laid together, that the result of them all may be that fulness of a solid and well-grounded joy, which the apostle of this day designed the words, from whence they have been taken, should diffuse, through every soul that receives them. Let us hold in highest estimation that privilege which is indeed inestimable: the mystical union with God the Father and his blessed Son; the most valuable ingredient of a believer's both present and future happiness, and therefore the best ingredient of his present, because the earnest and undoubted pledge of his future and eternal. But let us consider withal, that to be united to God supposes a likeness to Him, in all those excellencies that are imitable by creatures: and in all those proportions to which such creatures as we, can raise our poor imperfect and still sinful selves: for such, we must remember, we yet are, even after our most sincere, our most successful endeavours to be holy. And therefore, as we must not presume upon the promises and love of God "without cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfecting holiness in his fear," 2 Cor. vii. 1: so neither must we forget, that all our cleanness is from "him, who hath washed us in his own blood," Rev. i. 5; that humility, and taking shame for our sins, and acknowledging our own unworthiness, as they are most suitable to our circumstances, so are they most for our advantage: there being no instance which does more remarkably than this, of recommending to the favour, and entitling to the mercy of God, make good that maxim of our blessed Master, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," Luke xiv. 11.

And, if these considerations, and their effects, can be more seasonable at one time than another, is there any fitter opportunity for them than the festival we now celebrate? when the beloved disciple does, as it were, again lean on his Lord's breast; and join our praises for the virtue of the servant, with our adorations for the birth of the Master: that birth, which was so circumstantiated, as to intimate how detestable sin and sensuality is to Him: that birth, which "manifested the life," till then "hid in God," that we might thenceforth live in, and by, and to Him: that birth, which is so full of confusion to the proud and arrogant; to those that do not, or that will not, see their vileness and frailty; but so full of comfort and holy trust to the penitent and the humble. For them, that feel and acknowledge their own misery and pollution, this newborn Saviour will cleanse by his blood; them, that lament and labour against their own infirmities, He will assist and strengthen by his grace. Let us then cast ourselves entirely upon Him, who, had He not not loved us, would neither have taken nor shed his blood for us. Approach Him as your only trust and refuge; for in what else can you place your confidence? not in men, though they may appear to be something, for no "man may redeem the soul of his brother, or make atonement unto God for him," Ps. xlix. 7. Not in yourselves, whom you may soon know to be nothing: nothing at the best, since all the evil in you is worse than so, and all the good is no better than so. For, though you "have laboured" ever so "abundantly," still, "it was not you, but the grace of God that is in you," 1 Cor. xv. 10: a grace given to the humble; a spiritual sustenance, of which the "poor in heart shall eat and be satisfied, and their soul shall live for ever;" while the conceitedly rich and full, the men who think they want it not, though then they want it most, shall be sent empty away. Shut not then the door of mercy against yourselves, by false notions of your own righteousness; but give the glory of your cleansing to that inestimable blood, which alone can take away sin; and be careful so to value the blessing, as never to forfeit again that fellowship, into "which the Father and his Son Jesus Christ" hereby vouchsafe to receive you. A fellowship of holiness here, but that, alas! imperfect, and too often interrupted; yet this to be completed in a fellowship hereafter in heaven, of happiness immutable, endless, and inexpressible. Whither God of his infinite mercy bring us in his due time, to whom be honour and glory henceforth for evermore. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[e] From Christ's calling upon St. Peter and the other disciples to leave all and follow Him, we may learn the great lesson of self-denial, and be encouraged to follow Him in the rough as well as the smoother ways of our duty. To approve ourselves his disciples we must be willing to accompany Him in his sufferings, as well as to partake of his glories; and to follow Him to the cross, if we mean to follow Him to a crown.

2. From Christ's checking St. Peter's curiosity about the time and manner of St. John's death, we may learn to avoid all idle and curious questions about matters which concern not us to know. To all those busy and inquisitive persons, who pry into things which do not belong to them, the rebuke addressed by our Saviour to St. Peter is applicable, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

3. This discourse may rectify the mistake about St. John's death: for from that saying of our Saviour's, "What if I will that he tarry till I come?" there was a common fame spread abroad, which obtained among the ancients, that he died not at all, but was translated. Others from that report believed, that he only lay

For the Epistle. Rev. xiv. 1.

I Looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's Name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song, but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women, for they are virgins: these are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth: these were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God, and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God[i].

asleep in the grave, and that he alone of all the apostles was to live till Christ's second coming to judgment. All which was without any foundation, for St. John himself in recording the matter, declared the sense of our Saviour to be otherwise; and the history of his death, in the days of Trajan, hath abundantly confuted that mistake. Dr. Hole.

Lastly, the declaration, with which St. John concludes, concerning the truth of his Gospel, being as he was our Lord's inseparable attendant and companion during his ministry, is a solid foundation for our faith and gratitude. Let us then thankfully receive the light, with which it hath pleased God to enlighten the Church, by the doctrine of this holy Apostle and Evangelist. Let us bless him for the abundant evidence which he hath given us to the truth of our holy religion and the excellencies of its divine Author. Let us study with diligence the most faithful records of his most holy life; and search for the treasures of wisdom in his heavenly discourses. Let us improve, by what we do or may know here, in holiness of conversation; and wait with patience and humble hope, for the ravishing discovery of that hereafter, which as yet is unattainable. So shall we pay true reverence to the memory of those saints, by whose labours we have been instructed, when we at once dwell upon their books, and live by their examples: so, be sure to obtain the seasonable requests, in which, with a charity large as his, whom we commemorate this day, we beseech God "of his mercy so to enlighten his Church with the doctrine of this blessed Apostle and Evangelist," St. John, that every member of it "may so walk in the light of his truth, as at length to attain the light of everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[f] The Innocents' Day.] The Collect for this day reminds us, with an allusion to the 8th Psalm, how God by means of little children can promote his own glory; and thence teaches us to pray that we may glorify Him by the mortification of our vices, by the innocency of our lives, and the constancy of our faith. The Epistle contains a vision of St. John, wherein was represented to him something of the glories of heaven and the felicities of a future state; of which, because suffering infants may be partakers, as well as adult persons, the passage is appointed to be read on the day of their remembrance. The Gospel acquaints us with the manner of our Saviour's preservation from the ambitious rage and cruelty of Herod; who, fearing the shaking of his throne by the birth of a new-born King, sought to slay Him in his infancy, that he might secure himself in the kingdom. Dr. Hole.

[g] — who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings &c.] The authors of this Collect followed the common interpretation of Matt. xxi. 15, 16; and supposed that the "babes and sucklings out of whose mouths God had perfected praise, or ordained strength," Ps. viii. 2, were certain "young children," who cried in the temple "Hosannah to the Son of David;" and that He caused Himself and his only-begotten Son to be greatly glorified thereby. The Church notices the passage in this Collect; not that the infants, murdered by Herod, did with their mouths glorify God; but because on this day, when we commemorate the death of so many infants slain for God's glory, the Church was willing to observe another instance, wherein God's glory was greatly promoted by such as have been supposed young children. Dr. Bennet.

[h] — madest infants to glorify thee by their deaths;] The infants slain by Herod's command did therefore glorify God by their deaths; because the murder of them on account of the incarnation of our Lord, whose life was principally intended to be taken away, tended to the promotion of God's glory, inasmuch as He secured the holy Jesus in a miraculous manner from the rage of that tyrant, and thereby caused that prophecy concerning our Saviour, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son," to be exactly verified in our Saviour, Hos. xi. 1; Matt. ii. 15. Dr. Bennet.

[i] In this passage we have a glimpse or imperfect representation of the future joys and glories of heaven: which are enough to quicken our appetite and desires after them, though not to satisfy our curiosity about them. "It doth not yet appear," saith St. John, "what we shall be:" for "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what great things God hath prepared for them that love and fear him;" only we know that we shall be "like him, for we shall see him as he is," 1 John iii. 2; 1 Cor. ii. 9. We shall live for ever in his pre-

The Gospel. St. Matth. ii. 13.

THE Angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child, and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt, and was there until the death of Herod; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth; and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not[k].

sence, and be delighted with the incessant praises and hallelujahs sung "to him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb for evermore." 2. We learn from this discourse the qualifications of the persons that will be received into those unspeakable joys. And they are such as are "pure in heart," and keep themselves "unspotted from the world;" for heaven is the mansion of peace and purity, where no discord or defilement enters. Again, they are such as are true followers of Christ and "follow the Lamb wherever he goes;" not declining the ways of virtue for any difficulties they meet with in them, but being faithful unto death, and "resisting even unto blood, striving against sin." Dr. Hole.

The passage thus proposed by the Church to our meditations as the Epistle for this day, contains some things not improperly applicable to those infants in particular, whose barbarous murder by Herod was made instrumental to the glory of Him for whom they died. For they in the most literal sense, "were not defiled" with sensual pleasures, who left the world in "virgin" innocence. They were most truly "redeemed from among men," whose early translation to a state of bliss and security prevented the hazards and temptations of a corrupt age. They were, strictly speaking, "the first fruits unto God and the Lamb," who began to shed their blood in the cause of a new-born Saviour, and were the first fruits of the martyrs themselves. By this earliest experiment of cruelty against his blessed Son, it pleased God to demonstrate, how vain all future attempts of his enemies should be, whose implacable and bloody malice laboured to destroy this hated king of the Jews, either in his person or his members: and that such wicked designs should have no other issue, than those of this day; disappointment and vengeance to the inhuman contrivers, happiness and reward to the innocent sufferers, and increase of honour to the Person, in whose cause they suffered. Thus Herod shortly after lived and died a remarkable monument of the divine justice, and perished by a complication of plagues, as amazing as the unparalleled crimes, that drew them down upon him. Thus these tender plants, cut off in the bud, sprang up again and flourished: and bore such fruits, as their circumstances were capable of; the confession of their blood, though not of their tongues: by which they and their memory are blessed. And thus the blessed Jesus, after sojourning in a strange country, returned to enlighten his own with that doctrine, which, from the very first setting out of its author into the world, was manured with blood, grew under persecutions, and by the fate attending it, proved, that to die in its defence was not to lose a life but to save it. This is in truth the quickest and surest passage from death unto life: from a life in the midst of which we are in death; to a life which is so indeed: life immortal, and full of glory. To which God of his infinite mercy bring us, for the sake of his dear Son and our only Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Dean Stanhope.

[k] We shall do well to improve and apply the circumstances of this festival in the following manner.

1. The flight of the Son of God into Egypt, who was able to preserve himself from danger, may teach us, how lawfully we may flee from those dangers, which we cannot otherwise avoid. It is a thankless fortitude, to offer our throat unto the knife. He, that came to die for us, fled for his own preservation, and hath bid us follow Him: "When they persecute you in one city, flee to another." We have but the use of our lives, and we are bound to husband them, to the best advantage of God and his Church.

2. It was warrant enough for Joseph and Mary, that God commands them to flee; yet so familiar is God grown with his approved servants, that He gives them the reason of his commanded flight: "For Herod will seek the young child to destroy him." What wicked men will do, what they would do, is known unto God beforehand. He, that is so infinitely wise to know the designs of his enemies before they are, could as easily prevent them, that they might not be; but He lets them run on in their own courses, that He may fetch glory to Himself out of their wickedness. Bp. Hall.

3. The dismal effects of Herod's ambition and rage should warn us always to behave ourselves with temper and moderation. Especially that we do so, when our enemies, or those that provoke us, lie at our mercy. Greatness and wealth are apt to turn our heads: but the effects of insolence to their brethren are never more deplorable, than when men have the temptation of power, to crush those despised things that lie below them. Of all persons, therefore, anger is least proper for princes, who can scatter death and desolation with a word of their mouths. And, in proportion, it must misbecome all superiors to their inferiors: because this passion generally spurs men on, to do the utmost they can do; and men are scarce ever very angry, without being very unjust. It is fit then this unthinking, unruly evil, should be held in with bit and bridle: and, the less any man's condition restrains him, from making his resentment of tragical consequence to others; the severer restraint, and more steady government, ought such a man to keep over himself.

The Collect.

ALMIGHTY God, who hast given us thy only-begotten Son to take our nature upon him, and as at this time to be born of a pure Virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by thy Holy Spirit; through the same our Lord Jesus Christ, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the same Spirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. Gal. iv. 1.

NOW I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all: but is under tutors and governours, until the time appointed of the father. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world: but when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ[m].

4. The steps, taken by Herod, toward this desperate wickedness, should particularly deter us from hypocrisy and dissimulation. But, above all, from that most impious instance of it, the pretending of religion for a cover to any unlawful and devilish contrivances. For I cannot but think it proper to observe, that the next thing we hear of Herod, after his dissembled intention to come and worship Jesus, when his real intent was to kill Him, is the barefaced butchery of this day. And thus it often happens. Men find a formal show of religion cannot compass those ends, which it was put on to serve, or to disguise; and then they presently throw off the mask, and lay aside all shame, all manner of regard for God and their duty. Nor is it indeed much to be wondered at, that those wretches should be given over to the blackest of crimes, and most fatal of all delusions; who have sinned against their best remedy, and prostituted the very ordinances of God to an artifice for rendering themselves more successful, in carrying on the service of the devil.

5. We should hence be disposed to entertain with patience and much meekness, not only the sufferings laid upon us by God's immediate hand, but likewise those which we endure from the wrongful dealings of wicked and unreasonable men. The injustice cannot, in this case, be greater than Herod's, nor can our innocence be more than that of those infants. Since then we are taught by this example, that persons, the most inoffensive and undeserving, may be persecuted even to the death, without any just reflection, either upon their own virtue, thus oppressed, or that Providence which permits it to be so oppressed: our method in this case should be, to take sanctuary in the peace of a good conscience; to look up with a holy resignation of mind to the wise Disposer of every event; and to trust his mercy, for the necessary comforts, the abundant compensation, of all the hardships He sees fit for us to undergo. Which yet we should not undergo at all, were it not more for his honour, nay, more for our advantage, to have it thus than otherwise.

6. The remembrance of Herod's disappointment should quicken, and establish, our hope and faith in God. When dangers hem us in, and our "enemies on every side thrust sore at us that we may fall," then let us call to mind, that He, who rescued his own Son, can never want means to deliver any son or servant of his, when such deliverance is seasonable and proper. But temporal deliverances are not always seasonable, not always most beneficial. And therefore our chief and most earnest desire should be, that we may find his assistance and protection always at hand, to support us in our spiritual encounters. For let our present difficulties be what they will, all will certainly be well at last, provided He do but grant the petition offered up to Him this day; that is, "So to mortify and kill all vices in us, that by the innocency of our lives, and the constancy of our faith even unto death, we may glorify his holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[l] The Sunday after Christmas-day.] This Sunday hath the same Collect with Christmas-day; and the Epistle and Gospel treat about the same business, the birth of Christ: for we have not yet done with the solemnity of Christmas. Thus great solemnities have some days after them, to continue the memory of them, as a prorogation of the feast. Bp. Sparrow.

It was a custom among the primitive Christians to observe the octave, or eighth day after their principal feasts, with great solemnity, (the reasons whereof shall be given in speaking of the particular prefaces in the Communion Office hereafter,) and upon every day between the feast and the octave, as also upon the octave itself, they used to repeat some part of that service which was performed upon the feast itself. In imitation of which religious custom, this day generally falling within the octave of Christmas-day, the Collect then used is repeated now: and the Epistle and Gospel still set forth the mysteries of our redemption by the birth of Christ. Wheatly.

[m] The sum of this day's Epistle is as follows: The Son of God was made of a woman, that He might be like us; and was made under the law, that we might be like Him; that is, He became the Son of man, that we might be made the sons of God, and partook of our human nature, to make us partakers of the divine. Whence we may learn, 1. To magnify and adore the infinite love and condescension of our Saviour to mankind, that the Maker of all things should, for our sake, vouchsafe to be made Himself, and that not only of a woman, but under the law too; that He, who gave laws to the world, should subject Himself to a law of his own making, and undergo the utmost rigour and severity of it, merely to deliver us from the curse and punishment of it. This is a mercy never enough to be acknowledged or admired, and may justly make us say with holy David, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?"

2. Christ redeeming us from the sentence and seve-

The Gospel. St. Matth. i. 18.

THE birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost: And she shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins. (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a Virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a Son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.) Then Joseph, being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife; and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son: and he called his name JESUS[n].

The Circumcision of Christ[o].

The Collect.

ALMIGHTY God, who madest thy blessed Son to be circumrity of the moral, as well as the burthensome yoke of the ceremonial law, should teach us the more hearty and cheerful obedience to Him; for hereby He hath verified his own saying, that his "yoke is easy, and his burden is light." He hath taken off all the rigour and hardship of it, and put such a sweetness and comfort into it, that renders his yoke rather an ease than a clog, and his burden not only light, but delightful; so the Psalmist assures us, "great peace have they that keep thy law, and nothing shall offend them." And elsewhere, "in keeping thy commandments there is great reward."

Lastly, Christ's receiving us into the adoption of sons may teach us to cherish all filial love and duty to Him, and to behave ourselves as becometh the sons and children of God; acting suitably to so great a privilege, and doing nothing unworthy of so high a relation. As God beareth towards us the bowels of a father, so let us bear towards Him the duty of children; "a son honoureth his father, and a servant his master." And we find God Almighty justly claiming the duty of both; "If I be a father, where is my honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts," Mal. i. 6. In a word, we must endeavour to please Him in all things, and to avoid whatever may offend Him: so shall we receive the inheritance of sons, and hear that happy sentence; "Come, ye blessed children of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Dr. Hole.

[n] The Epistle for this day hath told us, that "when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman:" the Gospel proceeds in explaining that work of wonder, and acquaints us particularly with the uncommon manner of his being so made. As therefore our meditations, on the day of his nativity, were fixed upon the glories of his divine, so those of this day more properly confine themselves to the reality of his human, nature. Those shewed us "God of the substance of his Father, begotten before the worlds;" these shew us "man of the substance of his mother, born in the world;" but both together give us a just idea of that "one Christ, who is God and man, perfect God and perfect man, of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting." Dean Stanhope.

2. From the angel's direction that his name should be called Jesus, we may learn the honour that is due to that holy name. The apostle calls it "a name above every name;" it was given from heaven, and brings salvation with it here on earth; yea, "there is no other name given under heaven, by which we can be saved, but only the name of the Lord Jesus." And therefore the apostle hath commanded, that "to the name of Jesus all things in heaven and earth and under the earth should bow and obey." Dr. Hole.

3. Let us remember the happy privilege, which we have, as members of his household, who came to "save his people from their sins." The knowledge of his power and influence, as a Saviour, is calculated to inspire us with a never-failing hope. It speaks comfort to the penitent. It consoles the trembling and afflicted. It calms the fears of conscience. It gives peace and security in good days. It lends its sanction to the best enjoyments; those, of which the rational and well-disposed alone are capable. It confirms the confidence of faith. It lifts the heart above the trials and the griefs which may befal us. It furnishes a sure stay amidst the changes of this transitory life. Let us then, with the venerable Joseph, who received the angel's message and injunction, and complied with them, so store the word of truth in our hearts, and comply with its directions. The name of Jesus will then be to us a name of trust, and a certain refuge of security and good hope. Archdeacon Pott.

[o] The Circumcision of Christ.] This feast is celebrated by the Church to commemorate the active obedience of Jesus Christ in "fulfilling all righteousness," which is one branch of the meritorious cause of our redemption; and, by that means, abrogating the severe injunctions of the Mosaick establishment, and putting us under the easier terms of the Gospel. This feast is older than St. Bernard's time, who has some homilies upon it. Dr. Nicholls.

The institution of the feast of the Circumcision is more ancient than our ritualists in general seem to have thought, as appears from Gregory's Sacramentary: and in the sixth century at latest a special and appropriate service was provided for it. But as the octave of Christmas fell on the same day, and as the octave was observed with extraordinary solemnity, the day received its denomination most generally from the octave, and not from the circumcision. If this festival be considered merely as the commemoration of "the circum-

BLESSED is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? For we say, that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also: And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect[q].

cision of our Lord," its institution, or at least its revival, commenced with our Reformation, or rather at the publication of our English Liturgy; and was first observed on January 1, $15\frac{49}{50}$. Shepherd.

The proper services are all very suitable to the day. The first lesson for the morning gives an account of the institution of circumcision; and the Gospel, of the circumcision of Christ: the first lesson at evening, and the second lessons, and Epistle, all tend to the same end: namely, that, since the circumcision of the flesh is now abrogated, God hath no respect of persons, nor requires any more of us than the circumcision of the heart. Wheatly.

[p] — to be circumcised, and obedient to the law for man;] Our Saviour assures us, that it became Him to "fulfil all righteousness," Matt. ii. 15: that is, He was bound, as the Messiah, to submit to all God's ordinances, and consequently to circumcision, and the other legal institutions. And this He did for the sake of mankind, that, by performing a sinless obedience in all things, He might be an all-perfect sacrifice to atone for our sins. Dr. Bennet.

[q] The best practical use to be made of this passage will be to consider what this rite represented, as necessary, not only to the persons formerly using it, but to us also who have the happiness of being exempted from the carnal ordinance itself, and all the servile consequences of it.

1. The first is a readiness, and willing disposition, to know the will of God, and to submit to it when known. This I collect from that exhortation of Moses, "Circumcise the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked," Deut. x. 16; joined with the reproof of St. Stephen, who calls the Jews "uncircumcised in heart and ears," Acts vii. 51, by reason of their inflexible opposition to the doctrine of our blessed Saviour and his apostles. The foreskin to be taken away, in this sense, is all that prejudice and self-conceit, all that carnal or worldly reasoning, which obstructs the efficacy of truth upon our hearts and lives. For want of this circumcision, the Jews, who had the covenant in the flesh, were yet out of it, as to its real advantages and spiritual importance. And, without the same, the Christian who disowns and disdains all marks of Judaism upon his body, is yet, in spirit, and to all the purposes of sin and reprobation, an errant Jew still.

2. Secondly, This true circumcision of the Spirit imports the weaning ourselves from the world, and setting our affections upon God and goodness. Thus much I infer from that other passage of Moses, "The Lord thy God shall circumcise thy heart, that thou mayest love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul," Deut. xxx. 6. So that, in this respect, "the first and great commandment," Matt. xxii. 38, as our Saviour calls it, the foundation and the substance, the beginning and the complement, of the whole moral law, was shadowed in, and contained under, this most significant ordinance. Covetousness and injustice, worldly-mindedness and vanity, luxury and love of pleasure, straitness of hand and heart, and unmercifulness to the poor and distressed; in a word, all those corrupt principles and dispositions which argue that we do not love God, or that we do not love Him better than the world, or that we do not love our neighbour for his sake, are so many sure symptoms of an "uncircumcised" spirit. These then must be pared off, and cast away; and the pious, the devout, the strictly honest, the cheerfully liberal, the tender and compassionate, the kind and condescending Christians, they only are the seed of Abraham, they only heirs of that covenant, made to that glorious father of the faithful.

3. Thirdly, This circumcision of the Spirit does yet more immediately denote a strict guard and government over ourselves: reservedness even in the lawful pleasures of sense, and a total abstinence from, and abhorrence of, all manner of scandalous lewdness and debauchery in conversation. Thus much is plain from that of Jeremiah, where the "foreskin of the Jews' hearts" is explained by the "evil of their doings," chap. iv. 4: and this again is described in the chapter next following, by "committing adultery, assembling by troops in harlots' houses, being as fed horses in the morning, every one neighing after his neighbour's wife," chap. v. 7, 8. It is obvious indeed to any one who considers at all what circumcision was, that the subduing of sensual and lascivious inclinations must needs have been meant by it. This is the very first thought that offers itself, and was no doubt one of the chief ends designed by it.

No man then fulfils the spiritual intent of that law now, but the sober, the regular, the chaste, the mortified Christian; he that subdues his body, and brings it into subjection; that curbs his appetites sharply, and keeps a

The Gospel. St. Luke ii. 15.

AND it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them. And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb[j].

strait rein over his passions; and though this, like the circumcision in the flesh, be painful, yet done it must be, and that early too. No man in this case can begin too soon, because no man can be in covenant with God and Christ upon other terms. "Our hearts and all our members must be mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts," before "we can obey his blessed will." And every man is obliged to set these bounds to himself: every Christian hath indeed done it already in that baptism, which the apostle hath therefore most emphatically styled, "The circumcision made without hands, and putting off the body of the sins of the flesh," Col. i. 11. This, and nothing less, can make it possible to profit by Him, who vouchsafed to be "circumcised and obedient to the law for man." Dean Stanhope.

[j] From the narrative contained in this day's Gospel we may learn, 1. To magnify the great condescension of the Son of God, in giving the poor shepherds next to his parents the first sight of Him. There were no doubt many great persons at that time in or near the city, whom the fame of this birth had drawn thither; yet God did not think fit to send an angel with this joyful news to any of them, but honoured the poor shepherds with the first view of Him. Dr. Hole. These were persons, simple, and mean, and humble; persons, likely to be more apprehensive of the mystery, and less of the scandal, of the poverty of the Messiah. And the lesson to be derived from this circumstance is, that none are fit to come to Christ, but those who are poor in spirit, despisers of the world, and simple in their hearts, without craft and secular designs. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

2. From the pattern set to us by those humble witnesses to our Redeemer's birth, we may learn to remember, that it is a perpetual branch of duty in all, who are made partakers of the glad word of salvation, to impart the knowledge which is opened to them; and to communicate the blessing of that light, which they enjoy, to those about them. We are bound thus to raise our own minds, and to lift up the hearts of others, to a better hope than this world or its pursuits can furnish; and to shew in all ways, that, for our parts, we acknowledge the great things which God hath done for us; that we believe them heartily, and are convinced of their reality and value. We are parts of one great family by the common bond of nature; and by the ties of grace we are the adopted children of one chosen and peculiar household. They who conceal the truth, by neglecting to bear testimony to it at fit times; they who dishonour it by taunts, or cavils, or reproaches, they who by evil habits disguise its whole influence, if indeed it has produced any measure of conviction in their hearts; such men will fall below the pattern of the shepherds' faith; and will come short of that heavenly kingdom, the glories of which were revealed in part to that watchful and much favoured company. Archdeacon Pott.

3. From the condition in which the shepherds found our blessed Saviour, we may learn a lesson of humility. He, for whom heaven is too strait, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain, lies in the strait cabin of the womb; and, when He would enlarge Himself for the world, is not allowed the room of an inn. The many mansions of heaven were at his disposing; the earth was his, and the fulness of it; yet He suffers Himself to be refused of a base cottage, and complaineth not. What measure should discontent us, wretched men, when Thou, O God, farest thus from thy creatures? How should we learn both to want and abound from Thee, which, abounding with the glory and riches of heaven, wouldst want a lodging in thy first welcome to the earth! Thou camest to thine own, and thy own received Thee not: how can it trouble us to be rejected of the world, which is not ours? What wonder is it, if thy servants wandered abroad destitute and afflicted, when their Lord is denied harbour? Bp. Hall.

4. From our Saviour's submitting to be circumcised for the good of others, which He in no wise needed for Himself, we may learn to bear some hardships and restraints, which are not necessary on our own accounts, when we find we may help forward the salvation of others; and to sustain some difficulties in our own bodies, thereby to promote the good of others' souls.

5. From the Son of God's being called Jesus, a Saviour, merely to save his people from their sins, let us learn not to despise or neglect so great salvation; for it will highly aggravate our condemnation, if, when God the Father sent his Son on purpose to save us, we reject the method of salvation, and wilfully refuse to be saved by Him; the greatest portion of vengeance will fall to the lot of such obstinate sinners, who abuse this unspeakable mercy and slight such gracious offers. It will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, and other barbarous nations that sit in darkness, and never heard the glad tidings of a Saviour, than for those to whom salvation is tendered, and who yet cast it behind their back.

Wherefore, lastly, let us beg of God, that his grace, that bringeth salvation, may have its due effect upon us; that He would be pleased to finish that work in us, for which his Son came into the world; in a word, that He would save us from the power and pollution of sin here, and then we need not fear but that He will save

The Epistle. Ephes. iii. 1.

FOR this cause, I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles; if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward: How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy Apostles and Prophets by the Spirit; That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the Gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent, that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord: In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him[s].

us from the everlasting punishment of it hereafter. Dr. Hole.

[r] The Epiphany, &c.] The Church celebrates this feast to shew our gratitude to God in manifesting the Gospel to the Gentile world, and vouchsafing to them equal privileges with the Jews, who had been all along his peculiar people. The first instance of this divine favour was in declaring the birth of Christ to the wise men of the East, Matt. ii. 9. The ancient church called this feast "Epiphaneia," or the Appearance or Manifestation, and it was the common name for this and for Christmas-day. And as that was the greater, this was the lesser Epiphany. This festival was observed in the time of Nazianzen, whose sermon upon "the Holy Lights" is upon this day. Epiphanius and Chrysostom have likewise sermons upon it. St. Austin, in his time, speaks of it as universally celebrated by the catholic church, and neglected by none but the schismatical Donatists. Dr. Nicholls.

The word "Epiphany" in Greek signifies "manifestation;" and was at first used both for Christmas-day, when Christ was manifested in the flesh, and for this day, (to which it is now more properly appropriated,) when He was manifested by a star to the Gentiles: from which identity of the word some have concluded, that the feasts of Christmas-day and the Epiphany were one and the same; but that they were two different feasts, observed upon two several days, at least in some parts of Christendom, is plain from many of the fathers.

But, besides this common and more usual name, we find two other titles given to it by the ancients, namely, "the day of the Holy Lights;" and "the Theophany," or "Manifestation of God." The first name was given it, as being the day whereon they commemorated the baptism of Christ, who from that time became a light to those that sat in darkness: upon which account this day was with some Christians as solemn for baptizing the catechumens as Easter and Whitsuntide. And, for the greater solemnity of so high a festival, it was the custom to adorn the publick churches with a great number of lights and tapers, when they came to perform the service of the day. The reason of the other name is very plain, the feast being instituted in commemoration of the first manifestations of our Saviour's divinity. Wheatly.

This feast is called in Latin Epiphaniæ, Epiphanies, in the plural; because upon this day we celebrate three glorious apparitions or manifestations, all which are said to have happened upon the same day, though not of the same year. The first manifestation was of the star, mentioned in the Gospel, the Gentiles' guide to Christ. The second Epiphany, or manifestation, was of the glorious Trinity at the baptism of Christ, mentioned in the second lesson at Morning Prayer, Luke iii. 22. The third was of Christ's glory or divinity, by the miracle of turning water into wine, mentioned in the second lesson at Evening Prayer, John ii. Bp. Sparrow. For which reason this lesson, contrary to common usage, is taken from one of the Gospels, and not from an Epistle. Shepherd.

The first lesson contains prophecies of the increase of the Church by the abundant access of the Gentiles, of which the Epistle contains the completion, giving an account of the mystery of the Gospel's being revealed to them. Wheatly.

[s] The Epistle for the day declares to us the great "mystery of godliness," how "God manifest in the flesh," who was first preached to the Jews only, was afterwards "manifested to the Gentiles" also, and "thereby preached and believed on in the world." The practical use to be made of this great mercy is, 1. To acknowlege and adore the infinite love of God to the Gentiles, of whose race we are, in "turning them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." Herein the love of God to mankind appeared, in that "he would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth," 1 Tim. ii. 4. "God so loved the world," (saith our Saviour,) "that

The Gospel. St. Matth. ii. 1.

WHEN Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them, where Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa: for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governour that shall rule my people Israel. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go, and search diligently for the young child, and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also. When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star which they saw in the east went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way[t].

he sent his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," John iii. 16. He now makes no distinction between Jew and Gentile, for they are all one in Christ Jesus. He came first indeed to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," whom He gathered into his fold, and made them his own peculiar; but He had "other sheep," (He tells us,) "that belonged not to this fold," meaning the Gentiles; them also He brought in, "that there might be one fold, and one flock, under the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls." Hence He is said to be "a light to lighten the Gentiles, as well as the glory of his people Israel." 2. We may learn hence to make a right use and improvement of this great and undeserved favour to us Gentiles, and that is, "to walk in the light, as he is in the light," and to make it so "shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father, which is in heaven;" who hath called us miserable sinners, "who lay in darkness and in the shadow of death," to be the children of God, and hath exalted us to everlasting life. Let not this then "be our condemnation, that light is come into the world, and we love darkness rather than light; because our deeds are evil:" but let us "walk as children of light and of the day, casting off the works of darkness, and putting on the armour of light," to defend us from all iniquity. This is the sense of those many precepts, to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, and to let our conversation be as becometh the Gospel of Christ; which requires us to lead our lives by the light we have received, and to increase in grace and virtue, as we do in knowledge, otherwise it will only increase our guilt, and heighten our condemnation. Dr. Hole.

[t] God, who is the universal parent of all men, at the nativity of the Messiah gave notice of the event to all the world, as they were represented by the grand division of Jews and Gentiles: to the Jewish shepherds, by an angel; to the eastern magi, by a star. For the Gospel is of universal dissemination, and not confined within the limits of a national prerogative, but catholick and diffused. As God's love was, so was the dispensation of it, "without respect of persons:" for all, being included under the curse of sin, were to Him equal and indifferent, undistinguishable objects of mercy. And Jesus, descended of the Jews, was also "the expectation of the Gentiles," and therefore communicated to all: "the grace of God," being like the air we breathe; and "it hath appeared to all men," saith St. Paul: but the conveyances and communications of it were different in the degrees of brightness. The angel told the shepherds the story of the nativity plainly and literally: the star invited the wise men by its rareness and preternatural apparition: to which also, as by a foot-path, they had been led by the prophecy of Balaam.

And thus, in one view and two instances, God hath drawn all the world to Himself by his Son Jesus; in the instances of the shepherds and the eastern magi, Jews and Gentiles, learned and unlearned, rich and poor, noble and ignoble; that in Him all nations, and all conditions, and all families, and all persons might be blessed: having called all by one star or other, by natural reason or by the secrets of philosophy, by the revelations of the Gospel or by the ministry of angels, by the illuminations of the Spirit, or by the sermons and dictates of spiritual fathers: and hath consigned this lesson to us, that we must never "appear before the Lord empty," offering gifts to Him by the expenses or the affections of charity; either the worshipping or the oblations of religion; either the riches of the world, or the love of the soul. For, if we cannot bring gold with the rich men from the east, we may with the poor shepherds come and "kiss the Son, lest he be angry:" and in all cases come and "serve him with fear and reverence" and spiritual rejoicings. Bp. Jer. Taylor.

In applying the case of these distinguished persons to ourselves, we should endeavour to make them our patterns, so far as their example will bear imitation, first, in their zeal, conspicuous at the beginning, and through the whole progress of their journey; and, secondly, in their joy and satisfaction at the end of it.

The Collect.

O Lord, we beseech thee mercifully to receive the prayers
1 John v. 14. of thy people which call upon thee; and grant that they may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfil the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Rom. xii. 3. Col. i. 9—11. Phil. ii. 13. Heb. xiii. 21.

1. The former of these is manifest, from divers passages in this relation of the thing. To leave their own dwellings upon the single warning of an unusual star; to continue their travels in search of a new king; and, with a courage so undaunted, to carry the unwelcome news of a suspected rival to the capital city and court of a jealous tyrant, already infamous for blood; to comply so readily with the voice of the Sanhedrim, and persist in their purpose, notwithstanding the consternation of some, and the indifference of others, in a matter wherein all were so deeply concerned: these are qualities very remarkable in them. And they are so many prefigurations of those Gentiles, whose conversion their success, and this journey, represented. For such were their disadvantages too, in comparison of the privileges and preparations to Christianity, which the Jews enjoyed above them. Such was their early zeal to a new and altogether strange doctrine, which broke in upon them at once: so just a reproach to them, whom neither former revelations, nor ancient prophecies, nor infinite discourses, nor unblemished examples, nor miracles confessed to be divine, could win over to the truth.

Now if we do in good earnest desire to imitate either these wise men, or those Gentiles; it must be our care to keep our ears open, and our hearts teachable. We must not only see but follow, and embrace most gladly, the light that shines upon us from above, and is let down from heaven for a guide to us; comply cheerfully with every call and motion of his good Spirit; provoke, and, if possible, shame those into a noble and holy emulation, who shut their eyes against it. We must not suffer ourselves to be discouraged by any hardships or dangers, which our duty calls us to: nor grow cold upon the many ill examples, we converse among; the general neglect of most, and the bold affronts of some who make it an act of gallantry, to insult, and cast all the contempt they can upon religion: in a word, we must persevere in piety and virtue, though we were left to stand alone: and, in despite of all opprobrious treatment, which they or we may meet, from persons, who might and should know better, and in truth do not see, only because they will not. Of all this our Saviour hath shewed us the necessity, by declaring that men "cannot believe," while they prefer popular esteem before a good conscience: which is, in Scripture language, "receiving honour one of another, not seeking that honour which cometh from God only, and loving the praise of men more than the praise of God," John v. 44; xii. 43.

2. The last thing I observe is, the mighty satisfaction these wise men felt, at the return of the star. "When they saw the star" again, says the evangelist, "they rejoiced with exceeding great joy:" a joy, that sprung, no doubt, from strong assurances, that this was a token of their journey being well-pleasing to God; and that He would prosper it to their intended purpose, of seeing and adoring that wonderful infant, whose this star was. And here again they are a pattern, which we should be infinitely to blame not to copy after.

For, as the apostle upon all occasions urges, we are certainly of all creatures the most ungrateful and stupid, the most unworthy of our happiness, if we do not esteem the conversion of the Gentile world to be one of the most glorious mysteries of Providence, that ever was exhibited to mankind. And our feeling of this mercy should be the more sensible and tender; because we are the offspring of those Gentiles; and our ancestors, once a part of them, as dark perhaps as any. It is possible, indeed, we might not have retained the ancient rudeness and savageness of our country. From that our invaders would have soon delivered us. But, alas! how poor a consideration is it to Christians, that they have been refined into civility and good manners, taught arts and commerce, and improved in industry and learning? Allow these advantages the great value and commendation really due to them; yet still, I say, how little and insignificant are even all these polishings, in comparison of those benefits which come from the knowledge, the obedience, the hopes, and precious promises of the Gospel? The exalting our minds with this most holy faith, enlarging our ideas of God, giving us a prospect of heaven, seasoning us with a true taste of good and evil, and forming our lives upon the most perfect model of justice, and holiness, and order, and peace, and all that can procure or preserve the tranquillity and happiness of ourselves, and the whole world: this was, in a literal sense, to bring light out of darkness; and (praised be God) no part of his Church is blessed with clearer and purer day, than ours. This is our glory, this ought to be our joy.

Since then, we also are, with these eastern forerunners, happily conducted to Christ; let us, as they did, fall down and worship Him. We see Him not indeed, like them, in arms and infancy; but, which is at once a tragical, and yet most comfortable prospect, dying upon a cross for us; nay, risen again, gone up on high, shedding his gifts and graces down, and perpetually at the right hand of God making intercession for us. Let us then approach with reverence, and open our treasures too; let us present Him, not with gold or spices, but somewhat more becoming Him to receive, and us to offer; even our bodies, and souls, and spirits. These, though of little value in themselves, will yet be accounted a rich and fragrant, if they be but an humble and an holy sacrifice: the only effectual sacrifice of thanksgiving; and an oblation, which cannot more please Him, than it will profit us. For, by such a "reasonable service," by such undissembled testimonies of praise and gladness it is, that we must hope, God will be inclined to accept and answer the proper petition of this festival; even that He, "who by the leading of a star did manifest his only-begotten Son to the Gentiles, would mercifully grant, that we, which know him now by faith, may after this life have the fruition of his glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[u] The first Sunday after the Epiphany.] From Christmas to Epiphany, the Church's design is, to set forth Christ's "humanity," to make Christ manifest in the flesh, which the offices do, as we have seen; but from Epiphany to Septuagesima, especially in the four next Sundays after Epiphany, she endeavours to manifest his glory and "divinity," by recounting some of his first miracles, and manifestations of his deity: so that

The Epistle. Rom. xii. 1.

I Beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another[x].

The Gospel. St. Luke ii. 41.

NOW his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover. And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem, after the custom of the feast. And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it. But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey, and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance. And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him. And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers. And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject each Sunday is in this respect a kind of Epiphany. Bp. Sparrow.

The offices of the Sundays, which follow the Epiphany, until Septuagesima Sunday, are of the same argument with the Epiphany itself: all belonging to the manifestation of Christ, and to the end for which He was made known to the sons of men. Bp. Overall.

The design of the Epistles is to excite us to imitate Christ as far as we can, and to manifest ourselves his disciples by a constant practice of all Christian virtues. Wheatly.

The Gospel of this day mentions Christ's manifestation to the doctors of the Jews, astonishing all his hearers with his miraculous answers; withal declaring, that He was both God and man; man, in being made subject to his reputed father and his earthly mother; God, in going "about his Father's business." The Epistle exhorts us to make a spiritual use of the wise men's mysterious offerings, especially of myrrh: which signifies very rightly the mortifying of the flesh, and the offering of our bodies as an holy sacrifice to God by Christ. The Collect prays for grace to enable us thereunto. Bp. Overall, Bp. Sparrow.

[x] The Church, when appointing this portion of Scripture, treads exactly in the steps of the blessed apostle that wrote it. He, in the foregoing chapters, had vindicated, explained, and given due honour to the wisdom and the mercies of God, manifested in the glorious privileges and universal extent of the Gospel dispensation. He now proceeds to shew what the effects of these considerations ought to be, upon the minds and lives of all who have embraced it. The Church, in like manner, from celebrating the goodness of that God, in the conversion of, and manifestation of his Son and his truth to, the Gentiles, makes it her next care, to press the same practical doctrine, and to insinuate the absolute necessity of "walking worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, &c." Eph. iv. 1. Dean Stanhope.

In compliance with the apostle's advice, let us consecrate our bodies, as so many living temples, unto God, and let all the members of them become the instruments of his honour. Let the mouth praise Him with joyful lips, and the tongue sing of his honour; let the hands be often lifted up to Him, and opened in bounty to his members; let the feet walk in his ways, and run with cheerfulness the path of his commandments. And, to complete the sacrifice, let us dedicate our souls to Him as the living monuments of his praise, and devote all the faculties of them to the setting forth of his glory. To which end, 2. Let both be kept pure from the defilements of the world, to attend the service of their Maker; avoiding all sinful conformity to the world, and having our natures renewed by the graces of the Holy Spirit; our minds enlightened with the knowledge of God; our wills and affections rectified to the loving and obeying of Him. 3. Let us learn from our Saviour to be "meek and lowly in heart," not thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think; "but to think soberly and modestly, in honour preferring one another." Lastly, Let us learn to live in the unity and communion of the Church, as the only means of living in love, peace, and amity, with one another. For the Church being but one body, there should be no schism or division in it; but all the members are to be joined and united to it in one communion under Christ the head, that they may be fitted for the communion of the saints for ever in heaven. Dr. Hole.

unto them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart. And Jesus increased in wisdom, and stature, and in favour with God and man[y].

Ps. ciii. 19. Acts xvii. 24. John xiv. 27. Rom. v. 1.

The Epistle. Rom. xii. 6.

HAVING then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, [y] From this narrative we may learn some useful and necessary lessons.

1. From Joseph and Mary's punctual observation of the feast of the Passover, and their yearly repairing with their child to Jerusalem to that end, we may learn diligently to attend the seasons of God's holy word and sacraments, and "not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together" at the times appointed for them, "as the manner of some is." Dr. Hole.

2. The child Jesus, in the minority of his age, went up with his parents to the holy solemnity; not this year only, but, in all likelihood, others also. He, in the power of whose Godhead and by the motion of whose Spirit, all others ascended thither, would not Himself stay at home. In all his examples He meant our instruction. This pious act of his nonage was intended to lead our first years into timely devotion. The first liquor seasons the vessel for a long time after. It is every way good for a man to bear God's yoke even from his infancy.

3. While children of that age were playing in the streets, Christ was found sitting in the temple; not to gaze on the outward glory of that house, or on the golden candlesticks or tables, but to hear and question the doctors. He, who as God gave them all the wisdom they had, as the Son of man hearkens to the wisdom He had given them: that by learning of them He might teach all the younger sort humility, and due attendance upon their instructors. He could at the first have taught the great Rabbins of Israel the deep mysteries of God: but, because He was not yet called by his Father to the publick practice of a teacher, He contents Himself to hear with diligence, and to ask with modesty, and to teach only by insinuation. Let those consider this, which will needs run as soon as they can go: and, when they find ability, think they need not stay for a further vocation of God or man. Bp. Hall.

4. From this holy Child's leaving his parents to be about his Father's business, we may learn to leave father and mother, and to do the will of our heavenly Father. If our nearest relations would either obstruct us in our duty, or encourage us in any vice or immorality, they therein forfeit their authority, and lose all right to our obedience in such matters; and therefore our Saviour told his disciples that "he that loveth father and mother more than him, is not worthy of him."

5. From Christ's being subject to and observant of his parents in all other things, children may learn to be dutiful and obedient to their parents in every thing, that is not contrary to the will and commands of God. Dr. Hole.

6. The answer of Christ leads to a proper notion of his nature. The blessed Virgin, according to the supposition of the world, called Joseph the Father of Christ: "Thy Father and I sought thee." She well knew that Joseph had but a name in this business, yet she says, "Thy Father and I:" the Son of God stands not upon contradiction to his mother; but leading her thoughts from his supposed father to his true, from earth to heaven, He answers, "Knew ye not that I must go about my Father's business?" It was honour enough to her, that He had vouchsafed to take flesh of her: it was his eternal honour, that He was God of God, the everlasting Son of the heavenly Father. Good reason therefore was it that the respects of flesh should give place to the God of spirits. Bp. Hall.

7. From the Son of God's increasing in wisdom and stature, we may learn the truth of his humanity, that He grew up by the same degrees both in body and mind, as we do: He was fed by the same nourishment of meat and drink, as we are; He improved in knowledge and experience by the same means and measures of education, and arrived at strength and stature of body by the same steps as we do.

Lastly, from his increasing in favour with God and man, we may learn how to attain the same; He did it by his obedience and submission to the will of God, and by acts of prudence, meekness, and charity towards men, which made Him highly pleasing and beloved of both. And we too, by doing things acceptable to God and men, that is, by observing our duty to God, and shewing mercy and kindness and good-will towards men, shall likewise find the same. Dr. Hole.

After the event recorded in this Gospel a considerable interval succeeds, in the course of which but few particulars of our Saviour's history are given. It seems to have been the design of Providence, to restrain the exercise of fruitless curiosity on this score, by summing up, in one comprehensive testimony, all that it concerns us to know with regard to our Redeemer's course, before the days of his publick ministry arrived. Thus the Evangelist comprises in few words a description of the flourishing growth of that "Branch of Righteousness," which had its appointed seasons, and which was excellent in all the measures of its increase. The sacred writer furnishes a testimony which extends itself to all that period, when the narrative is not filled with more particular accounts. "The Child," saith the inspired historian, "grew, and waxed strong in spirit; filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him." This is abundantly sufficient to satisfy us, that the early stages of our Lord's life were answerable to his spotless character, and conformable to those more shining and distinguished parts of his demeanour, which are described for our perpetual regard, and commended by every motive of gratitude and duty to our faithful recollections. Archdeacon Pott.

[z] The second Sunday after the Epiphany.] The Gospel mentions Christ's turning water into wine, by which He manifested both his glory by the miracle, and his let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another: not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one towards another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate[a].

The Gospel. St. John ii. 1.

AND the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there. And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage. And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come. His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it. And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece. Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim. And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governour of the feast. And they bare it. When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was, (but the servants which drew the water knew,) the governour of the feast called the bridegroom, and saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now. This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him[b].

goodness in ministering to the necessities of others: to which virtue the Epistle exhorts us, that whatsoever gifts we have, we should use them as Christ did, to the good and benefit of others. The Collect, as diverse others, recommends to God the supplications of the people, &c. Bp. Sparrow.

[a] This Epistle begins where that of the foregoing Sunday ended; in the close of which the apostle makes a comparison between the mystical body of Christ's Church and the body natural: wherein as there are many members, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Then follows the Epistle for this day: in which we may observe, 1. The different offices and functions, wherein Christ hath set the several members of this Church, according to the different measures of grace given to them. 2. We may observe, that, as God hath placed men in different offices and functions, so hath He given different gifts and measures of grace for the discharge of them. 3. We may observe the manner how these gifts are to be exercised, that is, with all fidelity and diligence, to the promotion of God's glory, and the good of his Church and people. To this end the apostle farther recommends several graces and virtues, which will much help towards the faithful discharge of these offices. Such as contentedness in our station; industry in our proper business; mutual love and respect; a tender concern for the prosperous and adverse fortunes of our fellow-Christians; unity in matters of religion; and constancy and meekness under persecutions and wrongs. The cultivation of these graces will assist us in the discharge of the offices in which God hath placed us; and will bring comfort to us in this world, and happiness in the next. Dr. Hole, Dean Stanhope.

[b] This passage of Scripture shews how little ground there is for that stiff and precise temper, which condemns all outward expressions of mirth by publick and solemn entertainments. Our Lord's example hath justified such meetings of friends in more instances besides this; and indeed his life throughout is a pattern of social virtues, Matt. ix; Mark ii; Luke xi. xiv. xix; John xii. And, provided the mirth be innocent, the conversation inoffensive, the enjoyment of God's good creatures moderate; I think no considering man can deny, but that they are capable of serving many good purposes; and it is plain too, that they do not bring us under any necessity of sin. So that, if any spiritual inconvenience follow, the blame is not due to the things, but to the abuse of them. And this is no more than every thing else is liable to, as well as these. Dean Stanhope.

2. The first publick miracle of the Saviour of the world graceth a marriage. It is an ancient and laudable institution, that the rites of matrimony should not want a solemn celebration. When are feasts in season, if not at this main change of our estate, wherein the joy of obtaining meets with the hope of further comforts? It was in all likelihood some of their kindred, to whose nuptial feast Jesus was invited so far: yet was it more the honour of the act, than of the person, that He intended. He, that made the first marriage in paradise, bestows his first miracle upon a Galilean marriage. He, that was the author of matrimony and sanctified it, doth, by his holy presence, honour the resemblance of his eternal union with his Church. How honourable must be the state of wedlock, when the Son of God thus pleases to honour it! Happy is that wedding, where Christ is a guest. Bp. Hall.

3. The miracle here recorded was wrought, as the Evangelist declares, to "manifest forth his glory;" and to lay the ground of faith: for it immediately follows, that "his disciples believed on him." The connexion is strongly marked between the evidence proposed, and the faith which was established upon that foundation. All the miracles of Christ were indeed performed for publick notice and for general conviction: they were designed to rank among the solid and perpetual proofs, that He came forth from God; and to serve therefore as the fixed and never-failing grounds of faith, according to our Lord's reply to the disciples of John the Baptist, Matt. xi. 4, 5; and to his appeal, in terms so plain, to the captious Jews, John x. 37, 38. Thus does our Lord Himself lead our attention in the strongest manner to one main pillar of our common hope: teaching us at all times, from whence we are to draw some of the leading proofs of the truth of that which we believe, and of the certainty of our persuasion. Instead of high pretensions, supported by no external demonstrations, and attested by no publick facts; instead of the plausible discourses of such as study to mislead the world with false characters of inspiration, for which their own word must be taken; our Lord points directly to his miracles. They were seen of all; done in publick; wrought in the sight of thousands; frequently repeated; ever serving to good purposes; always calculated for the best and noblest ends. Archdeacon Pott.

4. Another particular to be insisted on is the peculiar character and efficacy of the miracle, by which it is here said that "Jesus manifested forth his glory." The word "glory" was used by the Jews to signify the visible marks of God's presence with them, in the tabernacle first, and afterwards in the temple. This signification appears from different passages in the Old Testament, and is recognized by the apostles in the New. So that the word "glory," applied to Christ, denotes the same God to have exhibited Himself in this Person, who formerly exhibited Himself to the Jews in their temple. And, by "manifesting forth his glory," we are to understand, that Christ did something, which plainly proved his power to be divine; and argued the actual presence of God with, and in, his human body.

And, who indeed less than God could have the creatures of this lower world so absolutely at his disposal, as to make them start from their fixed laws of being, and change their natures and qualities in an instant? He only could repeal these laws, who made them. He only could alter their forms, who at first appointed them. And when this was done, without invoking the aid of any higher power, it was an evidence of no higher power to have recourse to. It shewed the authority, by which He did it, to be supreme, as well as the creatures, upon which such authority was exercised, to be entirely his own. Dean Stanhope.

It was on account of these words, that this Gospel was appointed by the Church, for one of the Gospels to be read and published in the time of Epiphany, which gives the name to all these five Sundays. For Epiphany is nothing else, but the manifesting forth of Christ's glory and deity, whereof this Gospel is a testimony. And because it was the first Epiphany, that He made so of Himself after his baptism, and beginning to preach, therefore was it also appointed to be the second lesson at even upon the day of Epiphany itself. Bp. Cosin.

[c] The third Sunday after the Epiphany.] The Collect for this day puts us in mind of the sad and calamitous estate of this life, and therefore prays Almighty God for help and defence. The Epistle for the day gives us many useful rules to be observed in order to that end. Indeed this whole chapter, of which the Epistle is a part, contains many excellent precepts both divine and moral, to direct us in the whole course of our life; and therefore the Church hath wisely selected them to be read in three several portions, in the three following Sundays after the Epiphany, that, having the light, we may be taught how to walk in it. Dr. Hole.

In the Gospel we have an account of two miracles done by our blessed Saviour; the one upon a leper, whom He healed by a touch of his hand; the other upon a centurion's servant, whom He cured by a word of his mouth. Dr. Hole.

[d] In conformity with the general tenour of his advice, the apostle closes the chapter and the Epistle of the day with this precept, "Be not overcome" &c. To be overcome of evil, is to be so far exasperated by it, as to be moved to return and avenge it; which shews it to have got the mastery of us, and put us beside our patience. By this a man is brought in bondage to his passions, and becomes a slave and vassal to his vile affections; for "of whom a man is overcome, of him he is brought in bondage."

To overcome evil with good, is to conquer other injuries by acts of mercy and kindness, and to return nothing but good for the evil that is done to us; which shews that we keep the mastery of ourselves, and cannot be shocked by the assaults of any adversaries. Thus "to overcome evil with good" is the noblest of all victories; "it is the glory of a man (saith Solomon) to pass by an offence;" and "he that governs his passions, is greater than he that ruleth a city." For these things we cannot propound to ourselves a higher and better pattern than that of our Saviour, who overcame the greatest evils with the greatest good; and in the end,

The Gospel. St. Matth. viii. 1.

WHEN he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him. And behold, there came a leper and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed. And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them. And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion beseeching him, and saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented. And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him. The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof; but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say unto this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it. When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour [e].

for enduring the cross, was rewarded with a crown; and we too, by patient continuance in well-doing, shall receive eternal life. Dr. Hole.

[e] From the Gospel of this day we may learn the following useful lessons:—

1. From Christ's healing the leper and the centurion's servant we may learn the great goodness of our Saviour in not withholding his miraculous and healing power from the meanest objects. The leper here is supposed to be a poor person, having none to present or accompany him: but he was drawn only by the strength of his faith, and the exigence of his distemper. And the centurion's servant, we may well think, was not much better, though he had a good master to intercede for him. However Christ readily exerted his power, and extended his goodness in healing both.

2. From Christ's supporting his doctrine by miracles, we may farther learn his great care and kindness for our souls, that He leaves no means unattempted for our conviction and salvation. Indeed the excellence and usefulness of his doctrine, if well considered, are sufficient to beget and increase our faith in Him; and his word alone, if duly attended to, and observed, is enough to bring us to eternal life. But lest any should think that a deceiver might publish as plausible a doctrine, and that none is to be believed upon his bare word, He thought fit to add those mighty and miraculous works, that were abundantly sufficient to confirm the truth of all that He said. Dr. Hole.

3. In his healing of the leprosy, it may be remarked, that there is some peculiarity. In the law of Moses there are very peculiar directions given concerning the treatment of lepers, and a ceremonial appointed for the examination of them by the priest, when they were supposed to be cured. But no natural remedy is prescribed by Moses for the cure of it. It was considered by the Jews as a disease sent by God, and to be cured only by his interposition. There could not therefore be a stronger proof of our Saviour's divine power, than his curing this most loathsome disease, of which many instances, besides this, occur in the Gospels. The manner too in which He performed this cure was equally an evidence that "in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," Col. ii. 9: it was instantaneous, with a touch and a few words, and those words the most sublime and dignified that can be imagined; "I will; be thou clean;" and immediately the leprosy departed from him. This was plainly the language, as well as the act of God. "I will; be thou clean." Bp. Porteus.

Lastly, The short and edifying history of the Roman centurion appears to have been recorded, first, to give a most striking evidence of our Saviour's divine power, which enabled Him to restore the centurion's servant to health at a distance, and without so much as seeing him; and, then, to set before us, in the character of the centurion, an illustrious example of those eminent Christian virtues, humanity and charity, piety and generosity, humility and faith. Such were the virtues that distinguished Him: and from the contemplation of his character we may remark,

1. That the miracles of our Lord had the fullest credit given to them, not only, as is sometimes asserted, by low, obscure, ignorant, and illiterate men, but by men of rank and character, by men of the world, by men perfectly competent to ascertain the truth of any facts presented to their observation, and not likely to be imposed upon by false pretences. Of this description were the centurion here mentioned, the Roman pro-consul Sergius Paulus, Dionysius a member of the Supreme court of Areopagus at Athens, and several others of equal dignity and consequence.

2. The history of the centurion teaches us, that there is no situation of life, no occupation, no profession, however unfavourable it may appear to the cultivation of religion, which precludes the possibility or exempts us from the obligation of acquiring those good dispositions, and exercising those Christian virtues, which the Gospel requires. To all pretences to the contrary, whatever they may be, the instance of the centurion is a direct, complete, and satisfactory answer. His profession was that, which of all others is generally considered as most adverse to religious sentiments and habits; most con-

Ps. xciv. 17, 18. 22; xxxix. 4. Mic. vii. 2. Eph. vi. 10. 14.

O God, who knowest us to be set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright; Grant to us such strength and protection, as may support us in all dangers, and carry us through all temptations; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

2 Cor. xii. 9.

The Epistle. Rom. xiii. 1.

LET every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour[g].

The Gospel. St. Matth. viii. 23.

AND when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him. And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep. And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us, we perish. And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him! And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there trary to the peaceful, humane, and gentle spirit of the Gospel; and most exposed to the fascination of gaiety, pleasure, thoughtlessness, and dissipation. Yet amidst these obstructions to purity of heart, to mildness of disposition, and sanctity of manners, we see this illustrious centurion rising above all the disadvantages of his situation; and, instead of sinking into vice and irreligion, becoming a model of piety and humility, and of all those virtues which necessarily spring from such principles. This is an unanswerable proof, that, whenever men abandon themselves to impiety, infidelity, and profligacy, the fault is not in the situation, but in the heart; and that there is no mode of life, no employment or profession, which may not, if we please, be made consistent with a sincere belief in the Gospel, and with the practice of every duty we owe to our Maker, our Redeemer, our fellow-creatures, and ourselves. Bp. Porteus.

[f] The fourth Sunday after the Epiphany.] The Collect for the day reminds us of the many and great dangers, with which God knows us to be surrounded; and teaches us to pray to Him for strength and protection. The Epistle directs us to the great duty of subjection to our superiors, as a good means of procuring their protection, and preventing the many and great evils and dangers of resistance. The Gospel reminds us of other dangers, and of another way of escaping them: namely, by having recourse to God, who is ever ready to hear us, and deliver us out of all our troubles. Dr. Hole.

[g] It is much to be observed, how, in all the ancient apologies for our religion, we find the authors particularly careful to prove the Gospel, as it really is, the greatest security to all temporal jurisdiction; the surest promoter and best preserver of publick order and quiet; the strongest support of kings, and the most effectual restraint upon subjects. Few arguments were urged more frequently; few, we have reason to believe, contributed more successfully to recommend this religion to the general good acceptance of the world, than the manifest tendency it had to the safety and welfare of mankind; the particular instructions it gave, the weighty obligations and motives it enforced them with, and the unparalleled examples it every day procured, for containing all sorts of men within the bounds of their proper station and duty; for rendering them useful and serviceable to society and government; for a zealous and active obedience to their superiors in all lawful instances; and for meek and patient suffering under even unjust oppressions, rather than they would become instruments of disturbing the peace of the publick, or that of their own consciences.

St. Paul in this passage treats of the matter at large. He declares the nature of the duty injoined, the universality of its obligation; the reasons upon which that obligation is founded; the danger of refusing to comply with it; the equity of making it good; the particular instances whereby it ought to be expressed. And all these he declares to be, not merely matters of secular convenience, or Christian prudence; but a part of religion, and such as directly bind the conscience. This is the substance of the doctrine contained in the Epistle of the day: and were this doctrine duly attended to, it would be an excellent rule of behaviour, and of infinite importance to the welfare of all the world, both for this life and for the next. Dean Stanhope.

met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. And behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time? And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine, feeding. So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine: and behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils. And behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus: and when they saw him, they besought him, that he would depart out of their coasts [h].

The fifth Sunday after the Epiphany [i].

The Collect.

O Lord, we beseech thee to keep thy Church and household con- Eph. ii. 19.

[h] This Gospel, in the former of the two miracles recounted by it, sets before us a lively emblem of God's dealing with his servants; and a plain intimation, both what those servants are to expect from Him, and what they are to do to justify their dependence upon Him. Violent shakings and strong convulsions are incident to the fortunes, not of private men only, but of communities and kingdoms. This is the lot of the best, of the greatest, of the Church, of the whole world. God hath no where engaged to keep off assaults and temptations; He thinks it encouragement enough to sustain us under, to succour us in, and, at his own due time, to deliver us out of, our dangers and distresses. When therefore these attack us, either in our personal or our publick capacity, our business must be to seek his protection, by earnest and constant prayer; and thus to silence all those wicked distrusts which frail nature, the prevalence of sensual affections, and the extremity of afflictions, are too apt to betray us into: to remember, that, though ourselves are weak, yet our Redeemer is mighty: that the "stormy wind," which cannot "rise" but at his "word," shall, when He pleases to command, be immediately laid by it again: that He is disposed to look upon our sufferings and infirmities with a very tender eye: and, provided we be not wanting to our duty, He will accept that most pious and most necessary prayer, which our Church, in allusion to the passage now before us, hath taught us to put up this day.

Let us come therefore to the throne of grace in an humble sense of "being set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that, by reason of the frailty of our nature, we cannot always stand upright;" and may He "grant us such strength and protection, as may support us in all dangers, and carry us through all temptations, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." Dean Stanhope.

2. With respect to the latter miracle: not long before, our Saviour had commanded the winds and waters, and they could not but obey Him: now He speaks in the same language to the evil spirit: He intreats not, He persuades not; He commands. Command argues superiority. He only is infinitely stronger than the strong one in possession. Else, where powers are matched, though with some inequality, they struggle for the victory; and, without resistance, yield nothing. What need have we to fear, while we are under so omnipotent a Commander? "The waves of the deep rage horribly; yet the Lord is stronger than they." Let those principalities and powers do their worst; those mighty adversaries are under the command of Him, who loved us so well as to bleed for us. What can we now doubt of? his power or his will? How can we profess Him a God, and doubt of his power? How can we profess Him a Saviour, and doubt of his will? He both can and will command those infernal powers. We are no less safe than they are malicious.

3. The devil knew Christ to be God. In this we may dare believe Him, though in nothing else: he knew what he believed; what he believed, that he confessed, "Jesus, thou Son of the most high God:" to the confusion of those semi-Christians; that have either held doubtfully, or ignorantly misknown, or blasphemously denied, what the very devils have professed. Bp. Hall.

4. In the concluding part of this narrative we perceive an instance of mean and obdurate folly, which can scarcely be surpassed. We behold the inhabitants of a whole city coming forth, with deliberate purposes, to oppose the entrance of a messenger from God, who had already given proof of his divine commission by working a signal miracle among them. We see them, without questioning the fact, or disputing his authority, desiring this illustrious guest not to approach any nearer to their dwellings, and intreating Him to depart out of their coasts. What was this, but with fair words to request the messenger of truth to leave them to their beloved darkness, and not to disturb them in their sordid habits, or their vain pursuits? The motives which induced them to make this request, when they should have run with joy to meet one who came in the name and with the power of God, are evident enough. They were founded in the most narrow and disgraceful dispositions, by which men could be governed. It is manifest from their whole demeanour, that the people of this city were so wedded to idolatries and to those bad habits, which are always coupled with idolatry, that they could not endure to hear what might be said, to persuade them to turn from the ways of error and delusion to the worship and service of the living God. They dreaded, no doubt, that call to repentance, which would require them to forsake their sins, and to follow righteousness and truth, in order that the final measure of God's just indignation might not fall upon them. They feared to be informed, that the period of God's long-suffering was now drawn to its close; and that they must indeed take up a new course, or from thenceforth look for judgment without mercy in the day of doom. That we may convert this conduct of the Gergesenes to our profit, let us first impress upon our minds the guilt and misery of so base a temper, as that which was displayed in this sordid people; and let us then put ourselves upon our tinually in thy true religion; that they who do lean only upon the hope of thy heavenly grace may evermore be defended by thy mighty power; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Col. iii. 12.

PUT on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him[k].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xiii. 24.

THE kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came, and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest; and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn[l].

guard against all those steps and advances, which may tend to encourage that disgraceful state of mind and disposition. Farther, let us court and embrace all opportunities which can help to endear the great truths of religion to our hearts, for then we shall adhere to them with joy and readiness, whatever be our present circumstance or condition; we shall not shrink back from them with terror and alarm; but we shall cherish them with fondness, and regard them at all times with delight. Thus shall we make a wiser choice than these Gergesenes, never failing to remember, that when Christ, the merciful Redeemer, is welcomed to our borders, when He is entertained in his word and sacraments, in his precepts and assurances; then also will every benefit be received together with Him; every promise, every consolation, every good gift, every pledge of perfect happiness and everlasting glory. Archdeacon Pott.

[l] The fifth Sunday after the Epiphany.] The four precedent Sundays have manifested Christ's glory to us in part, by the miracles He wrought while He conversed with us on earth: the Gospel for this day mentions his second coming to judgment when He shall appear in his full glory, and all the holy angels with Him: which glorious appearance, as it will be dreadful to those who have resembled the tares, for they shall then be burned with unquenchable fire: so it will be a joyful appearance to such as the Epistle persuades us to be, namely, the meek, and gentle, and charitable. And the Collect is for such, praying God "to keep his Church and household continually in the true religion, &c." Bp. Sparrow.

[k] The best improvement to be made of this day's Epistle is by labouring to adorn our souls with the graces, virtues, and excellent qualities which it recommends: for instance, to put on the most tender "mercy, compassion, and kindness" towards others, and "humbleness of mind" in respect of ourselves. This is a raiment which will never wax old; nor is any thing more becoming to a Christian than "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." Again, let us put on patience and "long-suffering," under all the evils and sufferings that may befal us: which is the best way to make them sit easy on us, and will make them soonest pass away.

Moreover we are exhorted here to "forbear one another," not breaking out into hasty and violent passions, not straining matters to the utmost rigour and severity of the laws, but bearing with one another's infirmities, and using a conscience and moderation in all our ways and dealings with each other, and likewise "forgiving one another," if any difference shall arise, not studying revenge, or rendering evil for evil, but by Christ's example, as well as precept, forbearing and forgiving one another. But because charity is the sum and perfection of all other graces, let us above all things put on that "bond of perfectness," which will make us perfect and complete, lacking nothing; for that will procure and preserve peace both with God and man; and if that rule and govern our hearts, it will beget and keep a lasting peace there likewise. 2. As a means to attain all these graces, let us set a high price and value on the word of God, and suffer it to dwell in us richly in all wisdom; for it is by the heavenly seed of God's word that those graces are begotten in us. To which let us add, 3. The singing of psalms and other hymns, and spiritual songs, making melody in our hearts unto God. This is the way prescribed for our praising of God here on earth, and it is that which can best fit and prepare us to sing forth his praises for ever in heaven. Finally, in all our actions let us have regard to the honour of our Maker, "that whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, we may do all to the praise and glory of God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Dr. Hole.

The Collect.

O God, whose blessed Son was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil, and make us the sons of God, and heirs of eternal life; Grant us, we beseech thee, that, having this hope, we may purify ourselves, even as he is pure[n]; that, when he shall appear again with power and great glory, we may be made like unto him[o] in his eternal and glorious kingdom; where with thee, O Father, and thee, O Holy Ghost, he liveth and reigneth, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

1 John iii. 2. Phil. iii. 21. Heb. i. 8. Matt. xxiv. 30.

The Epistle. 1 St. John iii. 1.

BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know, that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil: for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil[p].

[l] The true import of the concluding words of this Gospel, and the principal lesson to be drawn from the whole parable, is this: that God hath fixed a day, in which He will judge the world: a day, the proceedings of which shall make a distinction between the righteous and the wicked; a perfect distinction, and such as the condition of this world cannot admit. That the punishment of the damned, intimated by binding and burning the tares, will be irreversible and extreme, such as can leave the good no room for envying, or grudging, the now boasted prosperity of the ungodly. That the distribution of final rewards and punishment is therefore a royalty peculiar to God, which He lets no other into: that the time of that distribution is in a future state: that such a time will in the course of things as certainly come, as in nature a harvest follows a seed time; and that the reason, why it is not yet come, is because matters are not yet ripe for it. So that upon the whole, so long as forbearance can be any way of service, either to the persons on whom it is immediately exercised, or to any others by their influence or example, so long it is continued; but, when these uses cease, and mercy hath done its part, then vengeance shall succeed. The good corn shall be parted from the refuse, and each assigned to a place worthy of it: the one laid up as a valuable treasure in the granary of this heavenly householder; the other cast out as a nuisance, no longer to be endured, and burnt in indignation, as unquenchable as the fire into which it is cast. All which considered, men have reason to be contented with God's own methods, and his own time, and should not throw out rash censures of Providence, nor desire to hasten a justice, that will take care to do itself right. And this shall be done effectually, in its proper season, to the entire satisfaction of every good man, and the eternal confusion of all obstinate and incorrigible sinners: when all mankind shall see abundant reason to join in that celestial song of Moses and the Lamb, "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints," Rev. xv. 3. Dean Stanhope.

[m] The sixth Sunday after the Epiphany.] The Collect, Epistle, and Gospel for this day were all added at the last review; till which time, if there happened to be six Sundays after the Epiphany, the Collect, &c. for the fifth Sunday were repeated. Wheatly.

The Collect and Epistle for this day remind us of the two great ends of Christ's manifestation in the flesh; namely, that He might destroy the works of the devil, and make us the sons of God. The Gospel warns us against false Christs and false prophets, who come for other and contrary ends; namely, to make us slaves of Satan, and to promote his works. Dr. Hole.

[n] — we may purify ourselves, even as he is pure;] St. John teaches us, that "every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure," 1 John iii. 3. The Church therefore justly prays, that "we may purify ourselves, even as our Saviour Christ is pure;" that is, may endeavour, as far as our frail nature will allow us, to imitate his purity. Dr. Bennet.

[o] — like unto him] That is, glorious as He is, as to his human nature now in heaven; though not in the same degree, yet with the same kind of glory. Dr. Bennet.

[p] The purpose of this day's Epistle is to teach us, 1. to admire and adore the infinite love and goodness of God in making us his sons, and taking us into so near and dear a relation to Himself. This St. John could not here speak of without ecstasy and amazement: "Behold! what manner of love is this," what unparalleled, what unspeakable, what undeserved love, is this, "that we should be called the sons of God!" And St. Paul elsewhere, like one in a rapture, cries out, "O the height and depth, and length and breadth, of" this "love of God that passeth knowledge," Eph. iii. 18.

2. Let the apprehension hereof beget in us a lively hope of the far greater bliss and happiness that will follow after it; for we cannot now take the full dimensions of this great privilege. At present let us fill our minds with well-grounded hopes, and rest assured of the full and speedy accomplishment of them.

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxiv. 23.

THEN if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that (if it were possible) they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other[q].

The Sunday called Septuagesima, or the third Sunday before Lent[r].

The Collect.

O Lord, we beseech thee favourably to hear the prayers of thy people; that we, who are justly pu- Ps. lxxx. 3, 4. Lam. iii. 39.

3. Let this hope teach us to purify ourselves, "even as he is pure," that we may be meet to be received into the undefiled regions; let us endeavour to be like God, that we may be fit to enjoy Him. To attain which, let us,

4. Beware of committing any wilful and deliberate sin, against the light of God's laws, and the dictates of our own conscience; for that will forfeit this high privilege, and make us the children of the devil, and not the sons of God.

Lastly, let us abandon all the works of the devil, which Christ came to destroy, and pray for all those fruits of the Spirit, that He came to plant in our hearts; so shall we that are now sons be made meet partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Dr. Hole.

[q] From the warning here given against false Christs and false prophets, we may learn to take the good advice here and elsewhere given to us, "not to believe every spirit," but to "beware of false prophets" and "false teachers, many whereof are gone abroad in the world." To prevent the being imposed upon by them, St. John directs, "to try the spirits whether they be of God," 1 John iv. 1: that is, to bring the doctrine and principles of all such pretenders to the test of holy Scripture, the only infallible standard and measure of divine truths. "To the law and to the testimony," saith the prophet Isaiah, "if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them," Isa. viii. 20. But because all sects quote Scripture for their opinions, and pretend to have the word of God on their side, we must remember, that all persons are not qualified to interpret the word of God; and that, if any take upon them to expound it, without any office, parts, or call thereunto, it is no wonder if they mistake error for truth, and put darkness for light. The apostle St. Peter tells us, that "the unlearned and unstable wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction," 2 Pet. iii. 16. And therefore they are to receive the instructions of those that are appointed to teach them; it is "the priest's lips that preserve knowledge, and the people are to seek the law at his mouth," Mal. ii. 7.

2. From the sad fate of Jerusalem, by the destruction both of the city and temple, we may learn to avoid those provoking sins that occasioned it. The sins of Jerusalem were obstinate impenitence and infidelity, the abuse of God's mercies and a wilful resisting of all the means of reclaiming her; the Jews would take no warning, but resolutely withstood all the methods both of mercy and justice. This was the occasion of their misery, and this will be our fate too, if we walk in the same ways; and "except we repent," and turn from our sins unto God, "we shall all likewise perish."

Lastly, from the signs and certainty of an approaching judgment, let us learn to look and prepare for it; not saying with the wicked servant, "My lord delays his coming," and so neglecting all care and preparation for Him; but let us be always upon our watch lest He come upon us unawares; let us make our accounts ready, that we may be able to yield them up with joy, and not with grief; so shall we avoid the doom of slothful, and receive the reward of good and faithful servants, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Dr. Hole.

[r] The Sunday called Septuagesima.] Among the several reasons given for the names of this and the two following Sundays, the most probable seems to be this: the first Sunday in Lent, being forty days before Easter, was for that reason called Quadragesima Sunday, which in Latin signifies forty; and fifty being the next round number above forty, as sixty is to fifty, and seventy to sixty; therefore the Sunday immediately preceding Quadragesima Sunday, being farther from Easter than that was, was called Quinquagesima (or fifty) Sunday, which is also fifty days inclusive before Easter; and the two foregoing Sundays, being still farther distant, were for the same reason called Sexagesima and Septuagesima (sixty and seventy) Sundays.

2. The observation of these days and the weeks following appear to be as ancient as the times of Gregory the Great. The design of them is to call us back from our Christmas feasting and joy, in order to prepare ourselves for fasting and humiliation, in the approaching time of Lent; from thinking of the manner of Christ's coming into the world, to reflect upon the cause of it, namely, our own sins and miseries; that so, being convinced of the reasonableness of punishing and mortifying ourselves for our sins, we may the more strictly and religiously apply ourselves to those duties when nished for our offences, may be mercifully delivered by thy goodness, for the glory of thy Name: through Jesus Christ our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 Cor. ix. 24.

KNOW ye not, that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things: now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away[s].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xx. 1.

THE kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a peny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the marketplace, and said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

the proper time for them comes. Some of the more devout Christians observed the whole time, from the first of these Sundays to Easter, as a season of humiliation and fasting; though the generality of the people did not begin their fasts till Ash-Wednesday. Wheatly.

The Collect for the day beseeches Almighty God favourably to hear the prayers of his people, offered up at these solemn seasons, and likewise mercifully to deliver them from the just punishment of their sins, to be now more particularly confessed and lamented. Dr. Hole. The Epistle persuades us to works of penitence and holy mortification after St. Paul's example: and, lest we should shrink from these hardships, it encourages us by proposing the rewards of these religious exercises, namely, a glorious and everlasting crown. The Gospel is much to the same purpose: it tells us that God's vineyard is no place for idle loiterers; all must work that will receive any reward: at the same time it affords comfort and encouragement to those, who have been previously negligent, by assuring them of God's goodness, provided they will exert themselves even now with diligence and sincerity. Bp. Sparrow, Wheatly.

[s] To the race and the combat, prescribed in this passage, every man is called. And every man, if the fault be not his own, may prove victorious in it. That expression, of "one obtaining the prize," is not intended by St. Paul to lessen our hopes, but to encourage our labours. It is meant to teach us, that the utmost we are able to do is little enough, that the benefit we aim at will recompense all our pains, and that each person, upon that account, should exert himself as vigorously, and be as careful not to be outdone by any other, as if only the one best in the whole number could win the prize, that all are striving for. Let us then (and God grant we may) put forth our whole strength, fix our minds upon this crown, and be continually pressing forward to it. Let us not suffer our thoughts to be dissipated by impertinence or vanity; by any of the follies or the trifles, which, upon pretence of entertaining, would loosen them, and break their force in this most necessary, as well as most important affair. For we are not so much as at liberty to engage in, or to stand clear of, this race and combat. Were the choice left to us, yet not to come in were to be undone: but that was happily made for us long ago. We set out in this course, and were listed in this service at our baptism, and cannot retract without desertion and apostasy. The greater reason is there, why, having gone so far already, we should by all means disengage ourselves from the weight of our sensual and corrupt affections; mortifying them by the abstinence, and other holy severities, proper for that season of humiliation and fasting, to which this portion of Scripture is so wisely propounded by our admirable Church, as a seasonable preparation. And, lastly, let not any of us presume to think those remedies a dispensation below us, to which St. Paul himself did not disdain to have recourse. For if he, who was "caught up into" the third heaven, favoured with extraordinary visions and revelations, above the power of human tongue to utter, entrusted with the conversion of so many nations, and indefatigably laborious in that ministry; if he, notwithstanding all these virtues and advantages, found it necessary to "keep under his body," and "bring it into subjection;" ver. 27; if he saw reason to fear, that otherwise he, "after having preached to others, should himself be a cast-away;" what care can be too great for us, whose attainments and zeal are so much less? How can we answer it to God, or to our souls, if we so far forget our own sinfulness and frailty, as not readily to submit to every method of forwarding us in the race that is set before us, and make not a diligent and thankful use of every advantage and defence, in this war of the spirit against the flesh? for sure we ought to esteem it a most happy thing, if, by all possible means, we can at last arrive to that unspeakable blessing, of having "our whole spirit, and soul, and body, preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Thess. v. 23, and be in that great day "mercifully delivered by his goodness." Collect for the day. Which he of his infinite mercy grant we may; to whom be glory and honour, for ever and ever. Dean Stanhope.

So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a peny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a peny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the goodman of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst not thou agree with me for a peny? Take that thine is, and go thy way; I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen [t].

O Lord God, who seest that we put not our trust in any thing that we do; Mercifully grant that Ps. cxli. 8;

[t] The design of our excellent Church, in recommending this portion of Scripture to our thoughts at this time, will be best answered probably by the following observations:—

1. We are upon this occasion more especially obliged to take notice of the kindness of this householder in calling these labourers. Thus does our heavenly Householder. He appoints and calls us to our duty, He frequently repeats that call, and does not cast us off at our first refusal: nay, He does more than any master upon earth can do, for He prepares our hearts to hearken to his calls; He strengthens and assists us in the duty we are called to; He rewards us according to our good dispositions, and graciously considers what opportunities we had, and what use we would have made of more, if we had had more. It is by Him that we begin, go on, and persevere as we ought; and, when He calls us to receive our wages, He pays us for the work, which without Him we could never have done: a work which cannot deserve, but yet which is a necessary condition of, our reward. And herein are manifested the freedom of his grace, and the greatness of his bounty; not in bringing men to heaven without good works, but in doing it for such works as Himself impowers them to discharge.

2. We shall do well to observe how the command here runs, "Go ye into the vineyard;" that is, to labour there. And, as in a vineyard there is a great variety of employment, so it is here likewise. Now a man then, and then only, labours as he ought, when He diligently and conscientiously discharges the duties of his own station. When he considers the post, and the several relations Providence hath placed him in; and, whether he be magistrate or private subject, priest or parishioner, parent or child, master or servant, rich or poor, trader or labouring man, studies the part belonging to him, takes care to answer all expectations from his character, and honestly follows his particular business and calling; this then is truly and properly to work in God's vineyard, to do our duty to Him and to our neighbour. The state of a Christian consequently is not a state of idleness and ease. This state is that vineyard, which we are already entered into. We were so at our baptism, and it is too late to think of retracting, unless we resolve to give up all our hopes, and are content to forfeit all our pretensions to our wages.

3. The instance of the murmuring labourers should teach us humility and charity: not to be puffed up with a vain opinion of our own deserts; not to undervalue those of our brethren; to receive our recompense thankfully, as the full that does, as more indeed than strictly can, belong to us; and to rejoice in the happiness of others, as no diminution, but an increase rather, to our own.

4. Let us be sure to make a right use of the encouragement given here to these labourers at the "eleventh hour;" which must be done, not by rendering it an argument for presumption, to soothe us up in impenitence or sloth, as if God were bound to receive us at what time and upon what terms we please. This is extremely to pervert the text, which tells us indeed, that call was the last; but it does not tell us that they, who refused his former calls, were called again and again. If this be done, it is grace and favour, not justice and debt. But we, who live under the ministry of the Gospel, have his calls daily sounded in our ears, and, if we continue obstinately deaf, cannot be sure that our last call is not already over. The true benefit then arising from hence, is to all such as have had the unhappiness to lie long in sin and ignorance, that God will accept and reward them, though they come late into the vineyard, provided they then apply themselves heartily to their Master's business, and work faithfully to the uttermost of their power. He makes gracious allowances for hindrances and infirmities; but then He expects that we should be sensible of them too; that we should lament, and strive against them, and do the best we can. Let us remember that the longer it is before we begin, the less day we have to work in, and therefore make the more haste to be ready for the evening, which draws on apace, when an account of what we have done shall be taken, and our wages awarded accordingly. This is the true intent of the parable, in that part of it; so well does the Gospel fall in with the Epistle of this day; and both together so very well agree to fit us for the approaching time of mortification, designed to awaken the sluggish, to quicken the loitering, and set forward every labourer in this spiritual vineyard. And, oh! that we all may receive instructions from hence, and be wise; understand our advantages, and the goodness of our Maker; consider our latter end, the approach of that night, which must end in day eternal; the happiness of that approach to all diligent and faithful labourers, but the terror and dismal consequences of it to every slothful and unprofitable servant. To say all in a word; let us "work the works of him that sent us" into this vine-by thy power we may be defended against all adversity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. 2 Cor. xi. 19.

YE suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise. For ye suffer if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face. I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak: howbeit, whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool,) I am more: in labours more abundant; in stripes above measure; in prisons more frequent; in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeying often; in perils of waters; in perils of robbers; in perils by mine own countrymen; in perils by the heathen; in perils in the city; in perils in the wilderness; in perils in the sea; in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness; in watchings often; in hunger and thirst; in fastings often; in cold and nakedness; besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not? If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not[x].

The Gospel. St. Luke viii. 4.

WHEN much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable: A sower went out to sow his seed; and as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And some fell upon a rock, and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprang up with it, and yard, while it "is day, before that time come, wherein no man can work!" Dean Stanhope.

[u] The Sunday called Sexagesima.] This Collect, like the preceding, is suitable to the season. The Epistle again propounds the example of St. Paul, who was eminent for works of mortification and religious exercises. The Gospel in another parable admonishes us to be careful and circumspect in the performance of our duty; since a large proportion of those, who hear the word, lose it, after they have received it, for want of due care and diligence, and do not bring forth fruit to perfection. Bp. Sparrow, Wheatly.

[x] The profit, fit for us to make of this passage, is as follows:—

1. The description given here of false teachers should be a warning to all Christians against listening to them; and a seasonable admonition to suspect and beware of such, as make it their business to infuse into men jealousies and evil surmises against their lawful pastors: a method, than which there cannot be a surer sign, that they, who have recourse to it, do therefore draw off our people, because thereout they suck no small advantage.

2. The instance now before us shews, how far we ought to be from reckoning what we endure for God's cause (when it is really God's cause) matter of sorrow or shame to us. St. Paul was, in comparison of the rest of the apostles, a labourer called in at the eleventh hour; and he thought, as he taught the Philippians to esteem it, a particular grace, that it was given him, "not only to believe in Jesus, but to suffer for his name." The fervency of his charity and zeal made up what was wanting in point of time; and we (especially those among us, that are ministers of the Gospel) never make a more just computation of our services, than when we reckon them by the hardships and self-denials we are content to undergo, for the good of our own souls, or those of our Christian brethren.

3. When St. Paul, to all his other sufferings, adds the care of all the churches, and the zealous compassion over them that failed, or were afflicted in them; this shews the abundance of his, and instructs us what ought to be the measure of our, charity. We are not to neglect, or think ourselves excused from a tender concern for the afflictions or dangers of our brethren, upon the account of any sufferings of our own. Be our other circumstances what they will, yet still we are members of Christ's body; and, while that relation continues, all the duties resulting from it must do so too.

4. The methods used for exercising St. Paul's patience and virtue teach us plainly, that the way, in which God would be served by Christians, but especially by his ministers, is that of constancy, and indefatigable diligence, and diffusive charity. And thus the apostle, as in the last, so again in this Lord's day's service, does, by his own example, encourage and prepare us for the discipline of the season drawing on. One great design whereof is, to break the softness of a nature too indulgent to flesh and blood, and to inure us to "endure hardness like good soldiers of Jesus Christ." In which warfare, the less we spare our own persons, the more we may depend upon his protection and support in the conflict, and the brighter trophies we shall raise to his glory, the honour of religion, and the unspeakable advantage of our souls and bodies both, in that day of triumph and joy: which God grant us all a part in, for our dear Redeemer's sake. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

choked it. And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. And his disciples asked him, saying, What might this parable be? And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand. Now the parable is this: The seed is the Word of God. Those by the way-side are they that hear; then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe, and be saved. They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away. And that which fell among thorns, are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. But that on the good ground, are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience[y].

The Collect.

O Lord, who hast taught us that all our doings without charity

[y] Scarce any passage, in the whole course of the year, is more worthy our serious consideration, than that which our excellent Church hath wisely appointed to be read for the Gospel of this day. That heathens and Jews, professed infidels and enemies to Christianity; that they, who want opportunities of knowing their duty, and would gladly use them if they could: that others, who live within the pale of Christ's flock, and have opportunities, but will not use them when they may; that these several sorts of people, I say, should continue unfruitful, is nothing strange. But that many who have them, and do use them, nay, and use them gladly too; that they, who "come" to the public assemblies for religious worship, as "God's people cometh," and "sit before his" prophets, "as God's people sitteth," and attend to the preacher with eagerness and a sensible delight; that these, after all, should prove barren and unprofitable, is matter to be sure of great grief, and must be allowed to carry somewhat of difficulty and of wonder in it. And yet that so it is; that the ministers of Christ often sow where they never reap, but lose the desired effects of their pious intentions and most zealous endeavours; our blessed Saviour acquaints us in this Scripture, and our own daily experience does but too visibly confirm the truth of it. So that it concerns every Christian diligently to examine into the causes of such lamentable disappointments; which, that we may know and effectually prevent, our Lord hath laid them down at large in the parable and application now before us.

A careful attention to the parable will shew, what temper is required to bring forth fruit, and how it comes to pass, that this is seldom done: that the seed and the sower are blameless, and all the defects in the ground itself. The Gospel sets both our duty, and our danger, before our eyes. These it is the minister's part to urge. He must apply Himself with all his might to persuade, to convince, to awaken, as occasion serves. But all this our Master did in the utmost perfection, and yet even He often sowed without any fruit. And, the truth is, what can we do? We can recommend religion to men's consideration, and we ought to do it as powerfully as may be. But, after all we have said, or can say, it will lie in their own breasts, whether they will consider or not. And they who do not, are hearers "by the wayside." We may tell our people, how loose the world should sit about them: that a good life should be their main concern; that they must learn and practise their duty, all prejudice and interest apart: but it is not in our power to disentangle their hearts, and root out their prejudices; and, till this be done, they "are seed among thorns." So, lastly, we can excite to patience, but we cannot inspire it; and they who faint, and fall off, are "stony ground." Consequently, when the preacher hath done all he can do, and all he ought to do, still the efficacy and success of his instructions will depend upon the hearers themselves. Inadvertency, and worldly-mindedness, and impatience, are obstructions of every one's making, and therefore they must be of every one's removing too. And, where they are not taken out of the way, our barrenness, and the whole guilt of it, can rest no where but upon ourselves.

It must not indeed be forgotten, but much of this depends upon the divine assistance; and that there are certain conditions, indicated by the parable, by which we may be sure of that, to strengthen and to prosper our endeavours. Let us but add to these our hearty prayers, and the work will certainly be done; and therefore, "that it may please thee to give all thy people increase of grace, to hear meekly thy word, and to receive it with pure affection, and to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit: We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord! Dean Stanhope.

[z] The Sunday called Quinquagesima.] The services of the two preceding Sundays have persuaded us to the exercises of Lent ensuing; but, because all "bodily exercise" without charity "profiteth" little or nothing, therefore the Church in this day's Epistle, from which the Collect is taken, recommends charity to us, as a necessary ingredient in all the acts of religion: and shews us moreover in the latter part of the Gospel, how we are to perform our several duties; commending to us by the example of the blind beggar's faith in Christ, and advising us to continue instant in our prayers, and not to despair of the acceptance of them, because we are not immediately heard, but to cry so much the more, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on us." Thus the two together recommend to us faith and charity, or faith which worketh by love. Bp. Sparrow, Wheatly. At the same time the former part of the Gospel greatly contributes to the purpose of our present devotions, by putting us in mind of our blessed Re-are nothing worth; Send thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before thee: Grant this for thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 Cor. xiii. 1.

THOUGH I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity [a].

The Gospel. St. Luke xviii. 31.

THEN Jesus took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished. For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on: and they shall scourge him, and put him to death; and the third day he shall rise again. And they understood none of these things: and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken. And it came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain deemer's sufferings and death; and thus setting before our eyes the noblest and most perfect pattern of the grace of charity recommended in the Epistle. The history and circumstances of our Lord's passion are reserved to a farther occasion: the warning of it given to his disciples is chosen as more seasonable at this time. Dean Stanhope.

[a] Well were it upon every preparation to our great feast of love at the Lord's table, if the apostle's description in this passage were laid open, and made the standard of our enquiry, upon the article of charity. The use of such a method would be of infinite use, in order to understand and amend ourselves: that so we may not live on, under a fatal deceit, and falsely imagine we are something when in truth we are nothing. For nothing we are, and no better, if we have not charity: and charity we have not, if we have not these marks to shew for it. The necessity of this virtue is so generally allowed, that all men flatter themselves with an opinion of possessing it. Insomuch that it is a very uncommon thing, to meet with any one, that would of his own accord confess the want of charity. And yet its nature is so little understood, or so little considered, that few, I doubt, are to be found, who truly have it. If we value our attainments in religious knowledge, if our liberality to the poor, if our readiness to die for the truth, (and yet how many are there able to go thus far?) this Scripture declares, they are of no value without charity; and that none of these is it. It affirms, that neither the peevish, nor the doer of no good, nor the livers to themselves, nor the envious, nor the ambitious, nor the self-conceited, nor the insolent and haughty, nor the selfish and narrow-spirited, nor the furiously angry, nor the evil surmisers, nor the severe censurers, nor the delighters in scandal, nor the spreaders of it, nor the rash believers of it when they hear it, are any of them charitable. Consequently, what degree of religion soever these people pretend to, it shall profit them nothing. And, if so, what a dreadful case are inconceivable numbers in, who think all safe and well with them? How ought this to awaken us? How to quicken our care, in searching, and discovering, and avoiding a secret danger, which some of us perhaps never dreamt of till this moment? How seasonably does our Church place this Epistle in the front of Lent, to prevent men's deluding their souls with the severities of that holy season? Those, though ever so pompous and austere, would not avail, when destitute of this comprehensive grace, this indispensable condition of salvation. How wisely hath she instructed us, how zealously ought we to pray, and never leave off wrestling with God, till our prayer be granted; "That he would send his Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues;" lest, living "without this," we be at last "counted dead before him?" blind man sat by the way-side begging: and hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant. And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by. And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me. And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me. And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him: and when he was come near, he asked him, saying, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight. And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee. And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God [b].

us, O Lord, and whatever thou deniest us, deny us not this one thing needful for us, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[b] From the miracle recorded in the latter part of this Gospel we may learn the readiness of Christ to hear the prayers of the afflicted, and the usefulness of having recourse to God by earnest and importunate prayer, uttered in faith, nothing wavering. For as our Saviour said to the blind man, "Thy faith hath saved thee;" so we must have faith and confidence in God if we hope to be heard and to succeed in our petitions. Also from the blind man's praising and glorifying God upon the recovery of his sight, we learn to give praise and thanks unto Him for all the mercies we receive; they all proceed from his bounty, and therefore ought to be owned and received with thankful hearts. Dr. Hole.

With respect to the warning given by our Lord to his disciples in the former part of the Gospel, it may be observed, that, whether we reflect upon the danger these disciples were in, of being oppressed with an affliction so sensible as the death of their Master, and the insults and malice of his and their enemies: this warning was exceeding seasonable and kind, to prepare them for, and sustain them under, so heavy a burden. Or, whether we regard the epidemick error, concerning the Messiah's first appearance and kingdom; these were contrived to rectify their mistakes about this matter. Or, whether we consider the scandal taken at a crucified Lord; it was fit to shew, that his death was voluntary, and so a demonstration of infinite goodness and love: fit, to signify, by its agreement with the prophecies, that this design, and all the strokes of it, were ordered by a wiser head than ours, even the counsel and appointment of God Himself: fit, to represent the shame of our Lord's crucifixion abundantly recompensed by the glories of his resurrection: fit, lastly, to take all possible care of those, to whom so weighty a truth was committed, and upon whose testimony the success of the Christian religion would in great measure depend.

The same warning may bring considerable benefit to every Christian, careful to improve it as he ought, and may do. If he use it as an occasion to silence all impious cavils and scruples, raised by his own curiosity, or suggested by the profaneness of others, to the disparagement of the Christian institution: if he learn hence to value, to admire, this most wise and glorious dispensation, and to adore the condescension and goodness of a suffering Saviour, who was content to undergo so much for wretches so unworthy; if the sight and sense of his indignities and wrongs dispose us to patience and meekness under our own; and, if the consideration of all the insolence and barbarity, all the shame and pain the blessed Jesus underwent, stir us up to an holy indignation and revenge upon our sins, the cause that He was thus exposed, affronted, misused; the traitors, that with such exquisite torture scourged, and nailed, and crucified the body; and with anguish inconceivable, pierced the afflicted soul of the Son of God: if this, I say, provoke our zeal, without remorse, to execute the duties of the approaching season; that is, by abstinence, and mortification, and true repentance, to subdue and kill the old man, and utterly to abolish the whole body of sin: thus shall we now be partakers of his death, thus shall we also be partakers of his resurrection. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

The Tuesday after Quinquagesima Sunday is generally called Shrove-Tuesday; a name given it from the old Saxon words "Shrive, Shrift," or "Shrove," which in that language signifies to "confess;" it being a constant custom amongst the Roman Catholicks to confess their sins on that day, in order to receive the blessed Sacrament, and thereby qualify themselves for a more religious observation of the holy time of Lent immediately ensuing. But this in process of time was turned into a custom of invitations, and their taking leave of flesh and other dainties; and afterwards, by degrees, into sports and merriments, which still in that Church make up the whole business of the Carnival. Wheatly.

And within these few years, in many parts of England, its anniversary was distinguished by riot and drunkenness, by bull-baiting, cock-fighting, and such other diversions as were calculated to promote cruelty, inhumanity, and every thing the most opposite to the virtues which it was the intention of the Church to teach and encourage. Shepherd.

[c] The first day of Lent,] From the very first ages of Christianity, it was customary for the Christians to set apart some time for mortification and self-denial, to prepare themselves for the feast of Easter. Irenæus, who lived but ninety years from the death of St. John, and conversed familiarly with St. Polycarp, as Polycarp had with St. John, has happened to let us know, though incidentally, that, as it was observed in his time, so it was in that of his predecessors.

The Christian Lent probably took its rise from the Jewish preparation for their yearly expiation. The Jews began their solemn humiliation forty days before the expiation. Wherefore the primitive Christians, following their example, set up this fast at the beginning of Christianity, as a proper preparative for the commemoration of the great expiation of the sins of the whole world. Wheatly.

The number of forty days seems to have been fixed in imitation of Moses and Elias in the Old Testament; but principally in imitation of our Saviour's fast in the New Testament, "That," as St. Augustine says, "we might, as far as we are able, conform to Christ's practice, and suffer with Him here, that we may reign with Him hereafter." Bp. Sparrow.

It receives its name from the time of the year wherein it is observed; "Lent," in the old Saxon language, signifying "Spring," being now used to signify this Spring fast, which always begins so that it may end at Easter; to remind us of our Saviour's sufferings, which ended at his resurrection. Wheatly.

In this hallowed season the Church, by the voice of all her holy services, calleth the world to repentance, from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof. And, if ever there was an institution calculated to promote the glory of God, by forwarding the salvation of man, it is this appointment of a certain set time for all persons to consider their ways, to break off their sins, and to return from whence they have fallen through the infirmities of the flesh and the prevalence of temptation. For though most certain it is, that sorrow should be the constant attendant upon sin, and daily transgressions call for daily penitence; yet fatal experience convinces us of another truth, no less certain, that in a body so frail, and a world so corrupt, cares and pleasures soon oppress the heart, and insensibility brings on the slumbers of listlessness and negligence as to its spiritual concerns, which, unless dissipated and dispersed by frequently repeated admonitions, will at length seal it up in the deep sleep of final impenitence.

It was wisely foreseen, that, should the sinner be permitted to reserve to himself the choice of a "convenient season" wherein to turn from sin to righteousness, that "convenient season" would never come; and the specious plea of keeping every day holy alike would often be found to cover a design of keeping none holy at all. It seemed good therefore to the Church to fix a stated time, in which men might enter upon the great work of their repentance. And what time could have been selected with greater propriety than this "Lenten," or spring season, when universal nature, awakening from her wintry sleep, and coming out of a state of deformity, and a course of penance, imposed for the transgression of man, her Lord and Master, is about to rise from the dead; and, putting on her garments of glory and beauty, to give us a kind of prelude to the renovation of all things? So that the whole creation most harmoniously accompanieth the voice of the Church, as that sweetly accordeth to the call of the apostle, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Bp. Horne.

The Church appoints, that all Christians whatsoever should receive the holy communion at Easter, and therefore appoints this time before, to prepare themselves by fasting and prayer; thus judging themselves, that they might not be judged of the Lord. And this is after God's own pattern, who commanded the Israelites to afflict themselves, and eat bitter herbs, before they should eat the Paschal-Lamb. All churches therefore agreed, that Lent should end in Easter, though some difference there was when it should begin. Bp. Sparrow.

[d] — commonly called Ash-Wednesday.] The Church begins her Lent this day to supply the Sundays in Lent; upon which it was not the Church's custom to fast, Sundays being high festivals in memory of our Saviour's joyful resurrection. Now if you take out of the six weeks of Lent, six Sundays, there will remain but thirty-six fasting days; to which, these four of this week being added, make the just number of forty.

This was anciently called "the head of Lent," and was a day of extraordinary humiliation. Upon this day were ashes sprinkled upon their heads, to mind them of their mortality, and also to mind them what they had deserved to be; namely, burnt to ashes. Hence was it called "Ash-Wednesday:" and upon this day they were wont to clothe themselves in sackcloth. These rites are mentioned, Isa. lviii. 5, as the usual rites of penitents. This was common to all penitents: but "notorious sinners were this day put to open penance; which godly discipline," says our Church, in her office of Commination, "it is much to be wished might be restored again." Bp. Sparrow. But till it can be restored, she endeavours to supply the want, by adding to her ordinary service a very proper and suitable office, called "the Commination." Wheatly.

In the ordinary Morning and Evening Service, instead of the Psalms for the day, are appointed six of David's penitential Psalms, (the seventh being used in the office of Commination,) concerning which we need only observe, that they are the very forms wherein that royal prophet expressed his repentance, and were all composed by him in times of affliction, and contain supplications and prayers to be delivered from all temporal and spiritual enemies; and have, for this reason, been very much esteemed in the Church in all ages, and were always thought proper to be used in times of humiliation and repentance. Wheatly.

There is no selection of proper Lessons for this day. The omission has been noticed; but it cannot be satisfactorily accounted for. We must be content to attribute it, either to oversight, or to some other accident or mistake. Shepherd.

The Collect is a prayer for contrition and newness of heart. Agreeably to which both the portion of Scripture for the Epistle, and the Gospel, caution us to be very careful, that, whilst we exhibit the outward signs of sorrow, we be not void of true inward penitence. Wheatly.

For the Epistle. Joel ii. 12.

TURN ye even to me, saith the Lord, with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning. And rend your hearts and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. Who knoweth if he will return, and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the Lord your God? Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts; let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet; let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God[e]?

The Gospel. St. Matth. vi. 16.

WHEN ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also[f]!

The Collect.

O Lord, who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights; Matt. iv. 1, 2.
Give us grace to use such absti-

[e] In explanation of this passage from the Prophet Joel it may be useful to remark, that the Scripture takes notice of private and publick fasts. The one of our own, the other of our governors' appointment. Those humiliations for personal, these for national, calamities and guilt. Of the publick, the Prophet Joel speaks in the Epistle; of the private, our Saviour, in the Gospel for this day. Hence is the seeming difference reconciled, between the solemnity and pomp required by the prophet, and the secrecy enjoined by our Lord. In the publick we are to be spurs and examples to others, and therefore our zeal here, if sincere, will be solemn. For the private, matters are here transacted between God and our own consciences; and when our whole concern should be to recommend ourselves to Him, from whom nothing can be concealed; to affect pomp and solemnity then, is to confess we have some indirect views, and proclaims our zeal to be tricking and insincere. In a word, by the publick, we are prescribed to; so that the testifying our obedience by visible acts there, is no more than our duty. By the private we prescribe to ourselves, and should take heed here of gratifying that most dangerous of all temptations, the pharisaical vanity of voluntary mortification and uncommon merit. Dean Stanhope.

[f] In this Gospel our Saviour instructs us in the right manner of fasting. 1. Negatively: "when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance, for they disfigure their faces, &c.:" where He condemns all hypocritical and mere formal fasting, particularly that of the Pharisees, which they assumed, to shew the seeming strictness and austerity of their religion. 2. He speaks positively of the proper way, "But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, &c." Anointing the head and washing the face were looked upon by the Jews as tokens of joy, and were therefore used at feasts and festivals, but not at fasts, or times of mourning: the Pharisees therefore were strict observers of these outward ceremonies, for they would neither anoint nor wash, that people might see and know when they fasted; though at the same time they had no regard to the inward humiliation of the heart; for which reason our Saviour checked their hypocrisy, and advised his followers not to affect any such outward show and ostentation, but in their fasting to appear in their ordinary guise, that they might not appear to men to fast, but to God only; so that the great lesson here taught us is sincerity; that in this and all other religious duties, we endeavour not so much to recommend ourselves unto men by any outward shows of sadness, as to approve ourselves unto God by the inward sorrow and humility of heart. Dr. Hole.

As to the particular religious exercise mentioned here, there is little necessity to dwell on the precept concerning it, for there are scarce any in these times and in this country who seem disposed to make a show of fasting, or to be ambitious of acquiring a reputation for that kind of religious discipline: on the contrary, it is by great numbers entirely laid aside, and too frequently treated with derision and contempt. Yet from this very passage we may learn, that it ought to be considered in a much more serious light: for although our Saviour did not command his disciples to fast while He was with them, yet He Himself fasted for forty days. He here plainly supposes that his disciples did sometimes fast: and gives them directions how to perform that duty in a manner acceptable to God. And it appears also, that if they did so perform it, if they fasted without any ostentation or parade, with a design not to catch the applause of men, but to approve themselves to God, He assured them, "they should have their reward." Bp. Portens.

[g] The first Sunday in Lent.] The Epistle exhorts to patience in afflictions. The Gospel reads to us Christ's victory over temptations, to keep us from despair of conquest, that we should be of good cheer and heart, since He our Captain "hath overcome the world," John xvi. 33. The Collect for the day is another of those Collects, wherein the Church directs her petitions to Christ, thereby manifesting her belief, that He is the true Son of God; for she prays to none but God. In praying to Him therefore, she professes to believe nence, that, our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey thy godly motions in righteousness and true holiness, to thy honour and glory, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. 2 Cor. vi. 1.

WE then, as workers together with him, beseech you also, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain; (for he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation;) giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed; but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things[h].

The Gospel. St. Matth. iv. 1.

THEN was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungred. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then Jesus saith unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Then the [h] We are taught by the Epistle for this day not to receive the Gospel, which is the grace of God, in vain, but to answer the end, that we may obtain the reward of it. Hence we are bid to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called," that we may not bring dishonour upon our holy profession, and elsewhere, to walk "as becometh the Gospel of Christ," otherwise we shall only bear the name of Christ, to expose and disparage it, which will be not only to receive the grace of God in vain, but to very bad purpose; for if we thus abuse and turn the grace of God into wantonness, we shall turn his favour into fury; and the Gospel of grace, instead of advancing our happiness, will but aggravate our condemnation. 2. From what is here said, we learn, that as God hath his "accepted" times and seasons; when, as He will be heard and ready to succour us; so it will be our duty and wisdom to embrace and lay hold of them. The wise man tells us of some, who have prizes put into their hands, and yet have no hearts to make use of them; whom he therefore styles fools, that afterward, when it is too late, repent of their folly. Our Saviour wept over Jerusalem, and bewailed their folly, for letting slip the time of mercy, and thereby bringing upon themselves inevitable destruction, saying, "Oh that thou hadst known in this thy day, the things that belong unto thy peace! but now are they hid from thine eyes!" Our apostle here tells us, "that the days of the Gospel are the accepted time, and that now is the day of salvation:" which we are therefore to close with and improve to the best advantage; for if we neglect or let it slip, we shall have cause to lament, but must never hope to repair our folly. Lastly, we may learn from hence, patience and perseverance in well-doing, notwithstanding all the difficulties and discouragements we may meet with in it. We see the apostles went through many afflictions and tribulations, without weariness or fainting under them: they still kept on in the way of their duty, and carried an indifferent and equal mind in all the good or bad fortune that befel them; they went through "honour and dishonour, good report and evil report," without being elevated by the one, or depressed by the other. Let us imitate their noble examples by holding out to the end; and then, by following devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him[i].

The Collect.

ALMIGHTY God, who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves; Keep us both outwardly in our bodies, and inwardly in our souls; that we may be defended from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WE beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication; that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God; that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you, and testified. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit[l].

them in the ways of grace here, we shall ere long follow them to glory, which God grant, for the sake of Jesus Christ. Dr. Hole.

[i] One great design of our Lord's temptation seems to have been the encouragement of all good Christians, under the like circumstances. This is the account given of it by St. Paul, "In that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted," Heb. ii. 18. This is the Captain of our salvation, who came to fight our battles; and fit it was, that He should first engage, and try the utmost strength of the enemy of souls: but as He fought, so did He conquer likewise, not for Himself, but for those whose duty it is to fight under Him. And what can be more effectual to animate such, in all their spiritual encounters, than the contemplation of their victorious Leader, thus giving them a sensible proof, that their adversary, fierce and subtle, great and powerful though he be, is not invincible; and conducting them against a foe, already routed shamefully, and forced to quit the field?

2. Another excellent design, for which our Saviour was tempted, is, hereby to convince us of his compassion and readiness to help us. This also is the apostle's inference, "We have not a high-priest, that cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Hab. iv. 15.

3. Another very useful design, served by our Lord's being tempted, is that of instructing us, that not any, even the best and most exalted degree of virtue, sets men above temptation. It is true, what Jesus suffered of this kind was an instance of choice and voluntary condescension; but so was his taking that human nature, which alone could render him capable of suffering it. With us the matter is far otherwise. As we are altogether passive in receiving this nature; so must we be content with the difficulties, to which the condition of it exposes us of course. And such, to be sure, are temptations. And with these two we have reason to be very well contented, because, though they be occasions of vice, yet they are also exercises of virtue; and, as they may become instrumental to our punishment and misery, so they may to our happiness and reward.

4. If in our temptations we follow the example here set us, we may then apply to ourselves the comforts, that followed our Lord's temptation: "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him." This we are told should not fail to be our case too: that if we "resist the devil, he will flee from us;" and if we "draw nigh to God, he will draw nigh to us," James iv. 7, 8. He will, by those "ministering spirits," which are "sent forth to minister unto them who shall be heirs of salvation," Heb. i. 14, protect and guard us from future dangers. He will relieve those wants, by a better and more effectual way, for the supply whereof we would not submit to any lawful courses; reward our better choice with the inexpressibly sweet satisfactions of a good conscience; a peace and joy, which the world and all its pleasures cannot give, which all its afflictions cannot take away; and, at last, through these triumphs begun upon earth, will conduct us to that yet more perfect blessedness, which shall abundantly recompense our toils and sufferings, and crown our constancy with glory immortal in heaven. Dean Stanhope.

[k] The second Sunday in Lent.] The Epistle persuades to temperance and abstinence from all uncleanness: the Gospel tells us how we may subdue our spiritual enemy, assaulting us through the medium of our lusts and appetites; namely, by stedfast faith, and fervent and importunate prayer: which instruction the Church applies to practice in the Collect of the day. Bp. Sparrow, Dean Stanhope.

[l] The apostle's discourse in this place is wholly employed upon the sins of uncleanness: concerning which it is difficult to enlarge, and it may be sufficient therefore to remark, that the "sanctification," required by the apostle, is a virtue extending to mind and body both; and comprehends the prohibition not only of every species of actual uncleanness, but of obscene language, lascivious looks, impure thoughts, immodest behaviour, in short of every thing which has a tendency that way. The less capable this subject is of being conveniently treated by our teachers, the more minute and exact it becomes private persons to be in the examination of their own consciences concerning it. Especially since the apostle hath here used such pressing motives, by saying, that our "sanctification" is the

The Gospel. St. Matth. xv. 21.

JESUS went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. And behold a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil. But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us. But he answered and said, I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me. But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. And she said, Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table. Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour[m].

The Epistle. Ephes. v. 1.

commandment of the Lord Jesus and "the will of God;" that the contrary affections are the scandal of the "Gentiles who know not God;" that Christians are "called, not unto uncleanness, but unto holiness;" and that any of these, who behave themselves unsuitably to that call, draw down vengeance upon their own head, and "despise God, and the Holy Spirit he hath given us." The sum of all which passages may be reduced to this, that sins of uncleanness in particular are a high provocation to Almighty God; that they forfeit the privilege, and defeat the ends of our Christian profession; and reflect upon it the greatest scandal and dishonour. To the casting out of this unclean spirit prayer must contribute. And therefore nothing could be more accommodated to the subject of this Epistle, than the Collect by which it is introduced. Dean Stanhope.

[m] The duty of prayer appears, as from other considerations, so from the necessity of our applying to God for some graces out of our own power. Such in particular is that purity, so earnestly recommended in the epistle for the day. But, in regard, it does not always happen, that our petitions are granted so soon, either as we make them, or as we expect a return to them, nothing could be more proper and methodical than for the Church on this occasion, to encourage our importunity and continuance in prayer. Nothing could more encourage this than so successful an instance of it, as the miracle related in the Gospel now before us. Dean Stanhope.

1. The compellation, with which this woman addresses herself to Christ, is a forcible argument of her faith; "O Lord, thou Son of David." What proselyte, what disciple, could have said more? In this confession of the Syrophœnician we have an abstract of divinity. What can we Christians confess more, than the deity, and the humanity, and the Messiahship, of our glorious Saviour? his deity, as Lord; his humanity, as a Son; his Messiahship, as the Son of David? Bp. Hall.

2. From our Saviour's answering this woman of Canaan "not a word," and shewing little or no regard to her first suit, we may learn not to be discouraged, if our prayers are not always presently answered. He would not grant her request immediately, because He chose to try her faith, and to heighten her importunity. God Almighty hath many very wise and weighty reasons for denying or delaying the grant of our petitions: and if we look into ourselves, when our petitions are not granted, we shall probably find that the cause is to be found in the want of some qualification on our part.

3. From our Saviour's granting her request at last, we may learn the efficacy and sure success of fervent and persevering prayer. "The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous (saith St. James) availeth much," James v. 16; it conquers all difficulties and surmounts all opposition. But then it must be accompanied with faith, and a firm persuasion of the power and goodness of Him whom we address; so St. James adds, "Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavers is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed: let not that man think that he shall receive any thing at the hands of God," James i. 6. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways, and consequently unsuccessful in all his petitions. If then we would obtain our requests, we must, with this woman of Canaan, "continue instant in prayer, watching thereunto with all perseverance." We must never give out through weariness, nor cease asking till we receive, and be daily lifting pure hearts and hands without wrath and doubting; and then we shall not, in God's due time, miss of an answer, nor want what is convenient to us. Dr. Hole.

[n] The third Sunday in Lent.] The Collect beseeches Almighty God for favour and protection. To which end the Epistle exhorts us to pursue the things that are good, and then we shall be protected from all evil: according to that saying of St. Peter, "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" The Gospel recommends perseverance in well-doing, and shews the danger of relapsing: "for the end of that man is worse than the beginning." Dr. Hole, Bp. Sparrow.

tion, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named amongst you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish-talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks: for this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them: for ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light: (for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth;) proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them: for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light. Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light[o].

The Gospel. St. Luke xi. 14.

JESUS was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered. But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub, the chief of the devils. And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven. But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say, that I cast out devils through Beelzebub. And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges. But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth. When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in, and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. And [o] From the Epistle of this day the duties which arise are these: 1. That we henceforth become, if we are not already, "followers of God, as dear children," and especially in the divine grace of love, of which He hath set us the most noble and most unparalleled pattern. 2. That we forsake all things that are offensive and displeasing to Him; especially all uncleanness, and the other works of darkness, which are made manifest and reproved by the light. 3. That we henceforth "walk as children of the light," doing and delighting only in things that can bear it; that the light of the Gospel, which was given us for our salvation, prove not at last our greater condemnation. 4. That we awake out of that lethargy or sleep, which sin and security hath lulled too many into; that we be not deluded by dreams or imposed upon by the false shews and appearances of this world, but open our eyes in time to see and seek for better things. Lastly, that we rise from the death of sin, to a life of righteousness, and that will bring us ere long to life everlasting. To which God of his infinite mercy bring us all for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen. Dr. Hole.

If the state of the sinner, or the man of the world, be, as the Scripture saith it is, one of darkness, insensibility, and delusion; and if such a state be not thought preferable to one of light, and sense, and substantial reality; let no man be disobedient to the voice of the Church, which, through the course of this penitential season, incessantly addresseth every one of her children, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Awakened by these repeated calls, be it our care to arise without delay to newness of life. Let us be constantly employed in some good work; reading, or praying, or performing some other work of piety to God, or charity to our neighbour. Let us beware that surfeiting and excess do not oppress and weigh down the heart, inducing sleep upon the soul, as well as the body. Let us be temperate, let us be sober, walking evermore as children of the light. Thus shall we be qualified to keep that constant watch, which is absolutely necessary to perceive and repel the enemy, at his first approach: "What I say unto you," saith Christ to his disciples, "I say unto all, Watch." Bp. Horne.

it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lift up her voice, and said unto him, Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked. But he said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the Word of God, and keep it[p].

Ezra ix. 13. to be punished, by the comfort of thy grace may mercifully be relieved;
Joel ii. 13. through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Epistle. Gal. iv. 21.

TELL me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond-maid, the other by a free-woman. But he who was of the bond-woman was born after the flesh; but he of the free-woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free; which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now. Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free[r].

[p] This Gospel may instruct us in several useful and important lessons.

1. From Christ's dispossessing the devil, we may be abundantly satisfied of the divinity of his power; for no power, less than divine, was able to dethrone that prince of darkness, and destroy that usurped dominion, which he exercised over the bodies and souls of men. 2. From Christ's arguing against the Pharisees and others, who ascribed his casting out of devils to Beelzebub the prince of the devils; we may learn to beware of all such perverse interpretations of Christ's miracles; for this is that unpardonable sin or blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which our Saviour tells us shall not be forgiven in this world, nor in that which is to come: not for want of mercy and goodness enough in God, but for want of a capacity in the subject, who maliciously resists the way and method of obtaining pardon, which is only by faith in Christ, wrought in us by the Holy Ghost, whose works he opposes, and whose miracles he despiseth. 3. From Christ's power over the devil, we may learn, not to fear his assaults, nor yield to his temptations, but to resist him, stedfast in the faith, for he is only a vanquished foe, whose power is broken. 4. From the unclean spirit going out, and coming again with greater violence, we may learn, if we have gained any point upon Satan, or any of his temptations, not to neglect our watch, but still to be upon our guard against him; for he is ever looking for an opportunity of returning upon us, and though he may find his former seat "swept" from some filth, and "garnished" with some outward shews, yet, if we are not aware of him, he will "come again, and bring seven spirits, more wicked than himself, to enter in and dwell there;" and so render matters worse than they were before.

The last inference to be drawn from this Gospel, wherein our Saviour pronounces those "blessed" above all other persons "that hear the word of God and keep it," is, to exhort us to the due observation of both. Hearing is indeed the great instrument of knowledge and instruction; but it is not all hearing that is sufficient to this end; we must be "doers of the word, and not hearers only," otherwise we shall but deceive our own souls. In a word then, if we will build for eternity, and lay a good foundation for the time to come, we must receive the word into our hearts, lay it up in our memories, and cause it to bring forth fruit in the course of our conversation, and then we shall be sure in the end to reap everlasting life, for the merits of Christ Jesus, our Lord. Dr. Hole.

[q] The fourth Sunday in Lent.] In the Collect for the day we acknowledge, that we deserve punishment for our evil deeds; but beseech Almighty God mercifully to relieve us by the comfort of his grace, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Accordingly the Epistle for the day shews the relief we receive by Him in our souls by a freedom from the yoke of the Mosaick law. And the Gospel shews the relief, that mankind found by Him in their bodies, by the healing of their distempers and the supply of their necessities. Dr. Hole.

This is generally called with us Midlent-Sunday: it is sometimes called "the Sunday of refection," or "refreshment," probably because the Gospel treats of our Saviour's miracle in feeding the five thousand. Bp. Sparrow, Wheotly.

[r] From the difference illustrated here between the legal and the evangelical covenants, men may be seasonably exhorted to consider the dignity and privilege of their high calling; and to serve God upon principles and with a disposition of mind, worthy of the near and honourable relation which they bear to Him. At the same time we must take good heed not to pervert the

The Gospel. St. John vi. 1.

JESUS went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias. And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased. And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples. And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh. When Jesus then lift up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? (And this he said to prove him; for he himself knew what he would do.) Philip answered him, Two hundred peny-worth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many? And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand. And Jesus took the loaves, and when he had given thanks he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would. When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten. Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world[s].

arguments urged by St. Paul against the works of the law, to the prejudice or disparagement of good works in general. The former are only such works as made up the ceremonial law; and those are abolished by the death of Christ, and the promulgation of his Gospel. The latter neither began with, nor expired with, that law, but are moral duties of eternal obligation. To say, we are not justified by the works of either sort, but by faith only, implies, that God forgives our past sins, and admits us into covenant, without any such previous considerations. But to say, that men may be saved without good works, infers, that they are not bound to do any such, after their admission into that covenant. And this contradicts the whole strain, and evacuates all the precepts, of the Gospel. So wide a distance is there between justification in St. Paul's sense; and salvation, or that final justification, which is peculiar to the day of judgment.

Let us therefore, as this apostle elsewhere advises, learn to "maintain good works," and to "adorn our profession" by them, Tit. iii. 8; ii. 10. For this is to answer the character of our son-ship; to be followers of our Father, which is in heaven; and to promote the true end of this holy season. But let all this be done with profound humility, and many mortifying remembrances of our own frailties; and, even in our best estate, and most exalted devotions, let us approach the throne of grace with a modesty, of which our Church, in the Collect for this day, hath set us a pattern: beseeching of God, that "we, who for our evil deeds do worthily deserve to be punished, by the comfort of his grace may mercifully be relieved, through Jesus Christ, our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[s] In this recital we may doubt whether more to wonder at the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving. Here were a whole host of guests, five thousand men; and in all likelihood, no fewer women and children. Perhaps, some of these only looked on: nay, "they did all eat." Perhaps, every man a crumb, or a bit: nay, they did eat to satiety; "all were satisfied." So many must needs make clean work; of so little there could be left nothing: yea, there were "fragments" remaining. Perhaps some crumbs or crusts, hardly to be discerned, much less gathered: nay, "twelve baskets full:" more remained than was first set down. Had they eaten nothing, it was a just miracle, that so much should be left; had nothing remained, it was no less miracle, that so many had eaten, and so many satisfied; but now, that so many bellies and so many baskets were filled, the miracle was doubled. O work of a boundless omnipotency! Bp. Hall.

From this narrative there result the three following practical reflections:

1. From our Lord's behaviour, before the distribution of the loaves, called by the evangelists "blessing and giving thanks," we may be instructed at our meals to render our acknowledgments to God for his liberality, and to beg that it may be sanctified to us by tending to promote all the good purposes of his bounty. Of this practice we have several instances in our Saviour's conduct, as well as in that of St. Paul, Acts xxvii. 35. And what can be better contrived, to keep up a constant awe and reverence of God in our minds, when accustomed to call upon his name at every supply of our natural necessities? What can more effectually humble us, with a just sense of our precarious and depending condition? What more dispose men to use his gifts moderately, to entertain them thankfully, to be content with their portion, if it be little; to impart of their abundance, if it be much; to compassionate those who want the same comforts, to recollect that they are stewards; and that their orders are to "give freely of what they have received freely?" What, lastly, can be more likely to sanctify, to enlarge, and multiply our blessings, than so decent, so publick, so devout, so humble, a testimony of our great Benefactor's goodness?

2. This feeling of so vast a multitude, by a method altogether extraordinary and miraculous, should be used, as a seasonable hint, for the consideration of, and thanks due for, that bounteous providence of God, which every day feeds numbers infinitely greater, in a very wonderful though ordinary manner. For, what proportion do five thousand men bear to those numberless kindreds and countries, that constantly subsist upon his liberality? What is this one marvellous en-

The Epistle. Heb. ix. 11.

CHRIST being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands; that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves; but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance[u].

largement of five loaves and two fishes, to the unconceivable productions of animals, the variety of plants and herbs, and other increase of the earth, and the many unknown ways, by which "he opens his hand, and fills all things living with plenteousness?"

3. We may remark our blessed Master's care, that the fragments remaining might be gathered up, and put into baskets; for which, no doubt, this had been a sufficient reason, that those might prove both the reality of the miracle, and the exceeding greatness of the increase. But, in regard our Lord assigns another, when saying, "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost;" the proper use, I think, of this head is, thence to form a direction, how to manage our substance to the best advantage; and so to approve ourselves charitable and kind, as at the same time not to be profuse and indiscreet. Jesus, it is true, by setting his whole store before the multitude, hath left us a pattern of beneficence and largeness of heart. The provisions, growing so prodigiously upon his hands, are an emblem and intimation of those unaccountable accessions, which we may sometimes observe, to the fortunes of generous and merciful persons: and, by some passages of Scripture, an unwary reader might be led to think, that in those actions there could be no excess, at least no possibility of offending by such excess: but yet the same Jesus would not, that even "fragments" should be lost. And herein He hath shewed, that all reserving for the future is not unlawful; that charity is very consistent with frugality; indeed not only that they may, but should, go together. For God will be sure to make a mighty difference between the virtue, and the specious extreme beyond it; between the liberal, and the lavish man. Dean Stanhope.

[t] The fifth Sunday in Lent.] This is called Passion Sunday: for now begins the commemoration of the passion of our Lord. The Epistle treats of the passion; the Gospel, of our Lord's being slandered by the bold malice of the Jews, who call Him Samaritan, and tell Him He hath a devil, which must needs be a part of his passion. Bp. Sparrow.

As the death of our blessed Saviour is the spring from whence all our hopes and confidences of happiness and mercy flow; and as the end of his sufferings is the benefit of wretched man; so the manner of those sufferings is likewise adapted to our good. And, if within these it be fit to comprehend, not the last black scene only, but those many antecedent passages of his life, in which He "endured the contradiction of sinners against himself;" the Gospel for this day may well deserve a place in our Liturgy. Thus the Church rises very gradually; in the historical part, from opprobrious language, and a malicious but vain attempt upon his sacred life, to that violence, which was permitted to take effect; in the instructive part, from a pattern of reproached and spited innocence, to one of faithfulness to the very death, and "resisting even unto blood" when God and duty call. This I conceive the great design of, this the proper method for, improving that Scripture read in our ears this day. Dean Stanhope.

[u] From Christ's being the Mediator of the New Testament let us learn to address Him as such, and cast ourselves upon his mediation; for He hath made an all-sufficient atonement, and obtained eternal redemption for us; so that "whatever we ask the Father in his name he will give it us:" for He hath merited for us the grant of our petitions: the incense of his merits and intercession give value to our prayers, and render them an offering of a sweet-smelling savour. Hence we find the Psalmist praying, that "his prayers might ascend as incense, and the lifting up of his hands as an evening sacrifice," Ps. cxli. 2. Accordingly our Church teaches us to conclude all our prayers with the merits and mediation of Christ, which alone can give them all their acceptance; and for that reason, saith the apostle, "Christ is entered into the holy place not made with hands, that is, into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us," Heb. ix. 24.

2. We learn hence not to set up any other mediators than God hath appointed, nor unwarrantably join any co-partners with Him; for there is but one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus: and therefore let us not join the Virgin Mary or any other saint or angel with Him. His merits alone are sufficient, and need none to be joined with Him. This way we may have free access, and come with boldness to the throne of grace; but we affront God and disparage our Mediator, if we go to Him any other way.

And therefore, lastly, to obtain the benefit of Christ's mediation, let us learn to fulfil the conditions of the new covenant, of which He is Mediator; that is, let us repent and believe the Gospel, without which all, that He hath done or said for us, will be of no avail: for God cannot be at peace with us, till we lay down our arms, and submit to Him. If we regard iniquity in our hearts, He will not hear our prayers; neither will any intercession prevail, while we retain our sin. Let us then do our part, by repenting and turning from

The Gospel. St. John viii. 46.

JESUS said, Which of you convinceth me of sin? and if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me? He that is of God heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God. Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well, that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil? Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me. And I seek not mine own glory; there is one that seeketh and judgeth. Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death. Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a devil: Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death. Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself? Jesus answered, If I honour myself, my honour is nothing; it is my Father that honoureth me, of whom ye say, that he is your God: yet ye have not known him; but I know him: and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you; but I know him, and keep his saying. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad. Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am. Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple[x].

our evil ways; and then God will not be wanting on his part to give us grace here, and glory hereafter. Dr. Hole.

[x] Amongst the useful meditations suggested by the Gospel of the day, none appear more worthy of notice than the following:

1. From Abraham's "seeing Christ's day, and rejoicing" at it at so great a distance; we may learn to double our joy, and to rejoice much more at a nearer view of Him. He saw Him only "through a glass darkly, but we face to face;" he beheld Him only in the promise, but we in the performance; his face was veiled with types and shadows under the Law, which gave a very imperfect and obscure representation of Him, but this veil is now taken off under the Gospel, and we behold Him with open face: for He became flesh and dwelt among us, and the glory of this divinity shone through the mantle of his humanity.

2. From Christ's affirming Himself to be before Abraham, let us learn to acknowledge and adore his divinity, who had a being before all time, and gave a being to all things in it. Dr. Hole.

3. From this passage, we may be certainly assured, that the sufferings and death of Christ were his own free voluntary act. The same divine, unseen force, which held the hands of the men of Nazareth, when they intended to cast Him headlong down the brow of their hill; the same which evaded the Jews' present design to stone Him; was ever ready, ever able, to produce the same wonderful effects. We know it was so in the garden particularly: and the casting of those down to the ground, who then came to apprehend Him, ought to have made them understand, that, if He had not thought fit to check and withdraw it, neither their numbers, nor their weapons, could have prevailed to his prejudice. This should inflame our love and our gratitude, that the many bitter things our Lord endured for our sakes, were not upon constraint, but choice; that He so signally proved the truth of those his own words: "No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself;" that He was barbarously treated, and ignominiously murdered, because He would be so; and the "will of God was fulfilled" in this point only, because He was "content" and well pleased "to do it." What remains then, but that, as this holy season requires, we meditate on this dying Redeemer with wonder: that we present his willing passion to our souls, in all those moving circumstances it is capable of: that we think nothing too much for Him, who was so liberal of ease, of reputation, of life for us: that we not only adore but imitate that great example, who, when "he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to God, that judgeth righteously," 1 Pet. ii. 23: that we make not wrongs of any sort, mutual, but account it our generosity, our duty, to suffer ourselves to be out-done, in this only instance of evil doing; so observing the apostle's command, not to "render evil for evil, nor railing for railing, but contrariwise, blessing, knowing that we are hereunto called, that we might inherit a blessing," 1 Pet. iii. 9. Dean Stanhope.

[y] The Sunday next before Easter.] This week, immediately preceding the feast of Easter, is more especially designed to fit us for that great solemnity; and, to that end, is to be spent in more than ordinary piety and devotion. It was anciently called, sometimes the Great Week, sometimes the Holy Week, because it hath a larger service than any other week; every day having a second service appointed for it, in which are rehearsed at large the sufferings of Christ, as they are described by the four evangelists; that by hearing and reading the history of his passion, we may be better prepared for the mystery of his resurrection: that, by his rising from the dead, we may be quickened to newness of life. This day, which begins this holy week, is called by the name of Palm-Sunday, being the day on which our Saviour entered Jerusalem, with great joy; some spreading their garments, others cutting down branches of

The Epistle. Phil. ii. 5.

LET this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a Name which is above every name; that at the Name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father[z].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxvii. 1.

WHEN the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death. And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governour. Then Judas who had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is palm, carrying them in their hands, and strewing them in the way, which hath been remembered with great solemnity. Dr. Hole.

In the missals this Sunday is called Palm-Sunday; and in many parts of England it still retains its ancient name. On this day, till the era of the Reformation, the people in solemn procession carried in their hands palms, or branches of some other tree, in commemoration of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem five days before his death. The palms were then placed on the altar by the clerks, before the time of the celebration of the Eucharist: and numerous benedictory Collects were pronounced over them by the priest. Shepherd.

The Collect for the day puts us in mind of the tender love of God towards mankind, in sending his Son, not only to take upon Him our flesh, but to suffer in it the death of the cross for our sins; to the intent, "that all mankind should follow the example of his great humility;" and thence teaches us to pray, "that we may both follow the example of his patience, and also be made partakers of his resurrection."

The Epistle for the day presents us to this purpose with the highest and best pattern for our imitation, even the Son of God, who hath done and suffered all these great things for us.

This Gospel, with the rest that follow on each day of this holy week, gives us an ample account of the death and passion of our blessed Saviour, together with the many circumstances that went before, and came after it. Dr. Hole.

[z] The good effects, which our Church proposes to herself from this portion of Scripture, we plainly learn, from the Collect for the day, to be humility and patience. The former is to be expressed by thinking no good office beneath us, whereby we may contribute to the relief of our brethren in their sufferings; the latter, by contentedness and constancy of mind, in submitting to our own. In order to excite and establish these good dispositions in us, the Son of God, and Saviour of the world, is here set forth as our pattern. His love and condescension, for our example; that we, so far as the difference of circumstances will allow, may not grudge to do, as He hath done before us. His exaltation and reward is also mentioned, for our encouragement; that we may depend upon the like being done to us in proportion, which hath already been done to Him, by way of recompense for such kind humiliation.

Great indeed is at once the necessity, and the encouragement we all have, to imitate the virtues, for which our Lord was so conspicuous: the necessity, because nothing less than a likeness to his excellencies can advance us to a likeness of that bliss, which rewarded them: the encouragement, because He is entered into heaven, not for Himself, but us; the pledge of our immortality, and glory, by our nature being already immortalized and glorified. Let us not then think any thing too much to do, or endure for our duty, and the good of souls; since where the "sufferings of Christ abound, his consolations will much more abound." Let us read, and hear, and meditate on, the Scriptures commended to our thoughts this week, with minds disposed to form themselves upon the model here before us. Let us carefully observe the interest we have in them; and rest perfectly satisfied, that, by virtue of that union, which He in great humility hath been pleased to make, the sufferings and the rewards of Christ's human nature so far belong to us, and all mankind; that all, "who follow the example of his patience, shall" undoubtedly "be partakers of his resurrection." Which He, of his infinite mercy, grant, "who was dead and is alive again, and liveth for evermore, and hath the keys of death and hell," Rev. i. 18. To whom with the Father and Holy Spirit, three persons and one God, be all honour and glory, power, praise, and dominion, world without end. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day. (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value, and gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.) And Jesus stood before the governour; and the governour asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest. And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing. Then saith Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee? And he answered him to never a word, insomuch that the governour marvelled greatly. Now at that feast the governour was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would. And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ? For he knew that for envy they had delivered him. When he was set down on the judgement-seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him. But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus. The governour answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas. Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified. And the governour said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified. When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it. Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children. Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus he delivered him to be crucified. Then the soldiers of the governour took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers. And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe. And when they had platted a crown of thorns they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews. And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head. And after that they had mocked him they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him. And as they came out they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name; him they compelled to bear his cross. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a scull, they gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink. And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled, which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots. And sitting down they watched him there; and set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS. Then were there two thieves crucified with him; one on the right hand, and another on the left. And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself: if thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others, himself he cannot save: if he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God. The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth. Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour. And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias. And straightway one of them ran, and took a spunge and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink. The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him. Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost. And behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened, and many bodies of saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God[a].

For the Epistle. Isaiah lxiii. 1.

WHO is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments

[a] Amongst the various lessons to be drawn from this day's Gospel, a very important one regards the account given of Judas. From this we may learn,

1. To consider the mighty danger and dismal consequences of known and wilful sins, before it be too late to prevent or remedy them. The example of Judas may be serviceable in teaching us, that no consideration can be sufficient for the commission of a deliberate sin. And we may profit greatly by those fruitless pangs of remorse, which God rejected, when He had been first rejected by the wilful obstinacy of Judas; if we will let the contemplation of them work in us a dread of that justice and indignation, which will not always be intreated, if we outstand the season of grace.

2. This instance should be a discouragement, as against all temptations and deliberate offences in general, so more especially against covetousness. It is not for nothing that our Lord hath given us that very solemn warning, "Take heed and beware of covetousness," Luke xii. 15. He knows how apt this vice is, above all others, to get within us; and how powerful to overthrow all regard for God and religion. And certainly it ought to add no small weight to this and other testimonies in Scripture, that the most detestable villany, which was ever thought of under the sun, was owing to the force of this temptation: that the only instance of a despairing sinner, left upon record in the New Testament, is that of a treacherous and greedy Judas.

3. The example of Judas instructs us, what false measures those men go upon, who measure the truth and efficacy of their repentance by the inward agonies and sufferings of their own minds. As if God could never bring a sinner to heaven any other way, than by leading him through the regions of hell. It is true indeed, no man repents truly without a very serious and afflicting concern for having offended. But, then, this must be an active and a fruitful sorrow, such as produces a just displeasure against ourselves, an irreconcileable hatred of sin, vigorous resolutions, and a watchful care to avoid it for the future. And it is not a slight and superficial sorrow that will suffice for these purposes. But, be the degree of smart more or less, whatsoever worketh repentance (that is, effectually changes our spirit and behaviour) is, without doubt, a "godly sorrow," and great and painful enough. Let us then try our sorrow by these marks, and judge of the degree by the effects; for this rule can never deceive us. But to measure its efficacy by the degree is a very preposterous method, and liable to many great and fatal mistakes. For no remorse is so afflicting as that which shuts men out from all comfort: and yet this remorse is, of all other, the most fruitless, and the farthest off from true repentance. There may be, and there often is, great danger in the very degree of our sorrow. For, if this degenerate into astonishment and perplexity of heart, into the darkness of horror and confusion, into distrust of mercy through Christ, and a persuasion that our sin is greater than can ever be forgiven; it is as displeasing to God, and as destructive to repentance, as it is tormenting and uncomfortable to the patient's own self. So that, where these terrors are not the effect of disease, and a melancholy constitution, (as very often they are,) they ought to be looked upon as a fresh aggravation of the fault. For this reason God promises to heal the "broken in heart," to pour balm into these spiritual wounds, by reviving hopes and seasonable consolations, and the supporting sense of his favour and readiness to be reconciled, and the cheering prospect of an everlasting bliss, which shall wipe away all tears from the eyes of these pious mourners. And, upon the same account, St. Paul commands the Corinthians, "to forgive and restore the incestuous person," whom they had cast out of the Church, "lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with over-much sorrow." In a word, God values men's reformation more than their sighs and tears. Indeed, He values these only so far as they contribute to that; and those men are sorry as they ought, who are so sorry as to sin no more. Let no man, therefore, distract himself with vain and fantastical notions in this matter; but let us every one now so lament our past offences as to forsake and amend them. And "blessed are all they who" thus "mourn; for they shall" not fail to "be comforted." Dean Stanhope.

[b] Monday before Easter.] The portion of Scripture appointed for the Epistle of this day consists of three parts: 1. The prophet describes a victorious deliverer returning from the slaughter of his own and God's enemies. 2. He breaks out into praise for all the wonderful mercies bestowed on his Church and people. 3. In the name of that people he earnestly applies to God in devout prayer. In the first of these parts, which seems chiefly to call for our meditation, the pro-from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me. And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth. I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness towards the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses. For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love, and in his pity, he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old. But they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them. Then he remembered the days of old, Moses and his people, saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his Holy Spirit within him? that led them by the right hand of Moses, with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting Name? that led them through the deep as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble? As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest; so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious Name. Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness, and of thy glory: where is thy zeal, and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercies towards me? Are they restrained? Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, thy name is from everlasting. O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways? and hardened our hearts from thy fear? Return for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance. The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary. We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; they were not called by thy Name[c].

phet introduces some person wondering at a surprising object which then presented itself. The matter of this wonder is a Conqueror returning bloody from battle: of whom the following account is given by way of dialogue, and in answer to the questions, Who he is? and, Why so habited? That a mighty victory had been obtained, at the expense of much blood and slaughter, by the powerful, but single, arm of this mighty Warrior: that, by this victory, a total rout was given to his adversaries at a time, when, if He had not engaged, no other was disposed, no other able, to have quelled the outrage and havock they were making: and that the stained garments He then wore demonstrated the sharpness of the engagement; as his mien, and manner of approach, denoted the invincible greatness of his strength.

By this description there cannot, I conceive, be any reasonable doubt whether we be not now invited to contemplate the hardships, and the success, of that combat with the enemies of our souls, by which Christ brought salvation to mankind. For such was his conquest of sin, and death; when He wrested the prey out of the hands of Satan, and as the apostle expresses it, "spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in his cross." Dean Stanhope.

[c] The proper use to be made of this portion of holy Scripture is, to be encouraged thereby, to give with all humility and thankfulness to our great Redeemer the whole glory of this noble achievement: acknowledging all our happiness, and all our hopes, to be the effect, not of our own, not of any others', but intirely due to his, invaluable merits. Let us, like the prophet here, when publishing his kindness, and reflecting, as at this time particularly we are bound to do, how dear it hath cost Him; not forget at the same time, to lament those sins of ours, which added to his account. For, if Isaiah found it reasonable, in terms so affectionate, to magnify his people's deliverance out of Egypt, and settlement in the promised land, how insensible, how unworthy are they, who read and hear the release from a heavier tyranny, the destruction of a spiritual Pharaoh, the passage into the true and heavenly Canaan opened, at

The Gospel. St. Mark xiv. 1.

AFTER two days was the feast of the Passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people. And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? for it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor: and they murmured against her. And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me: for ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good; but me ye have not always. She hath done what she could; she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests to betray him unto them. And when they heard it they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him. And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water; follow him: And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good-man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he will shew you a large upper-room furnished, and prepared: there make ready for us. And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they sat, and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve that dippeth with me in the dish. The Son of Man indeed goeth, as the expense of our Leader's own life, without impressions, as grateful as human hearts can admit? If the prophet confess, that after all those extraordinary appearances of Almighty God in their behalf, his people's disingenuous behaviour turned him to be their enemy; how greatly ought we to fear, how carefully to avoid, any unworthy returns, to one who hath loved us so tenderly, which may justly alienate his affection from us, and be at once our eternal ruin and reproach? If he again thought the former favours of God, and the remembrance of his covenant, proper inducements to incline his mercy; with what confidence may we be allowed to approach Him, in the anguish of our souls, in distresses and temptations, when we plead his Son's name and merits for acceptance, and depend upon the goodness, which hath not only done, but endured, so much for our sakes, for all proper succours and comforts? It is true, our difficulties are many, our enemies mighty, ourselves impotent to the last degree. But, let it be remembered, for our support, that more are they that are with us, than all that are or can be against us: that the heat of the action is over, and we march against a force already discomfited. He that is "mighty to save," He that hath "trodden the wine-press of his Father's wrath alone," hath "broken them in his anger," and "trampled them in his fury," Rev. xix. 15. And all the representations of his bitter sufferings, which we are now especially conversant with, are not only so many intimations, how much this conquest stood Him in; but certain evidences withal that the bloody field is won. And all the prayers and tears, the fastings and mournings, that now humble our souls, and exercise our bodies, are not the proper and efficient causes of this conquest, but the instruments of applying and securing it to us. They are acts of repentance and obedience, which hope to be accepted in "the Beloved;" not in any virtue of their own, abstracted from Him: decent expressions of gratitude and love, to a Saviour, so liberal of Himself for our salvation. Thus we may die after his example, die to the sins which pierced his soul to death; and rising again to righteousness, conquer, as He hath done; conquer our vicious appetites effectually, and trample down every unruly passion. So shall we be qualified to attend, to bear a part in, his triumphs; and, in the midst of our religious sympathies, when melting away in sorrow for his agonies and death, have a right to sustain our spirits, with the prospect of a part in the glories of his resurrection. Dean Stanhope.

it is written of him: but wo to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed: good were it for that man if he had never been born. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives. And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. But, after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee. But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I. And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy, and saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death; tarry ye here, and watch. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed, that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt. And he cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation: the spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak. And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. And when he returned he found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer him. And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand. And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders. And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; take him, and lead him away safely. And as soon as he was come he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master; and kissed him. And they laid their hands on him, and took him. And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear. And Jesus answered, and said unto them, Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves, to take me? I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but the Scriptures must be fulfilled. And they all forsook him, and fled. And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body: and the young men laid hold on him: and he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked. And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes. And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest; and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire. And the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none. For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together. And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying, We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands. But neither so did their witness agree together. And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee? But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses? ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? and they all condemned him to be guilty of death. And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophesy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands. And as Peter was beneath in the palace there cometh one of the maids of the high priest; and when she saw Peter warming himself she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak. And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept[d].

For the Epistle. Isaiah l. 5.

THE Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not re[d] The infirmity of St. Peter, recorded in this day's Gospel, may be made the subject of much profitable reflexion.

1. This example may effectually convince us, how frail even the best are, how little masters of their own passions, how unfit to undertake for themselves, even when their desires of doing well are most fervent, and their resolutions most sincere. In short, how vain all confidences in our own strength and virtue must needs be, which, by tempting us to imagine we are something, provoke God to withdraw that grace, (the necessity whereof we do not then sufficiently apprehend,) and so by woeful experience make us feel, that in truth we are nothing.

2. This fall of St. Peter, however, as it ought to be applied for a necessary mortification of our vanity; so may it likewise serve us, for a support under our frailties and temptations. But then this is a comfort, which can be regularly administered to none, except to them who are careful to be like him in that repentance, whereof we have also an account in the Scripture now under consideration: for, as his fault was sudden and surprising, so was his recovery speedy and effectual. Long it was not, before he was awakened into recollection, by a pitying look of his injured Master, and the crowing of the cock. Immediately upon the reflexion he forsook the guilty scene of his foul offence, sought a convenient place for retired thoughts, melted away in tears for the horror of his crime, and from henceforward became again the same faithful, affectionate, undaunted St. Peter, he had been before. The book of Acts informs us at large, what noble reparation he afterwards made, for this breach of faith: how vigorous and bold he was in preaching, how forward and even joyful in suffering for, the Gospel of his once denied Lord. And the same Jesus, who foretold by what means he should offend, did shortly after let him understand, by "what death he should glorify God," John xxi. 19. Now all these are testimonies of greater value, because they were the long and constant practice of a settled faith, the course of many years, the habit and the sense of the man: whereas his crime, though exceeding great, was however of short continuance; the effect of fear and infirmity in great measure; and not so much the act of the man, as the violence of passions and temptations, which had then almost unmanned him.

The same methods must we be sure to follow, when it shall please God to suffer any grievous temptation to overtake us. We must, upon the first sense of our fault, burst through, and break our snare: afflict our souls with a sorrow, that may carry some proportion to the sad occasion of it; not tarry a moment in the way of temptation: never look back upon our misdemeanors, without a just abhorrence; and, above all, use our utmost diligence to bring honour to virtue and religion, by our future practice. It is true, indeed, we cannot do all, or any part of this, without the assistance of divine grace. It is that alone can "strengthen them that stand," it is that alone must "raise up them that fall." But the same Jesus, who "turned and looked upon Peter," Luke xxii. 61, and brought him back to himself, will not leave us to perish in our folly; but will find out some happy, some awakening dispensation. And provided we be as careful as Peter was, to observe, to strike in with, to improve it, will convert even our temptations and past sins, to his glory, and our own profit. The same powerful intercessor prays for every sincere, though feeble servant, that "his faith fail not." But they, that are sincere, should remember they are feeble too; and not, with this apostle, sleep in the hour of danger; but watch and pray: watch constantly, bellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting. For the Lord God will help me, therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? Let us stand together; who is mine adversary? let him come near to me. Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? Lo, they all shall wax old as a garment: the moth shall eat them up. Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the Name of the Lord, and stay upon his God. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks; walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand, ye shall lie down in sorrow[f].

The Gospel. St. Mark xv. 1.

AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders, and scribes, and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate. And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it. And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing. And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee. But Jesus yet pray fervently, that they enter not into "temptation." As knowing by this example, and feeling by their own experience, that the "willingness of the spirit" is not preservative sufficient against the "weakness of the flesh." Dean Stanhope.

[e] Tuesday before Easter.] This portion of Scripture contains so exact a description of the barbarous indignities our blessed Saviour suffered, and of his meek deportment under them, as looks more like an historical narration of facts already past, than a prediction of events then several hundred years to come. Had Isaiah been present at the high priest's palace and the judgment-hall, what fuller representation could he, what indeed do the evangelists themselves, give, more punctual, than that which the Holy Ghost hath here inspired him with? They, who attend to the connexion of this, with the chapter next before, will see reason sufficient to conclude, that the prophet, in both, personates the Messiah. And they who compare the account here, with that of our Lord's passion in the New Testament, must be utterly blind, or extremely perverse, if they can any longer suffer themselves to doubt, whether Jesus of Nazareth were that Messiah. This prophecy therefore is very well joined with the Gospel of the day, as partly introductory, and partly parallel, to it. The affronts and injuries committed upon our blessed Saviour, at the palace of the high priest, make the subject of this Epistle; which leads Him, as it were, from the garden, through all the painful steps of rudeness and violence, insult, and scorn, and reproach, till it sets Him at Pilate's bar: there the Gospel takes Him up, and carries Him on to crucifixion and death. So that both together proceed in a regular method, and make one continued relation. Dean Stanhope.

[f] The compilers of our Liturgy, in selecting this portion of Scripture for our present consideration, had a view chiefly to the description it contains of the sufferings of Messiah, of which we read the literal fulfilment in the several Gospels appointed for this week. It will be a pious and an useful exercise for us, to turn our attention to this subject; the words of the prophet naturally lead us to it; and while we attend our blessed Saviour through the trials He underwent, for our sakes, may our hearts be filled with the devotion, the gratitude, and the godly sorrow which such an instance of his affection for his creatures rightfully demands. If suffering innocence, if patience under the most aggravated insults, and mute resignation to the most dreadful tortures; if unexampled constancy under the heaviest afflictions of mind, and the sorest pains of body, can move our sympathy, and call forth our admiration, these surely will be excited to the utmost, by the review of those occurrences, which embittered the last hours of our crucified Saviour. Bp. Sandford.

This passage may very properly lead us to consider likewise how expedient it was, that the Saviour, who came to expiate the sins of mankind, should not only die as a sacrifice, but should also preface that death with all the most aggravating circumstances of shame and scorn and detestation. This was done, no doubt, to expose the heinousness of sin: to prove how just an object it is of the wrath of God, how vilely it degrades the committers of it, and that no disgrace or punishment can be too great for such; all which we see exemplified in Him, who only stood in the place of sinners, and yet was loaded with all the sufferings and indignities capable of being undergone by a person perfectly innocent, and by the human united to the divine nature.

So was it expedient too for manifesting the tenderness of his love, the incomparable greatness of his humility and condescension, and his boundless generosity and zeal for accomplishing the noble design He came about; a zeal which did not disdain even the most difficult terms of working out the salvation of souls.

So was it once more for instructing us, in the nature of the like reproaches and sufferings: for this example teaches us, that we are not to measure men's virtue, or the state of their souls, with regard to the favour of God and another world, by such marks as these, since the Son of his love endured them, without forfeiting the one, or staining the other.

And so it was, lastly, for setting us an example of meekness, and patience, and forgiveness of the wicked instruments of such inhuman treatment, if at any time it shall be permitted to befal us. Dean Stanhope.

answered nothing: so that Pilate marvelled. Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection. And the multitude, crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them. But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews? For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy. But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them. And Pilate answered, and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the King of the Jews? And they cried out again, Crucify him. Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him. And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified. And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together the whole band. And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head: and began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews. And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him. And when they had mocked him they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross. And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a scull. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh; but he received it not. And when they had crucified him they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take. And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. And with him they crucify two thieves, the one on his right hand, and the other on his left. And the Scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself, and come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves, with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save. Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him. And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias. And one ran and filled a spunge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down. And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost. And the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God[g].

[g] A particular worthy to be insisted on, as arising out of this history of the sufferings of our Redeemer, is the disappointment and guilt of our great Master's murderers and persecutors: and, in proportion, of all who depend upon human force and subtlety, for compassing of wicked designs. And here, who can sufficiently admire the wisdom of Almighty God, who thus ordered the great work of man's redemption, in despite of all the malice and subtlety of the devil, and his wicked instruments, to the contrary? the envy and spite of the chief priests and pharisees, the easiness and fury of the common people, the rage and insolence of the soldiers, the profligate consciences of false witnesses, the treachery and avarice of one of Christ's own disciples, the timorousness of a corrupt and time-serving judge, the barbarity of those who derided, and scourged,

The Epistle. Hebrews ix. 16.

WHERE a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator: for a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the testator liveth. Whereupon, neither the first testament was dedicated without blood: for when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament, which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover, he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things them-and crucified Him, and insulted over his dying agonies and pains; all these were made use of by the enemy of mankind, to destroy Jesus, and to overthrow his kingdom, and to root out his name, and all honour for it, from among men; and yet see how vain all these attempts were in the event. They were overruled by Providence, so as to bring about those very purposes, which the actors, and the evil spirit who set those engines at work, laboured to defeat. They, every one, conspired to render the matter more glorious, more uniform, more exactly conformable to the original scheme and design marked out for it; and each contributed to finish that work which some of them knew not of, which others opposed, which none of them in the least intended. This was the only way they could think of, for ruining the reputation of Jesus, and blotting out the remembrance of his miracles and his doctrine; and yet, in reality, it was the only way by which the Gospel could be established, beyond all contradiction, and to all future ages; for, had not these men been so exceedingly, so perversely, barbarous and wicked, this holy teacher, this innocent liver, this general benefactor to wretches in distress, could never have been taken off by so ignominious a death. Had He not been put to such a death, He could not have suffered the shame and torment, which the divine Justice required, as a satisfaction for the sins of men: had not the proceedings against Him been injurious and unreasonable, that death had not had the merit of a sacrifice, and expiation for the guilty, whose persons He bore: had not the innocent Jesus thus died, the "prince of this world" had not been "judged;" but that was the devil's condemnation in the present case, that He "had nothing" in the Person, against whom He exercised such cruelty. In a word, had He not died, He had not conquered death, nor led captivity captive. For St. Paul tells us expressly, that the Son of God was made like unto us, and took a mortal nature upon Him, "that by death he might destroy him that had the power of death, even the devil," and release them, who, through "fear of death, were all their life long subject to bondage," Heb. ii. 14, 15. Thus did the wicked one fall "into his own snare," and "in the same net that he hid privily, was his own foot taken;" his devices "returned upon his own head," and his mischiefs "fell upon his own pate," Ps. ix. 15; vii. 16. So vain and blind are all the counsels of men, so impotent all the cunning and subtlety of hell itself, when they undertake to fight against God. And (which was eminently visible in the death of our blessed Saviour) the prophecies which they fulfilled to a tittle, while they did all in their power to evacuate them; the divine counsels which they unawares accomplished; and the quite contrary ends which they served, to what they hoped and laboured to have done; though it be the most glorious, the most conspicuous, yet is far from being the only instance of a wonderful, wise, and almighty Providence, bringing good out of evil, and excellent and most beneficial events out of most unlikely, most ungodly, most malicious intentions. This every diligent observer will find instances of, frequent enough to convince any thinking man that how casual soever things at first sight may appear, yet there is "One that ruleth over all," and "worketh after the counsel of his own will," Eph. i. 11. Therefore how successful or formidable soever the enemies of truth and goodness may seem in our eyes, yet they cannot bind the hands, nor cross the purposes, of the great Governour of the world. He will assert his own honour, and do right to his suffering and injured servants; and even then, when the wicked think themselves most secure, will shew them their folly, and blast them with the breath of his displeasure. Blessed therefore be his wise and watchful providence, which thus consults his own honour, and the good of his beloved ones, by dark and mysterious ways! Blessed be that admirable management and skill, which turns even the obstinacy of wicked men, and their attempts against religion, into means of promoting and securing it! Blessed for ever be that amazing goodness, which turned an unexampled murder into a most precious sacrifice; transformed the ignominy of the cross into a banner of honour and triumph; and, when the princes and rulers, with Herod and Pontius Pilate, were gathered against Him and his Christ, Acts iv. 26, 27; Ps. ii. 2; looked down from heaven with scorn, and had them in derision, ver. 4, put a hook in their nose, and a bridle in their lips; and, while they gratified their own implacable malice, suffered that malice to suggest no other things to them, than what Himself had long ago determined, and his prophets foretold, should be so done! Blessed be that wisdom, which thus made sin instrumental to destroy sin; which, of the blood shed by wicked hands, opened a fountain to wash away uncleanness; and appointed the holy Jesus, treated as a vile malefactor, for a Prince and Saviour, nay, for the only, the efficacious Author of eternal salvation, to all that sincerely believe and obey Him! Blessed, lastly, be that truth, which thus preserved an exact harmony between the Law and the Gospel, the prophecies and their respective accomplishments; which crowned the shadows of the Levitical dispensation with their proper substance; which provided "a Lamb which did" indeed "take away the sins of the world;" and, to conclude, which suffered no one circumstance to be wanting in his death, that could be necessary to make good the promises, or satisfy the justice, or convince men of the love and goodness, of God! Dean Stanhope.

selves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us; nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others: for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgement: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation [h].

The Gospel. St. Luke xxii. 1.

NOW the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people. Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money. And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them in the absence of the multitude. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-cham-

[h] The evangelical sacrifice, by which Jesus Christ made "by his one oblation of himself once offered, a full, perfect, and sufficient oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world," is here contrasted with the inefficient sacrifices offered "year by year" under the law, which could not make the comers thereunto perfect, Heb. x. 1. The Levitical observances, which were done away by the coming of Messiah, and which were fulfilled by his death upon the cross, were renewed every year, as well to shew their inability to take away sin, (for if they had possessed the power of complete atonement, they "would," as the same apostle argues in the next chapter, "have ceased to be offered," Heb. x. 2,) as to remind the people continually of the necessity and the approach of the perfect offering which, "at the end of the world," that is, at the completion of the Mosaick dispensation, was to be made "once," as being the greatest fulfilment of the Almighty's designs of mercy to his creatures, and the unspeakably dignified and valuable expiation which He would accept for the transgression of mankind. And from the consequence of this one atonement, namely, that there remaineth, therefore, "no more offering for sin," Heb. x. 18, is argued in the concluding words of this passage the nature of Christ's second advent, and the blessings derived to us from his death: for "as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after that the judgment" will take place, which is to decide their condition throughout eternity; so "Christ" having been "once offered to bear the sins of many," shall, at his second coming, appear without sin, that is, not for the purpose of making any more atonement for sin, "unto salvation;" to reward with eternal life "them that look for him," who believe in his name, trusting in the merits of his "cross and passion, and his precious death," and patiently obeying his commandments in the hopes of that everlasting happiness which He alone can bestow.

Thus it is, that Almighty God has been pleased to assure us of the forgiveness of our sins through faith in the sacrifice of the death of his ever-blessed Son. Thus it is that He has entered into covenant with us, and confirmed the covenant by the most powerful ratification. Let us adore the mercy which devised this redemption, and the goodness which arranged the plan of it in such a manner as to make us sensible that it is perfect.

While we commemorate the death of Jesus Christ for our sakes, and rejoice in the actual fulfilment of those things which the ceremonies of the Jewish temple "shadowed out," let us not forget, that, as members of the Church of Christ, we are to endeavour to obtain that inward and spiritual purity, which the outward purifications ordained by the law of Moses prefigured. "If," saith the apostle, "the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God?" Heb. ix. 13, 14. If we would claim the benefits of Christ's death, let us be mindful of the conditions upon which these benefits are imparted: "If ye love me," saith our blessed Lord, "keep my commandments," John xiv. 15: and when we recount the sufferings of our Saviour, and acknowledge the efficacy of them, and the infinite superiority of the atonement, which He has made for us, to the typical expiations of the Mosaick dispensation, we are strongly reminded, surely, that holiness in heart and conduct, in thought, and word, and deed, is the "reasonable" and "easy service," Rom. xii. 1, required of us, as the best evidence of the sincerity of our faith, which we can render to Him who laid down his life, "that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works," Tit. ii. 14. Bp. Sandford.

ber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he shall shall shew you a large upper-room furnished: there make ready. And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And when the hour was come he sat down, and the twelve Apostles with him. And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the Kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves. For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the Kingdom of God shall come. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body, which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you. But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. And truly the Son of Man goeth as it was determined; but wo unto that man by whom he is betrayed. And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth. Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into prison and to death. And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me. And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, That this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors; for the things concerning me have an end. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough. And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives, and his disciples also followed him. And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray, that ye enter not into temptation. And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. And while he yet spake, behold, a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him. But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss? When they who were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword? And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear. And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him. Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders who were come to him, Be ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves? When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness. Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house: and Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him, as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not. And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him; for he is a Galilean. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew. And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter; and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly. And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him. And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophesy, who is it that smote thee? And many other things blasphemously spake they against him. And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people, and the chief priests, and the scribes, came together, and led them into their council, saying, Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe: and if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go. Hereafter shall the Son of Man sit on the right hand of the power of God. Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth[i].

The Epistle. 1 Cor. xi. 17.

IN this that I declare unto you, I praise you not; that ye come together not for the better, but for

[i] The Gospel of this day, amongst many other important particulars, relates the institution of the Lord's Supper: of which the Church requires a devout participation from every member of proper years and understanding at the approaching festival of Easter. This therefore may be a convenient, as it is an obvious occasion for observing the reasonableness of that rubrick in our Liturgy, which contains so general a command of communicating at Easter. For, when indeed can it be more properly done, than at this holy season? When may we expect more plentiful supplies of grace? When do we put ourselves more directly in the way of it, than by thus doing honour to that body and blood, which was broken and shed for us, at the very time when it was actually broken and shed?

If ever our devotions can be exalted to a pitch, in any degree worthy of those blessed mysteries; sure it must be then, when the repeated contemplation of our Lord's glorious achievements for us has raised our heavy souls, and put them on the wing. If ever our faith in Christ be lively and stedfast; it is then most like to be so, when we celebrate his conquest over death and hell, and take courage, from the rout now given to his enemies and ours. If ever we be touched with deep and tender remorse, and melt into penitential tears, and heartily abhor our faults and follies, and ourselves for them; sure, this will be the effect of reading, hearing, recollecting, our dear Redeemer's sufferings: the bitterness of his bodily pains, the anguish of his soul, and the dreadful punishment inflicted upon sin, in his person. If ever the love of Christ commit a holy violence upon our hearts, "and constrain us to obedience:" when are we so prepared to submit to, and be vanquished by it, as now that Jesus Christ is crucified in our ears, and before our eyes, for a whole week together; and hath thereby so fully possessed us with ideas of his most astonishing kindness and condescension?

So fit, so advantageous a time is this, for feeding on the body of our Lord: so scandalous is it, not now to "do this" in remembrance of Him; so much to be feared, that they do not remember Christ at all to purpose, who refuse this respect to his command, his person, his sufferings; and cannot be prevailed upon to remember Him in the method of his own appointing. Dean Stanhope.

[k] Thursday before Easter.] This day is called "Dies Mandati," "Mandate" or "Maundy Thursday," from the commandment which our Saviour gave his apostles to commemorate the Sacrament of his Supper, which the worse. For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you, and I partly believe it. For there must be also heresies among you, that they who are approved may be made manifest among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper: for in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What, have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come[1].

He this day instituted after the celebration of the Passover; and which was, for that reason, generally received in the evening of the day: or, as others think, from that "new commandment" which He gave them to "love one another," after He had washed their feet, in token of the love He bore to them, as is recorded in the second Lesson at Morning Prayer.

The Gospel for this day is suitable to the time, as treating of our Saviour's passion: but the Epistle is something different, containing an account of the institution of the Lord's Supper: the constant celebration of which on this day, both in the morning and in the evening, after supper, in commemoration of its being first instituted at that time, rendered that portion of Scripture very suitable to the day. Wheatly.

[1] With respect to two mistaken notions about receiving the blessed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which persons pretend to ground on this passage, it may be remarked, 1. That the damnation, which St. Paul speaks of, is not eternal misery, but temporal punishments: 2. That the unworthiness of which he speaks, is not, nor can it be, such as persons can be now guilty of. It is readily allowed, that men may be under the danger of receiving unworthily, on other accounts. But how does St. Paul proceed on this occasion? By his expressions in the 25th and 26th verses he abundantly intimates that this duty ought to be performed. And after denouncing the judgments of God against unworthy communicants, he exhorts them, not to consult their safety by abstaining altogether, but by "examining and judging themselves, and so eating of that bread, and drinking of that cup," ver. 28. In short, he that comes not, and he that comes unworthily, are both in a dangerous state: the former, because he will not use his best remedy; the latter, because he profanes and abuses his best remedy. And there is but one way for both to be safe: namely, by coming as often, and as well prepared, as they can; and then God will not fail to forgive, and kindly to accept them.

As to the necessary preparation, it may be said, that no man who leads a good life can ever be unprepared for the Lord's Supper; and no man, who leads a bad one, can come prepared to that or to any other Christian ordinance whatever. Unpreparedness is sometimes alleged for not communicating: by which is meant the want of leisure to retire so many hours, or to say so many prayers, before each communion. These are, no question, very proper exercises, when men have opportunities for them; and no man can take too much pains with himself, to afflict his soul with remorse, or to raise his affections and devotion, on such occasions. But to think, that by these meditations and prayers we are, and that without them we cannot be, prepared, is rank superstition, and an error, that draws a world of ill consequences after it. For even those prayers, if we hold fast any darling lust, are an abomination; an hypocrisy that mocks God, and deludes one's own soul. And I wish all people could be made duly sensible, that although a "week's preparation," when such extraordinary addresses are added to a "conscience void of offence toward God and toward man," may be exceeding well: yet nothing can be depended upon, but a communicating frequently and reverently; and living, as if we were every day to communicate, between one opportunity and another. To cease to do evil, and learn to do well; to love God, and keep his commandments; to follow the works of our calling with industry; and to provide for our families with honesty; to trust to God's good providence, and be

The Gospel. St. Luke xxiii. 1.

THE whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate. And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying, That he himself is Christ a King. And Pilate asked him saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him, and said, Thou sayest it. Then said Pilate to the chief priests, and to the people, I find no fault in this man. And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean. And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself was also at Jerusalem at that time. And when Herod saw Jesus he was exceeding glad; for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing. And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him. And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate. And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests, and the rulers, and the people, said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him: No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him. I will therefore chastise him, and release him. For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast. And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas: (who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.) Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them. But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go. And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified: and the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required. And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will. And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him. But Jesus, turning unto them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death. And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him; and the male-content with our condition; to preserve unity in the Church, peace and order in the state; to study to be quiet, to do our own business, and the duty of the capacity and the relations we stand in: to abhor uncleanness, and evil-speaking, and all uncharitableness; this is true preparation. And he that thus communicates, though at a minute's warning, will never be rejected of God, or deserve to be condemned by men. And therefore men would do well to consider this; and, how they can answer, either living out of such a state, or neglecting the sacrament, when they are in it. Dean Stanhope.

factors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots. And the people stood beholding; and the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God. And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar, and saying, If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself. And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS. And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself, and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds, but this man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise. And it was about the sixth hour: and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in the midst. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost. Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man. And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things that were done, smote their breasts, and returned. And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things[m].

[m] The case of the penitent thief, recorded in the Gospel of the day, is an useful subject for our reflexions, because sometimes made the ground of a false security. For when this action comes to be thoroughly weighed, some things will be found in it very extraordinary, some that seldom have, some that can never have, a parallel. This man, it is probable, had never seen or heard of Christ before: or, if he had, it is yet more strange, that he, who had stood out till then, should come in to the acknowledgment of Him now. Now, when his enemies were insulting over Him, when his own disciples and the companions of his preaching and miracles had forsaken Him; when they, who once "trusted it had been he, who should have redeemed Israel," despaired of him; when the companion of his wickedness was at the same time reproaching and blaspheming Him; that he, I say, should in this lowest ebb of misery, and shame, and scorn, that ever the Son of God did or could stoop to, throw himself upon his protection, acknowledge his kingdom, believe Him Lord of a future and better state, and the disposer of rewards and happiness after death; and all this upon so surprising a conviction, and in answer to the very first calls of grace: this argues so ingenuous a temper, so noble and so bold a faith, as never was outdone, as never can in all respects be equalled, except the same Jesus were again to be crucified. For no man's conversion ever had, ever can have, upon other terms, the same disadvantages and discouragements, which this man's laboured under, and so generously overcame.

Might not then St. Chrysostom, as with great force he does, rebuke the impudence of those late penitents, who presume to take sanctuary in this example? them, who live under the ministry of the Gospel, and enjoy both the outward calls of God's word, and the inward solicitations of his Spirit, but turn the deaf ear continually to both? who profess to believe a risen and glorified Redeemer, to expect Him as their Judge, and call Him Lord and King, and have listed themselves in his service by baptism, but pay Him no degree of that respect which this stranger did, when He had rendered Himself of no reputation, and appeared in the guise of the vilest malefactor? This certainly shews such a difference as must, if reflected on, convince all wilful delayers of repentance, that they have no precedent to produce for their confidence. Indeed, their state is as unlike to his, as that of a conversion astonishingly speedy and gallant, is to an obstinate backwardness and delay: and the only part of the comparison that holds, is that of death being at the door.

That God should communicate the assistance of his grace very liberally, to one so disposed to close with the first motions of it, as this thief, agrees with those exalted notions of his goodness, which both reason and revelation have given us. But what assurance can we have from either, of his readiness to assist and bring over those who have received it in vain; why should they suppose, that a Spirit, so often driven away, will be at their call whenever they please, and, by a more than common influence, work in them a change, just when they come to die, which they never would be prevailed upon to concur with, or consent to, in the whole course of their lives? No, no. If these men are desirous to find a parallel, they have it here at hand. The other thief, who went out of the world railing and reviling, is much more likely to be the true emblem of their sad condition. He is far from being the only instance of a wicked creature, given up by God at his last hour; but the penitent thief is the only one we are sure of, reclaimed at his last hour; and this too such a one as cannot be drawn into consequence by any Christian, by reason of those many circumstances, in which it is not so much as possible for this case to agree with that of any, who shall presume to defer his repentance, though but till the next hour.

Let us therefore deal fairly with ourselves, and not

The Collects.

ALMIGHTY God, we beseech thee graciously to behold this thy family, for which our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men, and to suffer death upon the cross, who now liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

read this story by halves. Let us in it contemplate the justice of a provoked, as well as the mercy of a forgiving, God. If "to-day, while it is called to-day," we do our part; we have a title to the consolations of this case. If we put off from day to day, and continue to harden our hearts; it contains not one syllable of comfort for us, but all we build upon it is without foundation. The extent of our lives we cannot, but the difficulties of a death-bed repentance we may, certainly know. And, if once matters come to this pass, we cannot be sure of the power, nay, we cannot be sure of so much as the will, to repent. But, supposing this also not to be denied us, we cannot have the same assurance of being then accepted, which this thief had. For many things, at such a time, concur to deceive us: and whether the good purposes, then raised in our minds, would be stedfast and perpetual, God only can foresee. We find by experience that many, who have resolved well, if God grant an unexpected recovery, relapse into their old impieties; and do not only deceive others, but themselves too. The only course then to be safe and easy, is to repent so early, that the fruits may put the sincerity of our change past any doubt. For we can never have too mean a thought of doing this upon beds of languishing, and at the approach of death. And the most that ought to be said in favour of such a delay, is not to pronounce it altogether desperate. But this is a danger, which, I hope, the due observance of this holy season we are now in hath delivered us from. And, if so, then may we, with great equanimity, imitate our blessed Lord, in that act, which is described in these words, ver. 46, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." Dean Stanhope.

[n] Good Friday.] This day received its name from the blessed effects of our Saviour's sufferings, which are the ground of all our joy, and from those unspeakable good things He hath purchased for us by his death, whereby the blessed Jesus made expiation for the sins of the whole world, and, by the shedding his own blood, obtained eternal redemption for us. Among the Saxons it was called Long Friday; but for what reasons (excepting for the long fastings and offices they then used) does not appear.

2. The commemoration of our Saviour's sufferings hath been kept from the very first age of Christianity, and was always observed as a day of the strictest fasting and humiliation; not that the grief and affliction they then expressed did arise from the loss they sustained, but from a sense of the guilt of the sins of the whole world, which drew upon our blessed Redeemer that painful and shameful death of the cross.

3. The Gospel for this day (besides its coming in course) is properly taken out of St. John rather than any other Evangelist, because he was the only one that was present at the passion, and stood by the cross while others fled: and therefore, the passion being as it were represented before our eyes, his testimony is read who saw it himself, and from whose example we may learn not to be ashamed or afraid of the cross of Christ. The Epistle proves from the insufficiency of the Jewish sacrifices, that they only typified a more sufficient one, which the Son of God did as on this day offer up, and by one oblation of Himself then made upon the cross, completed all the other sacrifices, (which were only shadows of this,) and made full satisfaction for the sins of the whole world. In imitation of which divine and infinite love, the Church endeavours to shew her charity to be boundless and unlimited, by praying in one of the proper Collects, that the effects of Christ's death may be as universal as the design of it, namely, that it may tend to the salvation of all, Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Hereticks.

4. How suitable the proper Psalms are to the day, is obvious to any one that reads them with a due attention: they were all composed by David in times of the greatest calamity and distress, and do most of them belong mystically to the crucifixion of our Saviour; especially the twenty-second, which is the first for the morning, which was in several passages literally fulfilled by his sufferings, and either part of it, or all, recited by Him upon the cross. And for that reason (as St. Austin tells us) was always used upon that day by the African church.

5. The first Lesson for the morning is Genesis xxii. containing an account of Abraham's readiness to offer up his son; thereby typifying that perfect oblation which was this day made by the Son of God; which was thought so proper a Lesson for this occasion, that the Church used it upon this day in St. Austin's time. The second Lesson is St. John xviii. which needs no explanation. The first Lesson for the evening contains a clear prophecy of the passion of Christ, and of the benefits which the Church thereby receives. The Israelites, and be made one fold under one shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. Heb. x. 1.

THE law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect: for then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure: Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above, when he said, Sacrifice and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein, which are offered by the Law: then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins. But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God: from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified: Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching°.

second Lesson exhorts us to patience under afflictions, from the example of Christ, who suffered so much for us. Wheatly.

° The apostle, having, in the Epistle for this day, set forth the excellency, the extent, the end, and the all-sufficiency of Christ's death, in all which it vastly exceeds all the sacrifices and expiations under the law which were but so many types and faint representations of this great propitiatory sacrifice under the Gospel, infers from thence the following useful lessons.

1. "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," Heb. x. 22; that is, let us serve God with a sincere and unfeigned worship, with a firm persuasion of finding acceptance with Him, having our souls purified from all inward pollution, and our bodies cleansed from all outward defilement. The expression of "sprinkling the heart from an evil conscience" alludes to a custom under the law, where he, that had touched any unclean thing, was to be sprinkled by the priest before he entered the congregation; and "the body's being washed with pure water" alludes to the laver of regeneration under the Gospel, where baptized persons are washed from their original corruption. And both expressions imply, that Christ's sacrificing Himself for us should engage us to the greatest purity both of soul and body, which must be therefore observed by all, that would receive any benefit by the shedding of his blood.

2. "Let us hold fast the profession of the faith without wavering, for he is faithful that hath promised" (ver. 23); that is, let us be constant to the faith of a crucified Saviour, and be as ready to profess it with the mouth, as to confess it in the heart. Let no temptations either of prosperity or adversity shake our belief of Him, or make us in the least waver in it; but rather let us say with St. Paul, "We preach Christ crucified,

The Gospel. St. John xix. 1.

PILATE therefore took Jesus, and scourged him. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe, and said, Hail, King of the Jews: and they smote him with their hands. Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him. Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man! When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him. The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid; and went again into the judgement-hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer. Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee? Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin. And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgement-seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar. Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified: and they took Jesus, and led him away. And he, bearing his cross, went forth into a place called the place of a scull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha: where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst. And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross; and the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am the King of the Jews. Pilate answered, What I have written, I have written. Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the Scripture might be ful-though it be a stumbling-block to the Jews, and to the Greeks foolishness." Whatever dangers and discouragements then we may meet with, let us ever own and put our trust in a dying Saviour; for He hath promised to stand by those that stand firm to their profession, and we may safely depend upon his fidelity, for He is faithful that hath promised.

3. "Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works" (ver. 24); that is, let the sense of Christ's love, in dying for us, kindle in our breast the most ardent flames of love towards Him, and likewise to one another, whom He hath made partakers of the benefits of his death. Let us call upon each other, to express this love by all the acts of duty and thankfulness, abounding in the works of piety and charity, knowing that "Christ gave himself for us, to redeem us from all iniquity, and to purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

Lastly, Let us "not forsake the assembling ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhort one another, and so much the more, as we see the day approaching" (25); that is, let us not leave the public congregations of Christ's Church, appointed to celebrate the praises of our Redeemer, to hear his word, to receive his holy sacraments, and jointly to offer up our prayers and thanksgivings unto Him. To neglect these, is a degree of apostasy and defection from Him, and therefore let us exhort one another, to keep to them, and the rather, because the day of reckoning is at hand. Dr. Hole.

filled, which saith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did. Now there stood by the cross of Jesus, his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he said unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son. Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother. And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home. After this, Jesus, knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a spunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his month. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs. But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water. And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe. For these things were done that the Scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken. And again another Scripture saith, They shall look on him whom they pierced [p].

Rom. vi. 3, 4. 8. 11, 12.

[p] The service of the Church hath brought us down to the last act of our Saviour's sufferings, and the particular manner of his expiring on the cross, as expressed in the 30th verse of the Gospel for the day, "He bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." The phrase implies such a dissolution and actual separation of the soul and body, as every common man undergoes, when he dies. But herein is a remarkable difference, that what is in other men the effect of necessity, was in Jesus a voluntary act, and the effect of his own free choice. Such was the decease of our blessed Redeemer: so voluntary and intirely his own: so wise and wonderful in every circumstance: so victorious even in that part of it, by which his enemies thought Him vanquished; so full of matter, so full of comfort is that dying word of the blessed Jesus, importing that all the prophecies in the Old Testament concerning Christ were accomplished, that all the types and figures concerning Him in the Jewish law were fulfilled, that all the great work of man's redemption, and every thing necessary for reconciling sinners to their incensed God, was exactly and punctually performed: so justly might He then, so joyfully may every Christian now, cry out, "It is finished."

Hence we perceive how it came to pass, that this death was an act so noble and generous in itself, and so exceedingly beneficial to us. For therefore, is it a meritorious, because not only an invaluable, but a willing, sacrifice. Therefore was this act of obedience so well pleasing to his Father: because, even in the most difficult and painful instances, it proceeded not from constraint, but from full consent and free choice. Upon this account his love to wretched man is so unspeakably tender and great; because it was in his power to have refused the giving us such costly proofs of his kindness. At the same time by such chosen and cheerful submission to die for our sakes, our Lord hath set us a pattern, how we ought to behave ourselves to Him, in return for such marvellous compassion and love: that we should think nothing too much to do, nothing too generous to suffer, for a Saviour, who of his own accord and mere grace hath done and suffered so much for us.

The proper use of this week's devotions is, to inflame our affections, to quicken our endeavours, to arm us with patience, to encourage our perseverance to the end: to put us in mind, that we, like Him, can only then lay down our heads with comfort, when we can say, "It is finished:" when we measure our life, not by the length and number of our days, but by the business and design of it. No death can be hasty or unseasonable, which comes when a man hath satisfied the ends he lived for. No life is long which determines, before the purposes of living are made good, and its work done; but happy, happy they, who, after the most distressed, the most laborious, the most despised instances of their virtue, can sing this song of triumph to themselves: that they have been faithful in their charge, and done what it was their duty to do. If such partake in the afflictions, and reproaches, and death of their Saviour, they shall assuredly be recompensed, by partaking in his resurrection. And when they give up the ghost, shall immediately "enter into the joy of" this "their" crucified "Lord." Dean Stanhope.

[q] Easter Even.] This eve was in the ancient Church celebrated with more than ordinary devotions, with solemn watchings, with multitudes of lighted torches both in their churches and their own private houses, and with a general resort and confluence of all ranks of people. All which was designed as a forerunner of that great light, "the Sun of righteousness," which, the next day, arose upon the world. The Church of England hath laid these ceremonies aside, but provides for the religious exercise of her members by calling them together to meditate upon our Saviour's death, burial, and descent into hell. Wheatly.

Rom. iv. 25.

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter iii. 17.

IT is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing; wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto, even baptism, doth also now save us, (not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him[s].

The Collect reminds us of our conforming to Christ's death by being baptized into it, and likewise of our conforming to his resurrection by mortifying our corrupt affections, of which the apostle speaks, Rom. vi. 3—5: whence we are taught to pray that we may pass through the grave to a joyful resurrection for the merits of our Saviour. The Epistle is designed to make us conformable to Christ, as well in his sufferings as in his glory. The Gospel gives us a relation of his burial, with the circumstances that attended it. Dr. Hole.

[r] — as we are baptized into the death of thy Son.] The phrase, taken from Rom. vi. 3, seems to be used here by the Church, to signify our spiritual death unto sin, which she declares in her Catechism to be part of the inward and spiritual grace of baptism. And our continuing in the mortification of our sins is our spiritual burial together with Christ here mentioned. Dr. Bennet.

The phrase "by continual mortifying our corrupt affections," is inaccurate. It ought to be, "by the continual mortifying of," or, "by continually mortifying," our corrupt affections. Bp. Lowth. See the notes on the Collects for Whit-Sunday, and St. John the Baptist's-day.

[s] The Epistle for the day, like the day itself, presents to our minds two different views. The one a retrospect upon our dying; the other, a most comfortable prospect upon our risen Lord. With regard to the former, we are, by his example, excited to patience in our sufferings, even when those sufferings are extreme and unjust. With regard to the latter, we are informed, that our Lord returned to life, by virtue of that eternal Spirit, which, long before his incarnation, strove with sinful men, by seasonable instructions and warnings, to prevent the dismal consequences of a God provoked to anger. The inefficacy of which good office brought destruction upon all the old world, except one obedient family, by the sweeping of a deluge, dreadful and general, as the impieties that had let it in upon them.

The deliverance we likewise learn from hence, to have been a figure of the sacrament of baptism; as the ark, containing Noah and his family, was a figure of the Church. None were then preserved, whom that ark did not bear upon the water; in like manner it is by baptism, and in the Church only, that men can now be ordinarily saved, from their sins here, and everlasting death hereafter. The efficacy of this sacrament is however ascribed not to the outward element applied to the body, but to the inward disposition of the mind, in them, who are received by it into this spiritual ark. This disposition is to be expressed, by declarations of the party's willingness to enter into covenant with God, and to expect salvation upon the terms of the Gospel: a part of baptism so necessary, that it does not appear, that it anciently was, or that it ever ought to be, administered without such declaration. And therefore such consent is rightly demanded of all baptized persons; expected from all of years and discretion to be given by themselves; accepted for infants by the charity of the Church, from sureties in their name; but required to be personally ratified by these too, in the too much neglected rite of "confirmation," at a time when they are capable of contracting for their part of this covenant.

The salvation, attained by thus entering into covenant with God, is most rightfully ascribed here to our Lord's resurrection. That being the evidence, that the sins He died for were fully expiated, and that immortality was restored to the nature, in which He died. The release of our surety was, in all reasonable construction, an acknowledgment, that our debt was fully satisfied: and a sufficient foundation for the firmest faith in the "merits of him, who died and was buried, and rose again for us."

But faith alone, we know, is not sufficient. Every important article of the Christian religion ought to have a powerful influence upon our practice. And therefore neither do we consider, nor believe, our Lord's burial aright, unless that also be imitated and drawn into example. And, because this is what every one engages for, when he enters into covenant with Christ by baptism; therefore every Christian is said to be "buried, and to rise with him," in that holy sacrament. Let us then look upon ourselves in the circumstances, wherein Christ is represented this day. Dead to our trespasses and sins, as He was to the world; buried as He was; to shew, there are no remains of our former wicked life in us. As He died once only, to return no more to corruption; so let our repentance, and the forsaking of our sins, be without any wilful relapse. And, as He rose again to live for ever, so let us enter upon a new course, to last as long as ourselves do upon earth, and to be perfected by a glorious and blessed immortality in heaven. Dean Stanhope.

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxvii. 57.

WHEN the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathæa, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple. He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock; and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre. Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch; go your way, make it as sure as you can. So they went and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch[t].

EASTER DAY[u].

¶ At Morning Prayer, instead of the Psalm, O come, let us sing, &c. these Anthems shall be sung or said[v].

CHRIST our passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast;

[t] It is worth our observation, that the evangelists are not more circumstantial in any particular, relating to our blessed Saviour, than in that part which concerns his burial. This seems to be done not so much for the sake of any consequence that action is of, considered apart by itself; as for the service it does to the proof of some things, which went before and followed after it. For the two great points of the Christian religion being the death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ, it was necessary that all possible conviction should be given to the world, of these two most important passages. Were we not well assured of his being really dead, we could not be certain that an atonement was made for the sins of the world; and, had we any reasonable ground to doubt the truth of his resurrection, we could not depend upon that atonement being accepted. Now what the Holy Spirit hath thought fit to record of his burial, is so ordered, as to leave no just suspicion, either that our Lord's body was not actually dead, or that the same body, which so died, was not actually restored to life again. This is what the Gospel of the day gives very full evidence of; especially when compared with its parallel texts in the other evangelists: in all of which the account of the persons concerned, the manner of treating his body, and the place where it was laid, all contribute great strength to those two most important articles of the Christian faith, the death and resurrection of our Lord. Hence we see why the Christian Church hath been so careful to insert into her Creeds and solemn confessions of faith this burial of Christ, as well as his crucifixion, death, and resurrection; because this hath so close a connexion with those other fundamental doctrines, that we must have wanted a great and very substantial part of the evidence, both of his being dead, and of his rising again, had we not unquestionable assurances of his being buried. Dean Stanhope.

[u] Easter Day.] This was the birth-day of our Saviour in his state of glory and exaltation, as his nativity was his birth-day to his state of humiliation. It was anciently called the "great day," and "the feast of feasts:" being by eminence "the day which the Lord hath made," Ps. cxviii. 24: for the Fathers unanimously expound that passage of this day, and therefore with them, as with us, that psalm was always part of the office of the day. For the antiquity of the observation of this day innumerable authors might be produced: but the matter is not at all controverted. L'Estrange. This is the highest of all feasts, saith Epiphanius: this day Christ opened to us the door of life, being the first-fruits of those that rose from the dead: whose resurrection was our life; for He rose again for our justification, Rom. iv. 25. Bp. Sparrow.

From the old Saxon word "oster," signifying "to rise," we call it Easter day, or the day of the resurrection. Wheatly.

[v] —these Anthems shall be sung or said.] In the primitive times the Christians of all churches on this day used this morning salutation, "Christ is risen;" to which those who were saluted, answered, "Christ is risen indeed:" or else thus, "and hath appeared unto Simon;" a custom still retained in the Greek church. And our Church, supposing us as eager of the joyful news as they were, is loth to withhold from us long the pleasure of expressing it; and therefore, as soon as the Absolution is pronounced, and we are thereby rendered fit for rejoicing, she begins her office of praise with anthems proper to the day, encouraging her members to call upon one another "to keep the feast; for that Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us, and is also risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept," &c. Wheatly.

Paraphrase of the anthems.

1. Christ our Paschal Lamb is sacrificed for us, let us therefore keep a feast as well as the Jews, not with the leaven of the Jewish law, 1 Cor. v. 7; nor with that leaven of malice and wickedness which our Saviour taxes the Pharisees with, Matt. xvi. 6; Mark viii. 15; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and true piety, which becomes the excellent professions of us Christians.

2. Christ being risen from the dead, cannot die now any more, as having conquered death by his divine power, and as being gone to heaven, a place where death hath no dominion: for, forasmuch as it was requisite for Him to die once, to satisfy for the sins of the world, so the once dying of such a Person was

Not with the old leaven, nor with the leaven of malice and wickedness: but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. 1 Cor. v. 7.

CHRIST being raised from the dead dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over him.

For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin: but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. vi. 9.

CHRIST is risen from the dead: and become the first-fruits of them that slept.

For since by man came death: by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

For as in Adam all die: even so in Christ shall all be made alive. 1 Cor. xv. 20.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

The Collect.

ALMIGHTY God, who through thine only-begotten Son Jesus Christ hast overcome death[x], and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; We humbly beseech thee, that, as by thy special grace preventing us[y] thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. Col. iii. 1.

IF ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth: For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concuabundantly sufficient to make satisfaction for the sins of all men: and forasmuch as now He liveth, He liveth for ever, in the eternal glory of the Godhead; therefore I would have you improve this truth for your edification. Be you likewise dead unto sin, and have no manner of perception or relish of its pleasures; and, by living a divine and spiritual life, live unto God, and, as much as may be, partake of the heavenly pleasures even in this world.

3. Christ is risen from the dead, and as, under the Levitical law, the crop was sanctified by the first-fruits offered to God, Lev. xxiii. 10; so is Christ, as it were, the first-fruits of all those, who, having been dead, rise up to eternal life; for since, by the man Adam, death came upon all men, so, by Christ made man, shall all men rise again with their bodies. Dr. Nicholls.

The first Lesson in the morning is the twelfth chapter of Exodus, in which is mentioned the institution of the passover, proper for this day the feast of the passover: for, as St. Augustin observes, "we do in this feast not only call to mind the history of our Saviour's resurrection, but also celebrate the mystery of ours." That as Christ this day rose again from death to life, so by Christ, and the virtue of his resurrection, shall we be made alive, and rise from death to life eternal. Christ is therefore our true passover, whereof the other was a type: the lesson then is proper for the day. So is the first Lesson for the evening, Exod. xiv; for it is concerning the Israelites' deliverance out of Egypt, a type of our deliverance from hell this day by Christ's glorious resurrection. As that day Israel saw that great work, which the Lord did upon Egypt, ver. 31: so this day we see the great conquest over hell and death finished, by Christ's triumphant resurrection from the dead. The second lessons are plain. The Gospel gives us the full evidence of Christ's resurrection: the Epistle tells us what use we should make of it, "If Christ be risen, seek those things that are above," &c. The Collect prays for grace, to make the use of it which the Epistle directs.

Thus holy Church is careful to teach and instruct all her children in the matter of the feast, preaching Christ's resurrection to us, both in the type and prophecy out of the Old Testament, and in the history of it out of the New. And she does not only teach us to know what God hath done for us this day, but also she is careful that we may do our duty to God for this his marvellous goodness, commanding and directing us to pray for grace to do our duty, prescribing us excellent forms of adoring and blessing God for his mercy this day! such methods as the Holy Ghost hath set down, in which we may be sure to pray and praise God by the spirit. Bp. Sparrow. On this day, as on Christmas-day, there were formerly two communions, whereof we have retained the former Epistle and Gospel. Bp. Cosin.

[x] —hast overcome death,] God is said to "have overcome death through our Saviour," because He has resolved, that, for the sake of our Saviour, those, who die, shall be raised again, and their bodies being reunited to their souls shall live for ever. By these means God has for the same reason "opened unto us the gate of everlasting life;" for we could not have lived everlastingly, if Christ had not died for us. Dr. Bennet.

[y] —grace preventing us] See the note on the Collect at the end of the Communion Service, "Prevent us, O Lord, &c."

piscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience. In the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them[z].

The Gospel. St. John xx. 1.

THE first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre. Then she runneth and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him. Peter therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre. So they ran both together; and the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre; and he, stooping down and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in. Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie; and the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself. Then went in also that other disciple which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed. For as yet they knew not the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead. Then the disciples went away again unto their own home[a].

[z] The Epistle for this day is designed to enforce the duties and virtuous dispositions which are natural consequences of the belief of a Saviour, risen from the dead. Whom when we consider as now in full possession of immortality, living and reigning in heaven, in human nature, his happiness is the pledge of all theirs, who partaking of that nature, shall perform the conditions left upon them, as necessary to qualify them for partaking in the same happiness also. Of these the apostle mentions two, which do indeed include all the rest. 1. "The setting our affections on things above." The second thing, which is truly in order to the former, is an effectual subduing of those lusts and inordinate appetites, which, above all things, obstruct that heavenly temper of mind.

It may here therefore be remarked, that as our first entrance into covenant with God by baptism (which is an emblem of our Lord's death and resurrection,) is the spiritual birth of a Christian, so a conscientious perseverance in the obedience, there covenanted for, is his spiritual life. Both which we most truly acknowledge to proceed from the "dwelling" of that "Spirit in us, which raised Christ from the dead," Rom. viii. 11. And, if besides we reflect on the numbers, who in the primitive Church were received by that sacrament, which, at this festival yearly, began to be most solemnly administered, and whereunto the preceding fast of Lent was a solemn preparation; these things, laid altogether, may suffice to set the wisdom of our Church above any just exception, in appointing a Collect, not only pious and useful, but alluding, and by no means foreign, to the subject of the day. Dean Stanhope.

The Epistle instructs us to "set our affections on things above:" by which is meant such a frequent and serious consideration of that happy and glorious state, which is prepared for good men in another world, as may engage our constant and sincere endeavours in obtaining it: such a conviction of the excellency of those heavenly joys, as may determine our wills to prefer them before all the honours and riches of this world; and wing all the faculties of our souls to the swiftest prosecution of them. And we may then be said to set our affection on these things, when we govern all our actions with a respect to the next life, and make it our great business to please God, who is the first and chiefest good; "for our fruit must be unto holiness, before our end can be everlasting life," Rom. vii. 22, when we have a low and mean opinion of the enjoyments of this world, in comparison of those of the next; and are ready to part with what is most dear to us, to secure our eternal inheritance: when we are zealous and industrious in doing all the good we can, and bear all the miseries and calamities of life, with patience and resignation, without murmuring, without despondency, because "they are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed," Rom. viii. 18: when we frequently entertain ourselves with spiritual subjects, and embrace all convenient opportunities of conversing with God in prayer, and by approaching his holy table; and "had rather be doorkeepers in the house of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness," Ps. lxxxiv. 10: when we can look upon death as a passage to a blessed immortality; and welcome its approach, not only without terror, but with comfort and satisfaction; "knowing that when this earthly tabernacle shall be dissolved, we shall have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," 2 Cor. v. 1. Nelson.

[a] As no truth is of more importance to the Christian religion than the resurrection of Christ, so none had greater care taken to strengthen the belief of it. The testimony of angels, of disciples, of women, of numbers of people, the conversation of forty days, the testimony of the elements themselves, the earth trembling and quaking, as if in pangs and travail to discharge this new birth, the testimony of others, whose bodies appeared in the holy city; nay, the testimony of the most inveterate enemies of Christ; for even the Jews themselves, by advancing so incredible a story, as that of his disciples stealing Him away, do in effect confess and corroborate a truth, which they so very weakly endeavour to destroy.

A consideration of these particulars may satisfy every Christian, what a firm foundation his faith stands upon, and may put all its enemies to confusion. But, unless we do something more than argue for our Saviour's resurrection, it had been the same thing to us, if He had never risen at all. The second Lesson for this morning's service, and the Epistle for the day, tell us largely, what use is to be made of this article. That owning, and being baptized into the belief of it, implies our being conformed to the likeness of what our

For the Epistle. Acts x. 34.

PETER opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ; (he is Lord of all:) that word (I say) ye know, which was published throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached: how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew, and hanged on a tree: Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he who was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through Saviour hath done; that we must rise with Him, and prove that we do so, by "setting our affection on things above; that, as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we should also walk in newness of life; that, as he died to sin once, and now liveth unto God, so we should reckon ourselves dead unto sin, but alive unto God; alive like him, over whom the law of sin and death hath no more dominion, and who returned not a second time to corruption," Col. iii. 1, 2; Rom. vi. 4. 9—11. Let us remember then, that Christ is risen; but let us remember withal, that they only will have comfort of his rising, who are thus risen with Him. The great revolution of the whole world, its second and better creation to immortality, began this day. But, if we have no part in it, by reformation and a new life, we are of all men most miserable. Our Prince and King hath overcome indeed "the sharpness of death: but it is to believers" only that "he hath opened the kingdom of heaven." And such believers are only they, who prove their faith by their works. And to those He hath given a sure comfort. Such a one, as "neither tribulation nor distress, nor even death" itself can rob them of. For, since their "Redeemer liveth, they are certain, that though after their skin worms destroy this body, yet there will come another day, when in their flesh they shall see God," Rom. viii. 35. 38; Job xix. 25, 26. Whom God grant us to behold and to see ourselves, that is, for our own unspeakable and everlasting happiness, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

The occasion of this week's solemnity was principally intended for the expressing of our joy for our Lord's resurrection. But among the ancients there was another peculiar reason for the more solemn observation of this week. For except in cases of necessity they administered baptism at no other times than Easter and Whitsuntide; at Easter, in memory of Christ's death and resurrection, (correspondent to which are the two parts of the Christian life, represented in baptism "dying unto sin," and "rising again unto newness of life;") and at Whitsuntide, in memory of the apostles being then "baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire," and of their having themselves at that time baptized three thousand souls; this communication of the Holy Ghost to the apostles being in some measure represented and conveyed by baptism. After these times, they made it part of their festivity the week following to congratulate the access of a new Christian progeny: the new-baptized coming each day to church in white garments, with lights before them, in token that they had now laid aside their works of darkness, and were become the children of light, and had made a resolution to lead a new, innocent, and unspotted life. At church, thanksgivings and prayers were made for them, and those that were at years of discretion (for in those times many such came in from heathenism) were instructed in the principles and ways of Christianity: but afterwards, when most of the baptized were infants, and so not capable of such solemnities, this custom was altered, and baptism administered at all times of the year, as at the beginning of Christianity. Wheatly.

[b] Monday in Easter Week.] All this week, which we call Easter-week, was anciently kept holy; but above others these two days were most observed. In some particulars the whole interval between Easter and Pentecost was honoured with an esteem equal to the Lord's day. L'Estrange. To shew the great solemnity of the Easter festival the Church has set apart the two following days after Sunday, for the exercise of religious duty: to the end that we might have leisure to confirm our faith in the grand article of our Saviour's resurrection, and to exert our devout affections in all those happy consequences that are deducible from it. Nelson.

The first lesson for Monday morning treats about God's sending the Israelites manna or bread from heaven, which was a type of our blessed Saviour, who was the "bread of life that came down from heaven, of which whosoever eateth hath eternal life." The first his Name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins[c].

The Gospel. St. Luke xxiv. 13.

BEHOLD, two of his disciples went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. And it came to pass, that while they communed together, and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. But their eyes were holden, that they should not know him. And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad? And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering, said unto him, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days? and he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, who was a prophet mighty in deed and word, before God and all the people: and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and besides lesson for Monday evening contains the history of the vanquishing the Amalekites, by the holding up of Moses's hands; by which posture he put himself into the form of a cross, and exactly typified the victory which Christians obtain over their spiritual enemies by the cross of Christ. The smiting also of the rock, out of which came water, (mentioned in the same chapter,) is another type of our Saviour: for as the water flowing from the rock quenched the Israelites' thirst; so our Saviour, smitten upon the cross, gave forth that living water, "of which whosoever drinketh shall never thirst." The second lessons contain full testimonies of our Saviour's resurrection; that for the morning giving an historical account of it; the other for the evening containing a relation of a lame man being restored to his feet, through faith in the name of Christ, which was an undeniable proof that He was then alive. Wheatly.

[c] In this speech of St. Peter, the apostle gives an account of the word and preaching of our Lord, and also of his resurrection from the dead: "Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." But, it may be said, why not to all the people? Would not so publick a display of the miracle be more convincing, and free from all suspicion of fraud? Perhaps it might: but neither had the Jews, who rejected a long series of publick miracles, which were continued even while our Lord hung on the cross, any right to prescribe conditions for their believing the resurrection; nor is there wanting a sufficient body of evidence to establish this beyond all power of the gainsayer and unbeliever; as will appear from these few considerations.

Although Christ did not appear to all the people after his resurrection, yet they wanted not convincing proof that He was risen. "The chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again: command, therefore, that the sepulchre be made sure, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead; so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch; go your way, make it as sure as you can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch." This attention and vigilance are remarkable, and shew the extreme caution of those sagacious enemies to prevent all possibility of fraud, in the followers of Christ. But finding that the body had, notwithstanding all their care, disappeared from the sepulchre, and that the guard, having seen an angel, had become like dead men, they resort to the very conduct which they affected to condemn, to fraud and subornation of false witnesses. For, when some of the watch came to the city, and shewed the chief priests what was done, they gave money to the soldiers, desiring them to say, that while they slept, his disciples had stolen Him away; and promising to secure them against punishment from the governour. This strange proceeding speaks fully for itself; and, like many other impostures, ends in its own confusion. For, out of their great zeal to prove the charge, they make the soldiers prove too much: they bring their testimony to a fact, which in the same breath they declare to have happened while they slept. Compare this deliberate system of fraud, this readiness in contriving, and assurance in upholding a palpable and odious lie, with the reluctant assent of our Lord's disciples, with their candid account of their own slowness of conviction, with the simplicity and integrity of their whole narrative; and you will, on the one hand, discover the father of lies too successful with that unhappy nation; and, on the other, be led to adore the God of truth for thus manifesting Himself by such plain and evident signs. Again, the apostles, who were witnesses of the resurrection, had, upon the death of their Master, and before this event took place, given up all for lost, and nearly consigned themselves to despair. Even his own predictions of the event seem to have been forgotten, or little relied upon. The first revival of their hopes was occasioned by his resurrection: and, as this change cannot be otherwise accounted for, so neither were they at all likely to be deceived in a matter about which they were at first very incredulous, and in which they had several opportunities to be satisfied. Above all, they could not fancy themselves endued with the gifts of various tongues to preach, and other miraculous powers to confirm this doctrine. The people, therefore, who were witnesses to these things, could not have had a higher degree of evidence: no, not even in the sight of our Lord Himself. So that the purpose of God in shewing Him only to chosen persons, and through them spreading a knowledge of the resurrection to the rest of the world, was amply sufficient for the conviction of all honest minds, which alone are worthy to be satisfied. Others would not be persuaded, though one rose from the dead, and were actually seen by them. Dr. Stack.

all this, to day is the third day since these things were done. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre; and when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said; but him they saw not. Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went; and he made as though he would have gone further: but they constrained him, saying, Abide with us, for it is towards evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures? And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread[d].

[d] From the narrative contained in this day's Gospel, in which our Lord discourses of the necessity of the death and resurrection of the Messiah, we may learn, as He taught the two disciples, not to take an estimate of the counsels of God by the designs of men; for God by ways contrary to human judgment brings to pass the purposes of his eternal providence. The glories of Christ were not made pompous by human circumstances: his kingdom was spiritual: He was to enter into felicity through the gate of death: He refused to do miracles before Herod, and yet did them before the people: He confuted his accusers by silence; and did not descend from the cross, when they offered to believe in Him, if He would, but left them to be persuaded by greater arguments of his power, the miraculous circumstances of his death, and the glories of his resurrection: and by walking in the secret paths of the divine counsels hath commanded us to adore his footsteps, to admire and revere his wisdom, to be satisfied with all the events of providence, and to rejoice in Him, if by afflictions He makes us holy, if by persecutions He supports and enlarges his Church, if by death He brings us to life. Provided we arrive at the communion of his felicities, we must let Him choose the way: it being sufficient that He is our guide, and our support, and "our exceeding great reward." For therefore Christ preached to the two disciples going to Emmaus the way of the cross, and the necessity of that passage that the wisdom of God might be glorified, and the conjectures of man ashamed.

2. Whilst his discourse lasted, they knew Him not; but in the breaking of bread He discovered Himself. For He turned their meal into a sacrament, and their darkness to light: and, having to his sermon added the sacrament, opened all their discerning faculties, the eyes of their body, and their understanding too: to represent to us, that, when we are blessed with the opportunities of both those instruments, we want no exterior assistance to guide us in the way to the knowing and enjoying of our Lord. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

[e] Tuesday in Easter Week.] The first lesson for Tuesday morning contains the Ten Commandments, which were communicated to the people from God by the ministry of Moses, wherein he prefigured our Saviour, who was to be a prophet like unto him, that is, who was to bring down a new law from heaven, and more perfectly to reveal the divine will to man. The first lesson at evening represents Moses interceding with God for the children of Israel, for whom (rather than God should impute to them their sins) he desired even to die, and be "blotted out of the book of life;" thereby also typifying Christ, who "died and was made a curse for us." The second lesson for the morning is a farther evidence of our Saviour's resurrection; and that for the evening proves, by his resurrection, the necessity of ours. Wheatly.

salem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre. But God raised him from the dead: and he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also in another Psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: But he whom God raised again saw no corruption. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Beware therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you[f].

The Gospel. St. Luke xxiv. 36.

JESUS himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath [f] This discourse affords a correct notion of St. Paul's preaching. He is addressing those who were believers of the Jewish law, and therefore founds his argument in the early history of their nation, as St. Peter and St. Stephen, for the same reason, had done before him. From the tendency of the Jewish dispensation, and the express language of the prophets, he deduces the necessary and actual appearance of the Saviour Jesus. "Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, (that is, native Jews and devout Gentiles,) to you is the word of this salvation sent;" an expression according with our Saviour's own declaration, that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name" among "all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." A summary of our Lord's death and resurrection is next recited, and a suitable application made. Then follows the grand conclusion to which both the law and the prophets had only been preparatory. "Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins." The justification of man by the faith of Christ, in opposition to the "works of the law," or any human works, is the doctrine of St. Paul, and the true doctrine of the Church. "By him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Neither the purifications of the Jewish law, nor the merits of man, however applied, will be effectual to man's salvation. The one may be preparatory to that happy state, and the other a genuine fruit of faith; but, as a meritorious cause, we must rely solely on the sacrifice of Christ. "The law made nothing perfect, but it was the bringing in of a better hope." Therefore, the same apostle says in another place, "a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law;" a faith productive of every blessed, every sanctifying grace. The apostle concludes this discourse with a solemn warning taken from one of their own prophets, and calculated to make a deep impression on their minds. "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you:" though it be laid before you, in the plainest manner, supported by the clearest and most uncontrovertible evidence.

This passage evidently refers to the approaching ruin of the Jewish people: and this solemn admonition leads to this important conclusion, that the only way, by which a Jew might secure himself from being involved in this national evil, was by embracing Christianity. This indeed is the way, the only way by which all temporal evils may be avoided: at least it is the way by which they may be converted to real and substantial blessings.

Happy shall we be if the application of this passage does not rest upon ourselves! for, though the Jewish veil may not be upon our hearts, yet the darkness of iniquity, and the impenetrable darkness of infidelity, may spread themselves over many souls, even in the brightest region of the Sun of righteousness. That this may not be our case, let us pray, in the language of our Liturgy, that "God, who did teach the hearts of his faithful people, by sending to them the light of his Holy Spirit, would grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgment in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort, through the merits of Jesus Christ not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet. And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. And he took it, and did eat before them. And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his Name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things.

The Collect.

ALMIGHTY Father, who hast given thine only Son to die for our sins, and to rise again for our justification; Grant us so to put away the leaven of malice and wickedness, that we may alway serve thee in pureness of living and truth; through the merits of the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 St. John v. 4.

WHATSOEVER is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood: and it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life[h]. our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with him, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen." Brewster.

[g] The first Sunday after Easter.] Upon the octave, or first Sunday after Easter-day, it was a custom of the ancients to repeat some part of the solemnity which was used upon Easter-day: from whence this Sunday took the name of Low-Sunday, being celebrated as a feast, though of a lower degree than Easter-day itself. In Latin it is called "Dominica in Albis," or rather "pos. Albas, (sc. depositas,)" as some ritualists call it, that is, "the Sunday of putting off the chrysoms;" because those that were baptized on Easter-eve, on this day laid aside those white robes or chrysoms which were put upon them at their baptism, and which were now laid up in the churches, that they might be produced as evidences against them, if they should afterwards violate or deny that faith which they had professed in their baptism. And we may still observe, that the Epistle seems to be the remains of such a solemnity: for it contains an exhortation to new-baptized persons, that are "born of God," to labour to "overcome the world," which at their baptism they had resolved to do. Wheatly.

The Collect for the day reminds us of the reason of Christ's death, namely, our sins; and of the end of his resurrection, namely, our justification: and thence teaches us to pray for grace to serve God aright. Suitable to this is the Epistle, which reminds us of our new birth by Christ's resurrection, and of the blessed fruits and effects of it. The Gospel continues the great subject of Christ's resurrection, and contains the means used for convincing the disciples of the reality of it, the effects it had on them, and the publick blessings that were conferred thereupon. Dr. Hole.

[h] The great and glorious things which our blessed Saviour hath done for mankind, are not intended to excuse his followers from action; but to enable them for it, and to render them successful in it. Therefore, from the contemplation of that conquest, which by his death and resurrection He hath already won, the Church very fitly and naturally leads us, in the Epistle for this day, to that, which every disciple of Jesus is expected to aspire after, and to gain in his own person. The world is one of those enemies, against which every Christian engages solemnly and formally, at the instant of taking that profession upon himself in baptism. And our entering into this covenant, the new relations we contract there, the new life we then begin and engage to lead, and the communications of God's Holy Spirit, received in that sacrament, to strengthen and enable us to persevere, in the faithful discharge of those engagements, do in effect make up our second and

The Gospel. St. John xx. 19.

THE same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut, where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. And when he had so said, he shewed unto them his hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord. Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained[1].

spiritual birth. So that the persons "born of God" are baptized and faithful Christians; and the Scripture now in hand does not only imply the necessity such lie under of fighting and conquering, by saying, that "whatsoever is born of God, overcometh the world;" but it acquaints us, what weapon is put into their hands for that purpose, by adding, "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

By the "victory" we are to understand the means or instrument of obtaining it; and by "our faith" is intended the belief of the Christian religion, as it is delivered down to us in the Gospel, and summarily contained at ver. 5, in this one article, that "Jesus is the Son of God." Hereby are implied, a firm assent to the truth of his doctrines, a stedfast reliance upon the merit of his sufferings, and an assured expectation of his glorious promises; doctrines, which a person divine could not have taught, had they not been true; sufferings, which, because undergone by a person divine, cannot but be of infinite worth and efficacy; promises, which a person divine can and will make good to the uttermost; and therefore to men, whose minds are possessed with this belief, the difficulty of overcoming the world is more than balanced, by that absolute certainty of a future reward, and by the excellence of that reward; a reward incomparably, unconceivably beyond any happiness this world can give: a reward peculiar to them, who are content to despise and reject the present loss, in prospect of the distant greater bliss; which this Son of God hath pledged his truth most solemnly for; nay, hath already invested human nature in, by exalting our flesh to the right hand of the Majesty on high.

In virtue of this faith it was, that difficulties and dangers, scourgings and imprisonments, tortures and death, have been encountered, endured, defeated, triumphed over, by that glorious and invincible army of prophets, apostles, and martyrs, who have fought this good fight, and approved themselves more than conquerors in it. And what should hinder us from being equally successful? Their passions and infirmities were the same. Our arms and assistances are the same. Human nature, and the Christian religion, continue unchangeable in every age of the Church. They conquered not through their own strength, but through Him "that loved them;" and He "that loved them" loveth us also, Rom. viii. 37. And, provided we be careful not to degenerate from such principles and such examples, He will be equally ready to sustain us in our combat, and to recompense us for it, and after it, with the same crown of life and righteousness. Dean Stanhope.

[1] It is to be observed here, that Christ renewed his disciples' commission for the work of the ministry. They were probably much discouraged with the remembrance of their faint-heartedness in the time of his sufferings: He now therefore commissions them anew, and sends them forth with these words, "As my Father hath sent me," that is, to preach, plant, and to propagate the Gospel, "even so send I you." By the same authority, and for the same ends in part, for which I was sent by my Father, do I send you; namely, to gather, to govern, and instruct my Church. Hence we learn, that when Christ left the world, He did not leave the Church destitute of a regular ministry for the Gospel, which should continue to the end of the world. As Christ was sent by his Father, so are his ministers sent by Him; and having the same authority and commission, they may expect the same success and blessing; and the contempt, cast upon them and their message, ultimately reflects on God and Christ, whose messengers they are. Burkitt.

By Christ "sending" his apostles, as his "Father sent him," we are to understand his owning, asserting, protecting, and succeeding their labours and their persons, as his Father had done to Him and his. Of this no reasonable question can be made, by any, who consider his discourse to those disciples in the 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters of this Gospel; the manner of his recommending them to God in the 17th, or the leave He took of them at his ascent into heaven, Matt xxviii. 18—20. From hence results the firmest assurance, that the constant peculiar providence of God shall attend them, that his grace shall assist them, that the marks of his favour shall follow them, in the discharge of their duty. That they shall not want the pleasing comfort of seeing their pious endeavours prosper in their hands; or, if they do, that then their perseverance and patience shall be taken into the account; and, the less joy they have here, the greater recompense shall be reserved for them hereafter. That shall be measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over, poured into their bosom. At which time also they will not fail to see the signal vengeance, and eternal condemnation, of those incorrigible creatures, who would not be persuaded by their advice, nor amended by their reproofs. And, though this last be but a melancholy contemplation, and such as they would much rather wish there were no occasion for; yet it is such a method, as the justice of God and the necessary vindication of truth require. Even that they, who will not glorify God by their obedience, shall do it, whether they will or not, by suffering most terribly for their disobedience.

It were therefore much the wisest way, for men to "account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God," 1 Cor. iv. 1: since He vouchsafes to esteem us so, who hath promised to be "with us always, even unto the end of the world," Matt. xxviii. 20. And those that are serious and holy will ever esteem us so. A profligate person or a profligate people, is never more certainly distinguished than by giving themselves a liberty of vilifying their clergy. For it is not the man, but the employment, that gives disgust; and religion itself is struck at through the sides of those, who administer its offices. This, I am aware, is a very tender point. And if we, with St. Paul,

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter ii. 19.

THIS is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously: who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls[l].

attempt to "magnify our office," what he did, out of conscience, we shall be thought to do out of no very commendable principle. Since therefore we are looked upon too nearly interested, to be well heard in a cause so much our own; let one speak for us, who is above all exception, and who will be heard at every one's utmost peril. Now to those who labour to render us and our profession odious and contemptible, the Holy Ghost applies Himself, among others, in these two very remarkable passages. The one, that of our blessed Saviour, "He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me," Luke x. 16. The other, that of St. Paul, "He that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who also hath given us of his Spirit," 1 Thess. iv. 8. The sum whereof is, that they, who use the representatives of Christ ill, would use their Master so too, if they had the same power and opportunities. How much better would it become men, who call themselves Christians, to consider the importance and end of our "high calling," and to "esteem us very highly in love for our work's sake?" 1 Thess. v. 13. For an esteem no doubt there is due to the character and profession; which no personal defects in him, that bears it, can absolve men wholly from paying. But even for these, and indeed for all the rest, it should be the constant and most fervent desire of every private Christian, that it would please God to "illuminate" every "bishop, priest, and deacon, with true knowledge and understanding of his word," and "that both by their preaching and living they may set it forth and shew it accordingly." Which may our good Lord grant, for Jesus Christ's sake. Dean Stanhope.

[k] The second Sunday after Easter.] The Collect for this day reminds us of a double end, for which God the Father gave us his Son; and teaches us to apply them by thankfulness and imitation of his holy life. The Epistle for the day sets before us that admirable pattern, so remarkable under sufferings, and so deserving of our imitation. And the Epistle having in its close spoken of Him as the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, from whom we have erred and strayed like lost sheep, the Gospel sets Him before us in the character of a shepherd, noticing particularly his great love and care for his sheep. Dr. Hole.

[l] The principal lesson that we have to learn from hence, is to have regard to the cause of our sufferings; that they be only for a good cause, and not the just demerit of our faults. To suffer for Christ, or for "righteousness' sake," is a matter of great joy, and will be attended with an ample reward, for "blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile and persecute you, for great is your reward in heaven," Matt. v. 10—12. St. Peter advises all Christians to take heed, "that they suffer not as murderers, or thieves, or evil-doers, or as busybodies in other men's matters, yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed," 1 Pet. iv. 15; intimating, that it is no matter of glory, but of shame, to suffer for our vices and enormities.

"But if ye suffer for righteousness' sake," saith the apostle, "happy are ye:" and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled, only sanctify God in your hearts, and labour to have and to keep a good conscience, that whereas they speak of you as evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. "For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing;" therein following the example of our Saviour, "who suffered for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God," 1 Pet. iii. 14—18.

Lastly, Let the sense of our returning to Christ, the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, and being made conformable to Him in all our sufferings in a good cause, teach us to lift up our heads, and rather to rejoice than repine at such tribulations. Our Saviour Himself was made perfect by sufferings; He received not the crown, before He had endured the cross; and truly our way to eternal life is gladly to suffer with Him. He, that is too delicate and tender to bear any hardship for his Saviour, is not worthy of Him, and shall never receive any benefit by his sufferings; such a one will soon make shipwreck of faith and a good conscience, and in time of temptation will fall away. They, that do so, will be disowned by Him in the last day, and be doomed for ever to depart from Him: whereas, by adhering to Him in the time of trial and persecution, we engage Him in time of need to stand by us: and if we suffer with Him, we shall be glorified together. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel. St. John x. 11.

JESUS said, I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep. The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd[m].

[m] The Epistle concludes with giving to our blessed Saviour the title of "Shepherd and Bishop of our souls." The Gospel does not only introduce that Saviour taking that denomination to Himself; but giving a reason, why it belonged to Him, in a manner so peculiar, that no other can presume to lay the like claim to it. The ground of this is laid in a degree of love, so tender and so costly, as none beside ever came up or near to; no less than laying down his own life for the benefit and preservation of his flock, which otherwise must inevitably have fallen a prey to that ravening wolf, whose constant practice it is to hunt and devour poor defenceless souls. Dean Stanhope.

From the character of the Shepherd of his flock thus taken to Himself by our blessed Saviour, the following duties appear to arise, and press upon us.

1. We may remark, that, as the very title of the shepherd implies a flock, so Christ hath left it for the characteristic mark of his flock, that they who belong to it in sincerity and truth, will be ready evermore to listen to his counsels, and to hear his voice. He calls to us, in his word and precepts, that we may love that fellowship, to which He joined Himself, and over which He holds a never-ceasing charge. He calls to us jointly that we may cleave to that communion, and keep together in untainted and safe pastures; and that we may disappoint the arts of such as lie in wait to deceive or to destroy. Christ calls us to Him by his teaching and example. Nor does He spare to give the flock that food of which He spake, whilst He went before them in his earthly course. He gave the Jewish people bread by miracle, when He was touched with their bodily necessities; at which time too He declared, that "they were as sheep having no shepherd:" but He reproved them, when He found that too many of them followed Him for that food only. He exhorted them to labour for the meat which doth not perish; and such at all times should be our care and endeavour.

He, who provided so effectually for his flock, established and ordained the special channels and appointed means for such supplies. He left the font of baptism for ever open, as Abraham dug his wells for succeeding generations. He instituted a perpetual grant of the bread of life and blessing for his people; not laying up corn, as Joseph did, for a seven years' famine, but giving the true bread of life, for ever, to his people.

Let us remember the great duty of cleaving to that faithful Guide, who humbled Himself to seek that which was lost, and brought it to his own fold, on his shoulders, rejoicing. If a flock without a shepherd be the truest image of a state of danger and destruction, let us remember also that guilt is added to the danger, when they, who, in past time, were without a shepherd, shall flee from Him, when He is indeed come to gather them from brinks and precipices, and to fold them in perpetual safety.

It is one fold, under one shepherd, however parcelled out according to the bounds of diverse nations. There is one well of life in baptism; one food of doctrine and communion: one rule of discipline, in which the duties of the pastor and the flock are marked out and prescribed.

Let us then so live in Christian fellowship and concord, in strict integrity of mind and conscience; in holiness of life; in faith and charity: returning to the fold of safety by a swift repentance, if at any time we shall have strayed from it into devious ways, and abiding stedfast in that happy and secure enclosure, in the unity of the Spirit, and the bond of peace; looking forward to that glad day when the Christian fold shall be made to enlarge its bounds; when the flock shall be more fully gathered under one good Shepherd Jesus Christ, the righteous, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be ascribed all honour, worship, and praise, henceforth, and for evermore. Archdeacon Pott.

[n] The third Sunday after Easter.] Hitherto since Easter, the Church hath been as it were overwhelmed in the joyful meditation of Christ's resurrection from the dead, or chiefly about it, and that hath been the subject of all the Collects since then. Now in this Collect (as somewhat also in one of the readings aforegoing) the Church reflects upon that other ancient paschal solemnity, the general baptism that was used at that time; so that this Collect is for the new baptized, or new regenerates by baptism; desiring Almighty God, "who shews the light of his truth to them that be in error," enlightening them by baptism (which was therefore called "illumination," and the baptized "the enlightened") to grant them "that be admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion," namely, by baptism, "that they may eschew those things that are contrary to their profession," or vow in baptism, &c. Though this custom of general baptism at Easter be not in use now, yet this Collect is still seasonable, as a general anniversary commemoration of the great blessings received from God by our baptism, and our solemn vow and profession made to Him therein.

The ancients were wont to observe an anniversary commemoration of their baptism; they, that were baptized at Easter the year before, came the year following, the same day, to the church, and solemnly with oblations, and other religious offices, commemorated the anniversary day of their new birth. Though our Church does not in every particular observe the same

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter ii. 11.

DEARLY beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may, by your good works which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the King, as supreme; or unto governours, as unto them that are sent by him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness; but as the servants of God. Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the King°.

The Gospel. St. John xvi. 16.

JESUS said to his disciples, A little while and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while and ye shall see me; because I go to the Father. Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father? They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell what he saith. Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye enquire among yourselves of that I said, A little while and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while and ye shall see me? Verily, verily I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. A woman, when she is in travail, hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she custom, yet she draws near to the ancient practice in this solemn, though general, anniversary commemoration of baptism this day, minding us all this day of our baptism, and our vow made therein, and praying to God to enable us all to keep it. And for this very reason does she appoint children to be baptized, upon Sundays, and other holy-days, when most people are present, that they may be put in remembrance of their own profession made to God in baptism. Preface before Baptism. And happy were it for us, if we would make good use of this care of the Church, by often remembering that solemn vow, by which we have dedicated ourselves to God to be an holy people; the wilful breach of which vow is horrid sacrilege.

In the Gospel our Saviour tells his disciples, that though they "should weep and lament" (by reason of his death) "their sorrow should be turned into joy, which no man should take from them;" namely, after his resurrection. And such joy belongs to this time, and to us in it, if we be also his true disciples and followers; which how we may be, the Epistle shews, by minding us of what we promised and vowed, when we were admitted into Christ's school, and gave up our names to Him, "the abstaining from fleshly lusts, and having honest conversation" in all our relations. And this is the main drift of the whole Epistle (the first of St. Peter) out of which this is taken; to persuade them that were born again, and lately become Christians, to walk suitably to such an holy profession, and that chiefly in regard "of the lively hope, unto which they were begotten again by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead;" and so is most agreeable to the Church's meditations this day and season. Bp. Sparrow.

° In compliance with the intreaties of the apostle in this Epistle, let us carefully eschew all sinful lusts, as contrary and disagreeable to our profession; and follow honesty in all our dealings, submission to our superiors, with a right use of our Christian liberty; giving honour to all men, love to our brethren; and joining to these the fear of God, and honouring the king, as things agreeable to the religion we profess, and answering the end and designs of it.

To this we stand obliged by the decency of the thing, it being highly fit and reasonable, that we should be and do as we pretend; and likewise by the great indecency of the contrary, it being grossly absurd and unbecoming, to pretend to great things and to do nothing like it. Again, the honour of our persons and profession requires us to walk worthy of both. When we live by the rules and precepts of Christianity, we bring credit to our religion and ourselves, whereas both are disparaged by an unsuitable conversation; yea, we reflect dishonour upon Christ, and bring an evil report upon his ways, when we act contrary to what we profess, and wear his livery only as a cloke for our sinful practices.

Lastly, our own interest obliges us to act suitably to our profession; it being a matter of great comfort to us here, and of a much greater reward hereafter, for such will surely find an entrance into their Master's joy, and be made for ever happy with Him; when the titular and nominal Christian, that usurps the name of Christ, without living answerably to it, shall be for ever ex-

The fourth Sunday after Easter[q].

The Collect.

Jer. x. 23. James i. 17. Phil. ii. 13.

O Almighty God, who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto thy people, that they may love the thing which thou commandest, and desire that which thou dost promise; that so, among the sundry and manifold changes of the world, our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found;

Ps. cxix. 5. 2 Pet. i. 3, 4.

Heb. xi. 26.

through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. St. James i. 17.

EVERY good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of his own will begat he us with the Word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted Word, which is able to save your souls[r].

cluded from his presence, and have his portion with hypocrites and unbelievers, which it will concern us above all things to prevent. Dr. Hole.

[p] The words of this Gospel, spoken to the disciples in a very critical juncture, are of very comfortable import, and, if duly considered, will have a like effect upon us, as they had upon them, in proportion as our circumstances and theirs agree. But surely those Christians are without excuse, who do not improve them to these two purposes at least:

1. To quicken us in the pursuit after so excellent a joy. There is this good correspondence between the offices of the day, that the Gospel enforces the exhortation in the Epistle, of considering ourselves as "strangers and pilgrims," and so cutting those desires short, the objects whereof can stay with us but "a little while." And the Collect prayeth for grace to "eschew those things that are contrary to our" Christian "profession, and to follow all such things as are agreeable to the same." To which nothing can be more contrary, than a sensual and worldly mind; nor any thing more agreeable, than such earnest desires, and zealous endeavours, after future and spiritual happiness, as will not suffer themselves to be diverted by any treacherous allurements here below.

2. The other use we should make of this Gospel is to compose our minds in time of trouble. Let us consider, that this cannot last always, that patience bringeth forth precious fruit, and that it will be our own fault, if our labours and sufferings do at last prove abortive. Let us set the "lightness" of the "affliction" against the "weight of glory," and the "momentary" passage of the one against the "eternal" stability of the other. For this would be sure to cast the scale, and enable us, in humble imitation of our blessed Master, to "endure the cross for the joy that is set before us." Put the utmost and worst of the case, that we are called to "resist unto blood;" yet even in death, we have this reflection to support us, that there is but that one "pain more," and then "the man is born." Born into a world of bliss and immortality, to a life of "joy" most exquisite and ravishing to the "heart," and that "a joy which no man taketh from him." That joy may God of his infinite mercy make us all partakers of, through the merits and mediation of Him, who hath shed his blood to purchase it for us, Jesus Christ the Son of his love, to whom with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be all honour and glory, now and for ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[q] The fourth Sunday after Easter.] This Collect is fit for this paschal time from Easter to Pentecost, a time of greatest joy; the Church therefore prays that we may rightly observe the time, be full of joy in a joyful time, and withal that our joy may be a true and real joy, that our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found: such joys as Christ's resurrection and the promised Comforter afford. And one or both of these two grand occasions of joy and exultation (to wit, Christ's resurrection, and the promise of the Comforter) are the principal subject of the Gospels from Easter to Whitsuntide; but lest our joy should grow presumptuous and luxuriant (as joy is apt to exceed), the Epistles for the same time admonish us of duties answerable, to believe in Christ, to rise from the grave of sin, to be patient, loving, meek, charitable, &c.; having our Lord for an example, and the promise of his Spirit for our guide, strength, and comfort. Bp. Sparrow.

[r] From this passage we should learn, 1. To ascribe with all possible thankfulness every advantage we enjoy, whether of nature, of fortune, or of grace, to the good God alone, who is the giver of them. 2. Hence we are likewise taught, where in particular to lay the inestimable benefit of our spiritual regeneration and salvation. That it is intirely owing to God, and an instance of his free and undeserved grace. 3. It is observable, that He assigns to the "word of truth" a part in this work; and such a part as intimates it to be the instrumental cause of our new and spiritual birth. With regard to which "word" he lays down directions for our behaviour in the three following verses, importing that we make use of all proper means and opportunities for being instructed in this "word," and so understanding our duty: that we be modest, and do not take upon ourselves to be teachers, through a vain conceit of our own sufficiency: that we endeavour to govern our passions, particularly that of anger, and cultivate its opposite virtue, meekness: and that we lay apart that sensuality and those fleshly lusts, which are irreconcilable with the purity of heart and life injoined by the Gospel. Lastly, we may observe the significance of that metaphor which commands

The Gospel. St. John xvi. 5.

JESUS said unto his disciples, Now I go my way to him that sent me, and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou? But, because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart. Nevertheless, I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgement: of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgement, because the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you[s].

us to receive the "ingrafted" word. Ingrafting, it is well known, incorporates one sort of plant with a tree of another: by which means the old stock is not destroyed, but a new quality so superinduced, that the fruit is from thenceforth changed, and made more generous. Thus the "word" must be thoroughly joined to us, and made of a piece with us: it must penetrate, and mingle with, and influence, every faculty of our minds. The wild suckers, which sprout from the old sour stock, must be cut low and kept under, that the new scion may receive nourishment, and shoot more vigorously. Thus nature is not taken away, but its luxuriances pared off. Our appetites are not extinguished, but improved, and turned to nobler objects. Our affections (according to the Collect for the day), from being unruly, alter their taste; and from henceforth "love that which God commands, and desire that which He does promise:" and by making this happy change in our originally corrupt temper and inclinations, and so becoming a principle of a new and nobler product, we "have our fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." And thus it is, that "the ingrafted word" becomes "able to save our souls." Dean Stanhope.

[s] The Holy Ghost is here spoken of as guiding the apostles into all truth. A consideration of the true import of the guidance ascribed to Him may enable us to judge what method He usually takes in the ordinary operations of his grace.

1. He is a guide to Christians, in the sense of one who leads a traveller on the way. He directs them what course to take, He warneth them against the pits and precipices, the difficulties and by-paths, by which, if destitute of such direction, they might wander, or perish in their journey; and so He brings them forward in that holiness, of which Himself is the perfection, and the brightest pattern.

2. He is a guide, inasmuch as He assists and supports men in their passage. This sort of guidance the Holy Spirit performs, when He condescends to our infirmities, accommodates Himself to our capacities, and imparts his gifts and graces; not according to his own fulness and power to give, but in such proportions, as the vessels, into which they are poured, are qualified to receive them.

3. A guide is one who performs the office of a master or teacher. Such a guide is the Holy Ghost. He enlightens dark eyes, but by such illumination, as supposes a willingness to see. He leads men into paths of holiness and salvation, but then He expects a readiness to follow. He gives ability to perform that, which without Him never could be done; but it is that, which will not be done neither, without our own pains and concurrence. "The meek" (says David) "he will guide in judgment, and the meek shall he learn his way," Ps. xxv. 9. But still they are "meek." And, although He strengthen our weakness, and inspire our dispositions, and assist our endeavours, to be good; yet is He no where said, by an almighty and irresistible operation, to compel the obstinate, or to drag men along whether they will or no.

Hence it will be no difficult matter, to reconcile those texts of Scripture, which attribute our sanctification and salvation to the "word," with some others which give the same effects to the "Spirit" of God. The short is, this is the efficient, that the instrumental, cause. We cannot come to Christ, except we be drawn; and it is his Spirit that draws us; and He draws us by the word. He gives a new turn to our thoughts and inclinations, disposes us to hearken, and consider, and endeavour; and then He renders those actions and endeavours successful. So that all this is effected by application of proper means, by seasonable suggestions, by influences so gentle and sweet, that all is done with us, and in us. The work is so much the Spirit's, that if we be tractable and willing to do our part, He will not fail to do his: and it is so much our own too, that, if we refuse or neglect our part, He will not do it, either for us, or without us.

So great agreement may we easily perceive, between the Epistle and the Gospel for this day: the "word of truth begets" us, and the "Spirit of truth guides" us. So exactly alike are the predispositions, necessary for profiting by both. I conclude, therefore, with most earnestly exhorting every man, as He values his salvation, so to receive the one, and submit to the conduct of the other, that each may attain its proper effect upon him: and, since "Almighty God alone can order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men;" let us not be wanting to pray, with our Church, that He would "grant unto" all his "people, to love the thing which he commandeth, and desire that which he doth promise: that so, among the sundry and manifold changes of the world, our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." Dean Stanhope.

The fifth Sunday after Easter[t].

The Collect.

James i. 17. O Lord, from whom all good things do come; Grant to us thy humble servants, that by thy holy inspiration we may think 2 Cor. iii. 5. James i. 22. those things that be good, and by thy merciful guiding may perform the same; through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Epistle. St. James i. 22.

BE ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the Word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world[u].

[t] The fifth Sunday after Easter.] The Gospel before promised a Comforter: the Epistle and Gospel this day direct us, what to do to obtain that promise. Two conditions are required on our parts for the receiving of that promised Comforter: first, prayers or rogations, this the Gospel teaches, "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full: secondly, to love God, and keep his commandments, John xiv. 15; this the Epistle exhorts to, "See that ye be doers of the Word," &c. The Collect prays, that we may feel the fruits and comforts of this Holy Spirit in our hearts by good thoughts and abilities to perform them. Bp. Sparrow.

[u] By resembling the "word" to a glass, it is the apostle's intention to convince the "hearers only," and "not doers," that they mistake the very end and proper use of "the word." For the use of a glass is to represent men to themselves. But the end of that representation is, not that they may sit, and contemplate, and fall into rapturous admiration of their own imagined beauty; but that they may see, and so see, as to correct whatever upon that view is found to be amiss. It is thus they are to take effectual care, that their persons and habit be comely and composed; which could not be taken, unless this beholding of their own image had made them sensible how matters are, and how they ought to be with them.

Such is the use and end of the "word" too. By comparing the contents of this with our own dispositions and actions, we may distinctly learn the state of our own souls: and, as that is found to agree or to disagree with the will of God, we have there, not only an opportunity of knowing ourselves, but a certain rule and model whereby to amend ourselves. They who will not look into this glass, are not so much as hearers: they who look carelessly, and straightway forget their form, are the hearers, without right application, and that practice which would certainly follow thereupon: for this is a glass which flatters none, who are content to hold it fairly, and take the report it gives; a glass, which, men are sensible enough, ought not to be held in vain. But then they are more entertained with the reflections of other people's visages than their own. You shall have them very acute in discovering blemishes and imperfections, and recommending this correction upon their account; ingenious and ready to apply every smart thing they read, every sermon they hear, to their neighbours, and wonderfully pleased to think, how such a one's picture hath been drawn to the life: but in all this they can find no likeness of, no concern for, any fault or failing in the proper place. Hence it is, I mentioned a right application of the word: for this glass is intended to shew, not others to us, but every man to himself: to inform us what we are, in order to make us what we should be; not to divert us with the spots and deformities of our brethren; for this would prove the certain way to keep us, nay, and to render us yet a great deal more, what we should not be. Such false appliers and censurers are always too busy abroad, not to overlook that at home, which, of all the rest, stands in most need of being nicely looked into. And, whoever they be, that turn this glass another way, casting off all the discoveries made by it from themselves, and becoming judges of their brother's liberty and conscience; they are the very hypocrites reproved by our Lord for employing themselves about the mote in another's eye, without regarding the beam in their own. And how "religious" soever they may "seem," depend upon it, all their "religion is vain."

And so is theirs likewise, who reduce the Christian religion to a mere science, and place all perfection in reading, and hearing, and knowing the precepts of it; who measure their proficiency by the number of sermons they run about to attend, or the good books they are eager to peruse; or by the niceness of the points they are able to argue upon: as if the word had done its business by filling the head, though it never influence the heart at all. A sort of understanding this, to which even ignorance itself, when honest and unaffected, is infinitely preferable. For so our Lord Himself pronounced, "that servant which knew his master's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes: but he that knew not," (that is, was not in a capacity of knowing,) "and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes," Luke xii. 47, 48. Alas! it is action only that crowns all our studies. The word is of equal service and necessity, for quickening and exciting us to what we already do, as for instructing us in what we do not yet understand. It is not said, "Happy are ye if ye know these things;" but, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," John xiii. 17. In short, to be wise in spiritual matters, is no farther an advantage, than as it disposes us to be good, for that alone is being "wise unto salvation." And he, in the Christian sense, knows most, who leads his life best.

So great reason have all those well-meaning people to be very jealous over their own hearts, who use a very commendable industry indeed, in learning the pre-

The Gospel. St. John xvi. 23.

VERILY, verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full. These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs: the time cometh when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly of the Father. At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; for the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God. I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father. His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb. Now are we sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee: by this we believe that thou camest forth from God. Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe? Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered every man to his own, and shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me. These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world[x].

cepts of this law: so much it concerns them to examine, by the marks laid down under my former head, what effect they feel upon their temper and behaviour. And whether, after so frequent, and so zealous, I had almost said, such infinite hearing, they be not like the men of voracious appetites, who eat much and greedily, but digest and thrive by nothing; for such are sometimes the keenest and devoutest hearers; deceived by the quantity they take in, and still "hearers" only. And therefore so seasonable and important is the petition of our Church this day; that "He, from whom all good things do come," would "grant us, not only by his holy inspiration to think those things that be good, but by his merciful guiding to perform the same, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen." Dean Stanhope.

[x] It may be useful to consider what our Saviour means in this place by calling on his disciples to "be of good cheer."

1. The being of "good cheer" under "tribulation" does by no means infer that firmness of mind, (as some philosophers of old miscalled it) which preserves the man from being at all affected with calamities, or moved from his usual easiness of temper. How far human nature might be beholden to them, who bestowed this fanciful perfection upon it, is not worth staying to examine: let it suffice to observe, that religion is not at all obliged by it; for the Gospel no where goes about to delude us with romantick notions: it tells no man upon a cross, or in a fire, that he feels no pain; or that such pain is nothing to him, because it cannot reach his soul: and yet, it commands every man to continue stedfast in his duty, notwithstanding the most exquisite tortures to deter him from it. It is entirely suited to the condition and common sense of mankind, and would not require more constancy in suffering, if it did not furnish more substantial comforts, than any other system in the world: in short, Christianity leaves nature, and its passions, in the proper exercise of their powers; offers no false ideas of things without us, which experience will be sure to prove false, when we most need and wish to find them true; but it allows the tenderest sense of pain and grief, and yet contrives a way to conquer that sense, and sustain our spirits under the utmost weight of them.

2. This command to be of "good cheer" belongs to such "tribulation" only, as the hand of God brings upon us. The sufferings of these disciples, in propagating the faith, seem to have been principally in our Lord's view at this time; and for these He had long since declared them "blessed." But He had also directed them to join the "wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove," Matt. v. 10—12, x. 16; and made prudence, as well as perseverance in goodness, a truly Christian duty. When, therefore, men court danger, and draw upon themselves unnecessary sufferings, it is not the best cause, nor the best meaning in the world, that will bear such people out, or entitle them to the comforts of persecuted Christians. For these in truth do suffer, not for Christ's and righteousness' sake, but for their own humour and folly, the enthusiasm of a mistaken, or the heat of an indiscreet, zeal.

3. But, though by "being of good cheer when we have tribulation," be not meant, either that we should be insensible, or that we should be fond of it; yet thus much certainly is meant, that neither the sharpness of any affliction we feel, nor the terror of any we fear, should so far vanquish our reason and religion, as to drive us upon unlawful methods, for declining the one, or delivering ourselves from the other. We are to satisfy ourselves in the justice, the wisdom, the goodness, of Him, who orders all our events to us; to entertain them all with meekness and much patience; to bring our will into subjection to the divine will; to rejoice in the testimony of a good conscience, and preserve this at any rate, though with the hazard, nay, the certain loss of all our worldly advantages: and to set the supports and the rewards of persecuted truth, or afflicted piety, in opposition to all the discouragements and pressures from abroad, and all the frailties of feeble, and too yielding, flesh and blood at home. This is the "good cheer" our Lord requires, and hath Himself contributed to, "by overcoming the world." Dean Stanhope.

About the middle of the fifth century, Mamercus, Bishop of Vienne, upon the prospect of some particular calamities that threatened his diocese, appointed that extraordinary prayers and supplications should be offered up with fasting to God, for averting those impendent evils, upon the three days immediately pre-

For the Epistle. Acts i. 1.

THE former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the Apostles whom he had chosen: to whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs: being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God: and, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence. When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

ceding the day of our Lord's ascension; from which supplications (which the Greeks call "Litanies," but the Latins "Rogations") these days have ever since been called "Rogation-days." For some few years after, this example was followed by Sidonius, Bishop of Clermont, (though he indeed hints that Mamercus was rather the restorer, than the inventor of the Rogations,) and in the beginning of the sixth century the first council of Orleans appointed that they should be yearly observed.

2. In these facts the Church had a regard, not only to prepare our minds to celebrate our Saviour's ascension after a devout manner; but also, by fervent prayer and humiliation, to appease God's wrath, and deprecate his displeasure, that so He might avert those judgments which the sins of the nation deserved; that He might be pleased to bless the fruits with which the earth is at this time covered, and not pour upon us those scourges of his wrath, pestilence, and war, which ordinarily begin in this season.

3. At the Reformation, when all processions were abolished by reason of the abuse of them, yet, for retaining the "Perambulation of the Circuits of Parishes," it was ordered, "That the people shall once a year at the time accustomed, with the curate and substantial men of the parish, walk about the parishes, as they were accustomed, and at their return to church make their common prayers. Provided that the curate, in the said common perambulations, used heretofore in the days of Rogations, at certain convenient places, shall admonish the people to give thanks to God, in the beholding of God's benefits, for the increase and abundance of his fruits upon the face of the earth, with the saying of the 104th Psalm, Benedic, Anima mea, &c. At which time also the same minister shall inculcate this and such like sentences, Curseth he he which translateth the bounds and doles of his neighbour, or such other order of prayer as shall be hereafter appointed." No such prayers indeed have been since published; but there is a homily appointed, which is divided into four parts; the three first to be used upon the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and the fourth upon the day when the parish make their procession. Wheatly.

[y] The Ascension Day.] Forty days after his resurrection, our blessed Saviour publickly ascended with our human nature into heaven, and presented it to God, who placed it at his own right hand, and by the reception of those first-fruits sanctified the whole race of mankind. As a thankful acknowledgment of which great and mysterious act of our redemption, the Church hath from the beginning of Christianity set apart this day for its commemoration; and for the greater solemnity of it, our Church in particular hath selected such peculiar offices as are suitable to the occasion; as may be seen by a short view of the particulars. Wheatly.

This day hath proper lessons as well as Psalms. The first lesson at Morning Service is Deut. x; wherein is recorded Moses's going up into the mount to receive the law from God, to deliver it to the Jews, a type of Christ's ascension into heaven to send down the new law, the law of faith; "For when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men, apostles, evangelists, pastors, and teachers," to publish the new law to the world, Eph. iv. 8. The first lesson at Evening Service is 2 Kings ii; wherein Elias's ascending into heaven was a type of Christ's ascension; but Christ went far beyond his type in many particulars. Elias went up with a single chariot, but Christ was attended with thousands, Ps. lxviii. 17. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels, and the Lord" ascending "is among them." Elias, upon his ascension, doubled his spirit upon Elisha; but Christ gave such an abundance of the Holy Spirit to his disciples upon his ascension, that they not only were filled with it themselves, but it ran over upon others from them; "by laying on of hands," they imparted it to others, Acts viii. 17.

Thus the Church hath in the lessons and Gospel preached to us the ascension of Christ, in the type and antitype. In the Epistle she teaches us our duty, not to stand gazing up to heaven, wondering at the strangeness of the sight, but to take heed to demean ourselves so, as that we may with comfort behold Him at his second coming, his coming to judgement, Acts i. 11, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" There is other business to be done; fit yourselves for another coming; for "this same Jesus, which was taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, even as ye have him go into heaven." In the Collect we are taught to pray, that we, as far as may be, may conform to our Lord in his ascension, that "like as we believe him to

And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven [z].

The Gospel. St. Mark xvi. 14.

JESUS appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following [a].

have ascended into the heavens, so may we also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with him continually dwell." Bp. Sparrow.

[z] The portion of Scripture for the Epistle, and that of the Gospel, for this great and solemn day, do both agree in acquainting us how our Lord employed his last minutes with his disciples here upon earth; and how his blessed person was disposed of, when ceasing to converse any longer among men. They relate, that, by a fate very distant from that of common men, his body was not deposited in the grave, whose gates and strong holds He, at his resurrection, had already broken through; but that it was received up on high, and conveyed into heaven. Thus far both passages agree; and then St. Mark adds, that He "sat on the right hand of God."

These two glorious actions make the sixth article of our Creed. The sum whereof will be comprehended in these very few words: "That the same bliss, and glory, and power, which the Son of God did, before his incarnation, enjoy with his Father from all eternity, his human nature is now made partaker of in the highest heavens. That this God-man is invested with an absolute authority and boundless dominion; and does now, in both natures rule, as He shall one day judge, the whole world. That, till that day come, it is the duty of us, and of all mankind, to reverence and obey, to trust in and pray to Him, as our only head and King, our rightful and universal Lord." This is the substance of that, which we are to understand, by "Jesus Christ being received up into heaven, and sitting at the right hand of God." Dean Stanhope.

Concerning the practical uses of the doctrine, see at the end of the Gospel for the day.

[a] From Christ's being exalted to the right hand of God, we may learn the infinite wisdom and justice of God, the Father, in recompensing the sufferings of his Son with so high and honourable a reward.

2. From Christ's exaltation at the right hand of power and glory, we may learn all due reverence and subjection to Him; for "God hath thus highly exalted him, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father," Phil. ii. 9—11. Let us then be subjects of his kingdom of grace here, that we may become the subjects of his kingdom of glory hereafter: subject we must be either to his mercy or his power; for they that will not submit to his golden sceptre, shall be "bruised with his rod of iron, and those his enemies, that will not have him to reign over them, shall be brought forth, and slain before him," Luke xix. 27.

3. From Christ's sitting at the right hand of God, we may learn to triumph over death and the grave in the words of the apostle; "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? but thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. xv. 57.

4. From Christ's sitting at the right hand of God, let us learn by the eye of faith, frequently to look up to him, to enable us to bear up with courage under all the troubles and tribulations of the world; so St. Stephen did; and so the apostle exhorts all good Christians to do, Heb. xii. 2, "Looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

5. From Christ's interceding for us at the right hand of God, let us learn to "come boldly to the throne of grace;" where we have a prevalent Friend and Advocate to obtain grace and mercy for us. And let us so

Ghost to comfort us, and exalt us unto the same place whither our Heb. vi. 17—20 Saviour Christ is gone before, who John xiv. 3. liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter iv. 7.

THE end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins. Use hospitality one to another, without grudging. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God: if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen[c].

rely upon his intercession, as not seek to any other mediators, for there is "one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." Dr. Hole.

Lastly, This ascent, and session of our blessed Master at God's right hand, do lay upon all his followers the strongest obligation to be heavenly-minded. He is said to have "endured," in prospect of "the joy" to follow; Heb. xii. 2; and we, like Him, should keep our eyes, as much as may be, fixed upon that joy: for how shall we ever love what we do not desire? And how shall we desire what we do not value? And how shall we learn to value what we never bestow any thought upon? Now the glories of heaven want no true worth to recommend them; there only needs serious meditation, to render them more familiar and present to our minds: for, the better we grow acquainted with these things, the more ardently we shall be sure to love, and thirst, and pant after them. Let us therefore remember, that we are Christians: that our Lord and leader is gone far above out of our sight; that we are still able to follow Him with the eye of faith; that our true blessedness consists in being with Him; that our main concern lies in another country; and that the affairs of this, in which we now sojourn, are always in some measure to employ our pains, but by no means to possess our hearts. In short, completely happy we cannot be, till we arrive at those blissful mansions, whither our Saviour Christ is gone before: but the nearest approach to happiness, possible to be made by us in the meanwhile, is "in heart and mind thither to ascend, and with Him continually dwell." For this we must labour, for this we must implore the assistance of his grace: and O "thou that sittest at the right hand of God, have mercy upon us: thou that sittest at the right hand of God, receive our prayer. For thou only art holy, thou only art the Lord, thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God the Father. Amen." Dean Stanhope.

[b] Sunday after Ascension Day.] This is called Expectation week: for now the apostles were earnestly expecting the fulfilment of our Lord's promise, "If I go away, I will send the Comforter to you," John xvi. 7. The Epistle exhorts to earnest prayer for the Comforter promised in the Gospel; which exhortation the Church performs in the Collect. It also exhorts us all to make such an use of those gifts which the holy Spirit shall bestow upon us, as becomes good stewards of the manifold grace of God. Bp. Sparrow, Wheatly.

[c] By "the end of all things" mentioned in this Epistle we shall do well to understand that day of the Lord, the terrors of which are described in the 24th chapter of St. Matthew, and the 21st of St. Luke. A revolution of that infinite consequence, that the utmost preparation, possible to be made for it, is all little enough: and a revolution so uncertain, as to the time when it shall overtake us, that our Lord upon all occasions taken to mention it, inculcates the great duty of watchfulness; a duty incapable of being discharged by any who have not attained to a mastery over their sensual appetites, the indulging whereof, to any degree of excess, clouds the reason that it cannot keep awake, and indisposes the mind to every thing serious, that it hath no inclination to consider and provide itself against, the surprises of its spiritual enemy. His temptations can at no time attack us with more fatal advantage, than when unlawful liberties and pleasures have put us off our guard; and, if this be our danger in every common event of life, how much more dreadful is it, with regard to our end, in which whatever we suffer is final and incapable of any reparation? Most seasonably therefore does the apostle here press the duty of sobriety. And, in regard the strength and succour of the very best men is not from themselves, most reasonably does he add "watching unto prayer." Thus treading in the steps of our blessed Saviour, who, on the like occasion, gives the following warning. "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," Luke xxi. 34—36. The only remarks I would leave this particular with, are, (1) That by comparing our Lord and St. Peter together, it appears that sobriety means, not only what we call a temperate use of meats, and drinks, and pleasures, and recreations, and the like, but also a moderating of our desires and pursuits, in the business and advantages of the world. And (2) That there is a mutual subserviency of these virtues to each other; sobriety is unto you, that ye should not be offended. They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me. But these things have I told you, that, when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them[d].

The Collect.

GOD, who as at this time didst teach the hearts of thy faithful people, by the sending to them the necessary to qualify a man for devotion, and prayer as useful to preserve and confirm us in the love of sobriety. Dean Stanhope.

[d] The word in this Gospel rendered "Comforter" is in the original "Paraclete," which signifies three things, a Comforter, an Advocate, and a Teacher or remembrancer: which offices, as they were necessary to the apostles at that time, so will they be to all Christians to the end of the world. This Paraclete is the Holy Ghost, the third Person in the ever-blessed Trinity: and He is truly and properly a Paraclete in all the forementioned senses. 1. He is a Comforter: for He administers consolation capable of bearing up the spirits in all conditions, and communicates joys that are sufficient, not only to keep us from fainting under, but even to make us rejoice in, tribulation. 2. He is an Advocate, or Intercessor, which office he performs for us, partly by acting our cause for us with God, helping us to pray, forming our petitions, and inspiring us with holy affections, Rom. viii. 26; partly by pleading our cause before men, Matt. x. 19; and partly by pleading Christ's cause against the world, John xvi. 8—10. 3. He is a Teacher or Remembrancer: which office he executed for the apostles, by "leading them into all truth, and teaching and bringing all things to their remembrance which Christ had said unto them." And the same He still executes for us, by instructing us out of the holy Scriptures, which are the dictates of the same Spirit; and by bringing to our minds all necessary truths for our benefit and consolation, as occasions shall require.

From Christ's promise then of this Comforter, Advocate, and Instructor, let us be ready to welcome Him for all these purposes. Let us hearken to his consolations in all our troubles and distresses, and be ever willing to receive the cordials He is pleased to administer, to keep us from fainting under them. Let us rely upon Him as our Advocate and Intercessor, against the cry and guilt of our sins; let us cast ourselves upon the merits of Christ's satisfaction, and depend upon his Holy Spirit, who is ever ready to plead our cause, and to make intercession for us. Moreover, let us hearken to the advice and directions of this holy Monitor, both in his private whispers, and more publick instructions; never turning the deaf ear to either, but always listening to that voice, saying to us, "This is the way, walk in it," when we are turning to the right hand, or to the left. And then He who now "guides us by his counsel here, will hereafter bring us to glory." Dr. Hole.

[e] Whit-Sunday.] This day the Holy Ghost came down from heaven upon his Church, as the Epistle tells, according to the promise of the Gospel: in honour of whom and of his gifts we keep this holy day. Bp. Sparrow.

As to the name, the most received opinion is, that the word is at length "White-Sunday:" so called from the white garments worn by the persons baptized in the ancient church. For the administering of which sacrament, Easter, and this, and the Sundays between, were the most solemn seasons. Particularly on this day, the last of those Sundays (when that solemnity determined, and the preparation for it had been extended to the utmost length); as well on that account, as for the deserved veneration due to so great a festival, vast numbers offered themselves to be received to baptism. And, in token of their being cleansed from all past sins, as well as for an emblem of that innocence and purity, to which they then obliged themselves, they were clad in white: and, from the multitude of such vestments then put on, are supposed to have given occasion for this Lord's day being distinguished by that name. Dean Stanhope.

The reason why this time was of old appointed for solemn baptism, was, 1. Because this day the apostles were baptized with the Holy Ghost and fire, Acts ii. 3. 2. Because this day three thousand were baptized by the apostles, Acts ii. 41. In memory of which, the Church ever after held a solemn custom of baptizing at this feast. Bp. Sparrow.

Some conclude from St. Paul's earnest desire of being at Jerusalem at this time, that the observation of it as a Christian festival is as old as the apostles: but, whatever St. Paul's design was, we are assured that it hath been universally observed from the very first ages of Christianity. Wheatly.

This day is called Pentecost, because there are fifty days betwixt the true passover and Whit-Sunday. As there were fifty days from the Jews' passover to the giving of the Law to Moses in Mount Sinai, which Law was written with the finger of God; (for from the fourteenth day of the first month, the day of the passover, to the third day of the third month, the day of the Law's giving, Exod. xix. 1. 16, are fifty days;) so from the true Passover, which was celebrated when Christ was offered up for us, are fifty days to this time, when the Holy Ghost came down upon the Church, to write the new law of charity in their hearts. Upon this meditation, St. Augustine breaks out thus: "Who would not prefer the joy and pleasure of these mysteries, before all the empires of the world? Do you not see, that as the two Seraphim cry one to another, Holy, holy, holy," Isa. vi. 3; "so the two Testaments, Old and New, faithfully agreeing, evince the sacred truth of God?" It should be noted, that we must not count the fifty days from the very day of the passover, but from the Sunday following; and so God directed the Jews, Lev. xxiii. 15, speaking of their Pentecost or Feast of Weeks, "and ye shall count from the morrow after the sabbath; from that day seven weeks shall be complete." Bp. Sparrow.

The first lesson for the morning contains the law of the Jewish Pentecost, or Feast of Weeks, which was a type of ours: for as the Law was at this time given to the Jews from Mount Sinai, so also the Christians upon this day received the new evangelical law from heaven, by the administration of the Holy Ghost. The first lesson for the evening is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles to the kingdom of Christ, through the inspiration of the apostles by the Spirit of God; the completion of which prophecy is recorded in both the second light[f] of thy Holy Spirit; Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgement in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort; through the merits of Christ Jesus our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Epistle. Acts ii. 1.

WHEN the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them: and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed, and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue wherein we were born? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judæa, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews, and Proselytes, Cretes, and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God[g].

The Gospel. St. John xiv. 15.

JESUS said unto his disciples, If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you.

lessons, but especially in the portion of Scripture for the Epistle, which contains a particular description of the first wonderful descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles, who were "assembled together in one place," in expectation of that blessed Spirit, according to the promise of our Saviour mentioned in the Gospel. Wheatly.

The same harmony of Epistle, Gospel, and Collect, and Lessons, and Psalms, that has been observed upon Christmas, and Easter, and Ascension, may with pleasure be mentioned upon this day. Bp. Sparrow.

[f] — by the sending to them the light] "Sending" is in this place a noun; for it is accompanied with the article; nevertheless it is also a transitive verb, for it governs the noun "light" in the objective case: but this is inconsistent. "The sending" is the same with "the mission;" which necessarily requires the preposition "of" after it, to mark the relation between it and "the light:" the mission of the light; and so, "the sending of the light." The phrase would be proper either way: by keeping to the construction of the noun, "by the sending of the light;" or of the participle, or gerund, "by sending the light." Bp. Lowth.

[g] This Scripture relates one of the most important events that ever happened to mankind. For such was the mission of the Holy Spirit, and the pouring out of his miraculous gifts upon the disciples, in a manner most amazing, most effectual for the mighty purposes appointed to be accomplished by their means. An event deservedly commemorated by the Christian church, since the influence of it extends to all ages; and the benefit consequent upon it is no less than the conversion and instruction of a whole world. Upon this occasion first, that power from on high exerted itself, wherewith our Lord promised to endue those delegates, to whom he had committed the care of finishing the great work. A work, which himself declares necessary to have been begun in his own person; but to have been carried on and finished by other hands.

All the circumstances, that concurred to give authority and efficacy to their undertaking, are of great significance and consideration: such in particular are the time, the place, the surprising appearances of this Spirit's descent. But such more especially were the immediate effects it produced, and the condition of the persons so powerfully wrought upon.

Now that effect was "speaking with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance," Acts ii. 4. 7; and the persons who spake thus were all Galileans; natives of a country held in great contempt among the Jews, and, in particular, for being heavy, and ignorant, and unpolished. The men before us were known to be such. Bred up to mean trades, and destitute both of capacity and opportunity to acquire any degree of those abilities, which they now exerted in the utmost perfection. And what could be a more evident proof of God speaking in them, and by them, than the doing of that in an instant, which the study of a whole life could hardly, if at all, qualify any man to do? Here was no room for delusion, where every hearer was a judge for himself; and where those that heard were so many, of regions so distant, and of languages so very different from each other. So amazing are the improvements where God condescends to teach; and so manifestly does it appear, that He teaches immediately by Himself, where art and nature are so far outdone: where the "foolish" are empowered in a moment to "confound the wise:" and the "weak" chosen to "confound the mighty," 1 Cor. i. 27. 29. This

Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know, that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas saith unto him, (not Iscariot,) Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me. These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my Name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do[h].

The Collect.

GOD, who as at this time didst teach the hearts of thy faithful people, by the sending to them the left no room for "flesh to glory in his presence," but proved itself, beyond all contradiction, to be a "power from on high." Dean Stanhope.

[h] This solemnity being consecrated in a peculiar manner to the honour of the blessed Spirit of God, this is a convenient opportunity for setting forth that light, which the Gospel for the day and other passages of Scripture have given us, into the nature of the Holy Ghost.

1. The testimony of Scripture will, I conceive, abundantly justify us in stating that the Holy Ghost is a person, and not a mere quality, or operation. It is confessed, that some passages in the New Testament, where the word "spirit" is used, do carry that sense. And these are such, as by an usual figure of the cause for the effect mean only the gifts and influences of that Spirit. But then some other passages are observable, to which no other signification, but that of a person, can fairly be applied. Thus this Spirit is said to "come," and to "be sent," to "come in the name" of one person upon a message from another; to "receive" from one, and to "shew" to others; to "assist," to "teach," to "guide," to refresh the memories of them, to whom He comes; and to discharge the office of a "paraclete:" all these are attributed to the Spirit in this very discourse to the disciples. Elsewhere we also read of the Spirit "making intercession," of his being "grieved," of his proceeding with discretion and choice, and "dividing" his gifts to "every man severally as he will:" of "blaspheming" Him, of "lying" to Him, of "tempting" Him: of persons being "baptized" into his name, "separated" or consecrated to Him, and "called" by Him to the "work" of the ministry. Rom. viii. 26, 27; Eph. iv. 30; 1 Cor. xii. 11; Matt. xii. 31, 32; Acts v. 3. 9; Matt. xxviii. 19; Acts xiii. 2. Now from hence, I conceive we are abundantly warranted to infer the personality of the Holy Ghost; because such things are here attributed to Him, as cannot, with any propriety of speech, be affirmed of a quality, or operation, or indeed of any but a person.

2. The Gospel for the day does likewise strongly intimate, that the Spirit here spoken of is a divine person. For none but God can know all truth; and none can teach all, who does not know all. None but He, who is essentially united to the Son of God, could bring all those things to remembrance, which the Son had said: because whoever does so, must be privy to all that was said. This argument St. Paul makes use of, and it is drawn indeed from experience and common sense. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of a man, which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God," 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11. Now it is observable, that the argument, of no mind being perfectly known by any but itself, is there alleged in proof of the "Spirit's searching all things, even the deep things of God:" and to shew, how safely we may, upon that account, yield our assent to every thing, which shall by this Spirit be revealed to us; though such as no collections of our own reason can give satisfaction in, or make any discovery of. To these we may add those other passages which call the Holy Spirit "God" and "Lord," Acts xiii. 2; v. 3, 4. 9; which affirm, that He inspired the Messiah, Isa. lxi. 1; Luke iv. 18, &c.; that He spake by the prophets, Isa. vi. 8, 9; compare Acts xxviii. 25, 26; Jer. xxxi. 33; Heb. x. 15, 16; 2 Pet. i. 21; and that by his inhabitation regenerated Christians become living temples and dwellings of God, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19; Eph. ii. 20—22; 2 Cor. vi. 16. As therefore the unity of the Son with the Father is frequently implied by the Father being "seen of him, known by him, light of thy Holy Spirit; Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgement in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort; through the merits of Christ Jesus our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Epistle. Acts x. 34.

THEN Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The Word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ; (he is Lord of all;) that Word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached: how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew, manifesting himself to him, shewing him all that himself doth," and the like: so may the unity of the Holy Ghost with the Father and Son both, be not unfitly gathered, from his "being sent by the Son," and "by the Father in the Son's name; receiving" of the "Son's" and of "the Father's, to shew to the disciples;" (for He is therefore said to receive of the Son's because "all things that the Father hath are the Son's;") John xiv. 26; xvi. 14, 15. So again "teaching," and "calling to mind," all that ever the Son had taught before: especially, if to all this we add, that He is expressly styled, not only "the Spirit of God," and the "Spirit" of the "Father," but the "Spirit" of the "Son," and the "Spirit of Christ," 1 Pet. iv. 14; Eph. iv. 30; Matt. x. 20; Rom. viii. 9; 1 Pet. i. 11; Gal. iv. 6.

3. The texts referred to do also imply that procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son, which the Church hath generally received as a matter of faith. For, though these three Persons be, in all considerations relating to the divine nature, equal; so as that with regard to time, or power, or any other like perfection, none is greater or less than another; yet in dignity, and order of relation, there is some difference. The Father is in this regard supreme, because the original, the source, the root of the Godhead. A Godhead, from all eternity communicated to the Son: who is therefore acknowledged for the second Person: and the same divine nature is again imparted by both these to the Holy Ghost, whose eternal procession from the two former gives Him the third place in the ever-blessed Trinity. This must be confessed a vast and an adorable mystery; too profound for man to penetrate, or distinctly to conceive. For how should a poor worm be able to comprehend the perfections of an infinite God? But since revelation teaches that so it is; reason agrees that it ought to be received with an humble and submissive faith. As God hath not, so I think I might venture to say, that (according to those bounds of perfection, within which He hath thought fit to limit the several beings created by Him) He could not, let men into a complete knowledge of all the depths of the Deity. But then I add, that so much as He hath revealed is sufficient to command our belief of those things, which we cannot perfectly know. And such I take to be the intimations given in this and other Scriptures, of the Holy Ghost being a Person, a divine Person, and a Person proceeding from God the Father, and God the Son. Dean Stanhope.

[1] Monday in Whitsun-week.] The Whitsun-week was not intirely festival, like that of Easter: the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday being observed as fasts, and days of humiliation, and supplication for a blessing upon the work of ordination, which was usually on the next Sunday. But the Monday and Tuesday were observed after the same manner and for the same reasons, as in the Easter-week.

The Collects, Epistles, and Gospels for both these days are ancient: both the Epistles are concerning the baptism of converts, (this being, as we have already noted, one of the more solemn times appointed for baptism,) and concerning their receiving of the Holy Ghost by the hands of the apostles, (this being also a time for confirmation, which was always performed by the imposition of hands). The Gospel for Monday seems to have been allotted for the instruction of the new baptized; teaching them to believe in Christ, and to become the children of light. The Gospel for Tuesday seems to have been appointed, as it is one of the ember or ordination weeks; the design of it being to put a difference between those who are lawfully appointed and ordained to the ministry, and those who without any commission arrogate to themselves that sacred office.

The first lesson for Monday morning is a history of the confusion of tongues at Babel, whereby the Church reminds us, that, as the confusion of tongues spread idolatry through the world, and made men lose the knowledge of God, and true religion; so God provided by the gift of tongues to repair the knowledge of Himself, and lay the foundation of a new religion. In the first lesson for Monday evening is recorded the resting of God's Spirit upon the seventy elders of Israel, to enable them to ease Moses of part of his burden in governing that numerous people; which exactly prefigured the descent of the same Holy Spirit at this time upon the apostles and others, to the same end, namely, that the care of all the churches might not lie upon one single person: and accordingly the second lessons for this day instruct us that these spiritual gifts, of whatever sort they be, are all given to profit withal, and therefore must be all made use of to edification, as to their true and proper end.

The first lesson for Tuesday morning contains the inspiration of Saul and his messengers by the Spirit of God; and that at evening is a prophecy of Moses, how God would in after-times deal with the Jews upon their repentance. The morning second lesson forbids us to "quench the Spirit" of God, or to "despise the prophecies" uttered by Him: but, because "there are many false prophets gone into the world," the second lesson and hanged on a tree: Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God; even to us who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his Name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins. While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision, which believed, were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the Name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days[k].

The Gospel. St. John iii. 16.

GOD so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the Name of the only-begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God[l].

for the afternoon warns us, not to believe all teachers who boast of the Spirit, but to try them by the rules of the catholick faith. Wheatly.

[k] It should be observed from this narrative, that the effusions of the Holy Spirit, liberal and glorious and manifestly divine, as they were, in the apostolical age, did not yet supersede the necessity of those sacraments, which Christ had left, as ordinary marks and means of conferring and expressing church-membership among his followers. For what is St. Peter's inference from these miraculous gifts? Is it, that the persons on whom they rested, had no need of baptism? No: but that these extraordinary gifts were an evidence, that God had a favour for them, and saw their sincerity, and thus was pleased to testify that they were fit objects for baptism. Accordingly he took care, that they should immediately be made disciples, who had this evidence of being believers before. "Can any man" (says he) "forbid water, that these should not be baptized? &c." Acts x. 47. So far is the baptism of the Spirit, even where that is undeniable, from excluding the baptism of water; so far any of the extraordinary methods of grace, from intending to break in upon and overturn the regular establishments and orders of the Church. And sure one cannot wish a stronger proof, than the instance before us, that the outward washing is not merely a figure, or representation, of the inward in this sacrament; but a rite of initiation, and an essential part of the sacrament: and that the graces of the Holy Spirit may be the foundation of a just claim to baptism; but never (where that sacrament can be had) a lawful dispensation to any man, for the refusal or neglect of it.

The more usual course indeed is for those inward effects to accompany, and the increase of them to follow after, the use of the outward visible sign. Of this also we have remarkable instances in the book of Acts. One of which will be brought under consideration, by the Scripture appointed for to-morrow's Epistle. Dean Stanhope.

[l] If the question be asked why many of those, to whom the Gospel of Christ is preached, reject and despise it, though it be, as it is here described, "light come into the world," the reason is here given: "Because their deeds are evil:" "they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." The course of men's lives has a strange and strong influence upon their belief and opinion of things, and evil practices do very much corrupt and debauch good principles. It is obvious to observe, that good men, who lead holy and virtuous lives, easily believe the truths of the Gospel, which they see tend so much to the happiness of this life and the next; they feel their minds inclined to receive Christ as the Saviour of the world; and both desire and delight in the knowledge of his ways; they choose light rather than darkness, and prefer knowledge before ignorance, and that because their deeds are good; they labour to regulate their practice by the rule of God's word, and, instead of shutting their eyes against the light, they pray God to open them, that they may more clearly see the wondrous things of his law. And thus an honest mind leads them to the knowledge of divine truths. Whereas bad men, on the other hand, who lead loose and wicked lives, do all they can to extinguish the light of truth, which shews them the error and danger of their way, and would stop their career in wickedness: for this reason they hate knowledge, and endeavour to stifle and suppress the light of it from shining into their understandings, and that because their deeds are evil. Their works being contrary to God's word, they care not to receive or hearken to what makes against them, but rather seek to put out that light, which they have no mind to work or walk by. And therefore the Evan-

GOD, who as at this time didst teach the hearts of thy faithful people, by the sending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit; Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgement in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort; through the merits of Christ Jesus our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Epistle. Acts viii. 14.

WHEN the Apostles, which were at Jerusalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the Name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost[m].

gelist, in the next verse, adds, that "every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." There are some sins so foul, as to shun all discovery, and to covet a black veil of darkness, to hide their deformity. There are others attended with that shame and disgrace, as not to be able to bear the light, and so are acted under vizors and disguises, to avoid the reproach and censures of the world. Again there are others, so full of mischief and danger both to body, soul, and goods, that few care to own or be thought actors of them. And generally all sorts of sinners seek secrecy, to conceal the baseness and obliquity of their actions. "But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." Where by works of truth are meant virtuous and good works, done in conformity to God's word, and the rules of right reason. Such works do not decline, but desire the light; they come to it to be made manifest, and rather court than fly observation; for these being wrought in God, that is, according to his holy will, and by the direction of his Holy Spirit, have the approbation of God and conscience too: and the more they are exposed to light, the more joy and comfort do they bring to them that do them. Dr. Hole.

[m] The passage, appointed for the Epistle of the day, is generally understood as meant principally of the laying on of the hands in confirmation, reckoned among the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, common to all Christians, Heb. vi. 2. The passage suggests to our thoughts the following considerations.

1. It may be observed, that confirmation in its nature is the ratifying or confirming of the vow or promise made in baptism. This in adult or grown persons is done soon after they are baptized: as in these Samaritan converts. But in children, who by the mercy of Christ and the charity of the Church are admitted to baptism, and are received into the Church on the engagements of others, before they are capable of understanding their duty, this is to be done when they come to years of discretion: when, being arrived at some competent knowledge of what has been undertaken for their benefit in their behalf, they renew and ratify those promises in their own persons; and take upon themselves in their riper years, what by their sureties was engaged for them in their infancy.

2. The rite of confirmation was ever accompanied with prayer and imposition of hands. Thus Peter and John "prayed for" the disciples in Samaria, "that they might receive the Holy Ghost:" this is the ordinary means of conveying divine grace, and is appointed by God as the way for conferring his Holy Spirit, and withal spiritual strength sufficient to enable us to perform the baptismal vow. And thus Peter and John "laid their hands on" the disciples, "and they received the Holy Ghost." This custom, derived from ancient times as a mode of conveying blessings, was adopted in the Christian church, after the example of our Saviour, who "laid on his hands," when He "blessed the children that were brought unto him." And his apostles and their successors have, by the imposition of hands accompanying prayer, confirmed Christians from the earliest times.

3. As to the persons concerned in this rite; those, who administer it have ever been the chief pastors and governours of the Church; thus in this Epistle, when Samaria had received the word of God and been baptized by Philip, a deacon or inferior minister, Peter and John were sent to administer confirmation to them. And so it has been always administered by the hands of bishops, the successors of the apostles, as is well known and attested through all ages of the Church. The persons, to whom it is administered, are all baptized persons, competently instructed in the principles of religion. Persons must first be received into the Church, before they can receive the blessings promised and bestowed in it. And therefore the Samaritans were baptized by Philip the deacon, before they were confirmed by Peter and John the apostles. And our Church, by the warrant of this and other examples, acts accordingly: taking care, that children be prepared beforehand for confirmation by being catechized, and so instructed in the nature of the Christian covenant.

Lastly, the blessings, conveyed by confirmation, are here intimated: "then laid they their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost;" whereby is meant the participation of the gifts and graces of God's Holy Spirit. The gift of the Holy Spirit are either extraordinary and miraculous, as the gifts of tongues, of miracles, and prophecy, and the like, given to the apostles and others in the beginning of Christianity, for the planting and propagating of the Gospel; or common and ordinary, as the acquired knowledge of the tongues, improvements in learning, skill in the arts and sciences, and the like, which come from the same shepherd of the sheep: to him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And, when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow; but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers. This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them. Then said Jesus unto them again; Verily, verily I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not hear them. I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly[n].

Spirit, though not in the same extraordinary way, but by means of study and diligence. And, though the former ceased with the reason of them, yet the latter, being of standing use in the Church, will be continued to the world's end. But besides the gifts of the Spirit, his graces are conferred in confirmation, by prayer and imposition of hands; as generally affirmed by the Fathers. We read in Scripture of a "spirit of wisdom and understanding, a spirit of counsel and might, a spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord." All which in the office of confirmation we are directed to pray for: and which by a devout use of this ordinance will be granted, so as to enable us to perform our baptismal vow, and overcome our spiritual enemies.

All Christians should therefore highly esteem and value this sacred rite. Those, who are to give, should be ready duly to administer it; and those, who are to receive, should be carefully brought to it. Parents should take care that their children be prepared by catechizing and due instruction in the nature of the office. Sponsors, who are bound to see them brought to confirmation, should take care that it be properly and effectually done. And all, who come to it, should come so prepared, that they may receive the benefit of it; which is to fit them for the holy sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and the fellowship of Christians here upon earth, and to prepare them for the communion of saints hereafter in heaven. Dr. Hole.

[n] In the circumstantial parts of the allegory contained in the Gospel for the day, our Lord hath intimated to us the qualifications of a good shepherd. That he must be diligent thoroughly to know his flock, to consider their several wants and infirmities, and accommodate himself seasonably and properly to each of them; which we may very well suppose implied, in that expression of "calling his own sheep by name." That he must be careful not only to instruct, and exhort, and encourage them, by sound doctrine, and seasonable admonitions, but also to guide and excite them by the piety of his example: for thus some have understood "leading out his own sheep," and "going before them." That his main view must be, the benefit of his people, the welfare and salvation of their souls, the preserving of them from the rapine and violence of a foe, always ready to devour them: in a word, he must esteem his own wealth and happiness to consist chiefly in the bettering of their condition; not regarding the milk and the fleece only, nor undertaking this charge only, or principally, for his own private advantage. All this may very well be understood by the 10th verse, "The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Once more: he is such a one, as enters upon this office, by a regular call and mission, as let into the fold by those, who are entrusted to keep the door; who, in the personal absence of the chief Shepherd have commission to act for and under Him: so that what they do according to the powers received from Him, He is esteemed the doer of; and all, whom they employ, are owned as his servants and stewards. These are only "shepherds, that enter by the door," and to whom "the porter openeth:" the rest "climb up some other way." And such as do so, are here declared by the Master of the flock to be no better than "thieves and robbers."

Once again. As these parabolical expressions hint the duties of the shepherd, so they do likewise those of the sheep. Such are attention and diligence to get instruction, application to their proper business, adhering stedfastly to their regular pastor, imitating the good example he sets them, "enduring sound doctrine," not "having itching ears," nor "heaping to themselves teachers," 2 Tim. iv. 3; but being constantly upon their guard against all seducers, and suspecting the wicked designs of any, who attempt to draw them off from a regular communion with him, to whose care the laws of God and man have committed their souls. All which some interpreters have collected from hence, that they are called the rightful shepherd's "own sheep," that "they follow him," because "they know his voice;" that "a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers," John x. 4, 5.

These remarks I the rather insist upon, because they seem, at this time especially, proper considerations both for priest and people. A fit introduction for the Ember fast: as well for those, who are now about to be "ordained to any holy function;" that they may learn from hence the greatness of the obligation lying on them, "both by their life and doctrine to set forth the glory of God, and set forward the salvation of all men:" as for them, to whom they shall be sent; that they may take good heed to those means of edification and salvation, which a faithful ministry puts into their hands, that they may preserve the order and unity of the Church, and at once secure the peace of the publick, and that of their own consciences. Which God give priest and people grace to do, for his sake, whose "precious blood" was shed to "purchase" to his Father

AFTER this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. And immediately I was in the Spirit; and behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne: and he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. "an universal" church, "Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

° Trinity Sunday] The solemn festivals, which in the foregoing parts of our annual service have propounded to our consideration the mysterious work of man's redemption, and the several steps taken to accomplish it, naturally lead us up to, and at last conclude with, that of the present day. The incarnation and nativity, the passion and resurrection of the blessed Jesus, demonstrate how great things the "Son" of God hath condescended to do for us. The miraculous powers, with which the first disciples were endued, and the sanctifying graces, with which all the faithful are assisted, do prove, how great, and how necessary a part the "Holy Spirit" bore in this work, both for publishing the salvation of the world, and for rendering it effectual. And all agree in representing to us the inestimable love of the "Father," by whom that "Son" was sent, and that "Spirit" so wonderfully and so plentifully shed abroad. Most justly, therefore, after such informations, how fit a subject this is for our wonder and adoration, does the Church to-day call upon us to celebrate the mystery of those "three" Persons in the unity of the Godhead; each of whom hath so kindly, and so largely, contributed to this united and stupendous act of mercy, upon which the whole of all our hopes and happiness depends. Dean Stanhope.

Notwithstanding on each day, and especially Sundays, the Church celebrates the praises of the Trinity, in her doxologies, hymns, creeds, &c.; yet the wisdom of the Church thought it meet, that such a mystery as this, though part of the meditation of each day, should be the chief subject of one, and this to be the day. For no sooner had our Lord ascended into heaven, and God's Holy Spirit descended upon the Church; but there ensued the notice of the glorious and incomprehensible Trinity, which before that time was not so clearly known. The Church therefore, having solemnized in an excellent order all the high feasts of our Lord, and, after, that of the descent of God's Spirit upon the apostles; thought it a thing most seasonable, to conclude these great solemnities with a festival of full, special, and express service to the holy and blessed Trinity. Bp. Sparrow.

This mystery was not clearly delivered to the Jews, because they, being always surrounded by idolatrous nations, would have easily mistaken it for a doctrine of plurality of Gods; but yet it was not so much hidden in those times, but that any one with a spiritual eye might have discerned some glimmerings of it dispersed through the Old Testament. The first chapter in the Bible seems to set forth three Persons in the Godhead; for, besides the "Spirit of God" which "moved upon the waters," ver. 2, we find the great Creator (at the 26th verse) consulting with others about the greatest work of his creation, the making of man, of which we may be assured the Word or Son of God was one, since "all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made." So that those two verses fully pointing out to us the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, make this a very proper lesson for the solemnity of the day. The reason of the choice of the other first lesson is as obvious: it records the appearance of the great JEHOVAH to Abraham, whom the patriarch acknowledges to be the "Judge of all the earth;" and who therefore, by vouchsafing to appear with two others in his company, might design to represent to Him the "Trinity of Persons." But this sacred mystery is no where so plainly manifested as in the second lesson for the morning, which at one and the same time relates the baptism of the Son, the voice of the Father, and the descent of the Holy Ghost: which though they are (as appears from this chapter) three distinct Persons in number, yet the second lesson at evening shews they are but one in essence. Wheatly.

The Epistle and the Gospel are the same that were anciently assigned for the Octave of Pentecost; the Epistle being the vision of St. John, Rev. iv; and the Gospel the dialogue of our Lord with Nicodemus; and the mention, which we find therein, of baptism, of the Holy Spirit and the gifts of it, though it might then fit the day as a repetition, as it were, of Pentecost, so it is no less fit for it, as a feast to the blessed Trinity. The mission of the Holy Ghost brings with it as aforesaid, more light and clearness to the doctrine of the Trinity: and when more fit to think of the gifts of the Spirit, than on a solemn day of ordination, as this is one, when men are consecrated to spiritual offices? But besides this, we have in the Gospel set before us, all the Three Persons of the sacred Trinity, and the same likewise represented in the vision, which the Epistle speaks of, with an hymn of praise, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, &c.:" which expressions, by ancient interpretation, relate to the holy Trinity, as is above said. Bp. Sparrow.

[p] — and in the power of the Divine Majesty to worship the Unity;] These words are rendered rather obscure by too close an adherence to the order of the Latin. They are to be understood as if they were placed thus: "and to worship the Unity in the power of the Divine Majesty;" that is, to worship the unity of Persons, or the three Persons which are united, in the power of the Divine Majesty, as having one and the same infinite power common to them all. Dr. Bennet.

had on their heads crowns of gold: And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices. And there were seven lamps of fire, burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. And when those beasts give glory, and honour, and thanks, to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever, the four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created[q].

The Gospel. St. John iii. 1.

THERE was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: the same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit. Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How can these things be? Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things? Verily, verily I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness. If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not; how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things? And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man who is in heaven. And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life[r].

[q] For remarks on the Epistle, the reader is referred to the comment following the Gospel.

[r] To such an instance of piety and devotion, as the Church manifests in this day's solemnity, we are excited, first, by the portion of Scripture appointed for the Epistle; wherein the angels and blessed spirits, which pay their constant attendance about the throne of the Majesty on high, are represented to St. John, as with most awful and profound reverence acknowledging and worshipping the three holies, which are one eternal and almighty God. A fit example for the Church militant on earth to follow; because, in so doing, they do not only copy after, but, as it were, anticipate the constant employment of the Church triumphant in heaven.

To the contemplation of this mystery we are likewise invited by the Gospel for this day. In which is made express and distinct mention, of God the Father, ver. 2; by whose power and immediate presence with Jesus, the miracles attesting to his divine authority were wrought: of God the Son, who declares Himself to have come down from heaven, ver. 13, and even to be in heaven at the instant of conversing with Nicodemus upon earth, ver. 5, 6: and of that Holy Spirit, whose prolifick operation upon the waters of baptism effects the new and spiritual, as of old it did the natural, creation, when moving upon the face of the yet unformed deep, ver. 7, 8: and whose sanctifying graces act powerfully, though often undiscernibly, in changing the minds of men.

But as the blessed spirits above are our pattern for acknowledging this mysterious truth, so are they for the manner of contemplating it. Like them, we should fall down before the throne, and with humble wonder adore a depth which we cannot penetrate. In regard, therefore, this is a doctrine entirely owing to divine revelation, the safest and most becoming method of treating it will be, to shew those intimations thought to be given of it under the Old Testament, and then the clearer discoveries made of it in the New. From both which, it will afterwards be natural and easy to infer the reasonableness of embracing it, as a necessary article of faith.

1. The intimations, supposed to be given of this doctrine under the Old Testament, are such as follow:

The frequent mention of God, by a name in the plural number with a verb singular. Of which some learned Jews observe, that it is a warning not to believe more Gods than one: and yet at the same time they confess, that, were it not thus written, it could not be lawful for men to express themselves after that manner. The consequence, they apprehend from hence, holds indeed against a plurality of Gods, but is of no weight at all against a plurality of Persons in one only true God.

The several texts wherein God speaks, as it were in consultation and concert, "Let us make man in our own image after our likeness: The man is become as one of us: Let us go down and confound their speech: Whom shall I send, and who shall go for us?" and the like, Gen. i. 26; iii. 22; xi. 7; Isa. vi. 8.

The passages, which name God as sustaining several capacities, in one and the same sentence. Such is that by which our Saviour gravelled the scribes and Pharisees. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand," Ps. cx. 1; Matt. xxii. 42, &c.; and that other, which makes use of the name Jehovah twice, (a name acknowledged incommunicable to any but the true God,) where we read that "the Lord rained down fire upon Sodom from the Lord out of heaven," Gen. xix. 24.

Such intimations in particular manner are those places, where the name of God, or any of his attributes, are thrice repeated; of which kind have been reckoned by some, Deut. vi. 4; Ps. lxvii. 6, 7; Jer. xxxiii. 2; Dan. ix. 19. And especially that hymn of praise in Isa. vi; repeated in the Epistle for this day, and taken into the daily services of the Christian church. (See page 23, note u.) But these I choose to term intimations; and I am content to lay but little weight upon them, in a point of doctrine so much more manifestly asserted in the Gospel, as generally to be allowed a distinction peculiar to Christians. Let us observe therefore, in the

2. Second place, What those clear discoveries of this matter are, which have been made to us under the New Testament.

In this argument I am to a considerable degree prevented, by having had occasion heretofore to produce several passages, which not only speak of God the Father, (concerning whom there is in the present question no dispute at all,) but of the Son, and Holy Spirit also, in the same form of speech as of the Father. In such terms, I mean, and with such titles, and with those properties and perfections expressly attributed to them, as were most false, absurd, and impious, if applied to any other, than to the true God only.

Referring my reader back to those evidences, that each of these Persons by Himself is God and Lord, I shall at present confine myself to some places, which mention all three, with such notes of distinction, as are a sufficient indication, that they cannot be God, in one person only. That the blessed Virgin should become a mother, without any concurrence of man, is thus foretold by the angel, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee! therefore also that holy Thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God," Luke i. 35. Here are plainly distinguished from each other, the "Holy Ghost," or "power" overshadowing; the "Highest," whose "power" that Spirit is; and the "holy Thing," or Person, who, because born of a mother impregnated by that power divine, had upon this account a right to be "called the Son of God."

At our blessed Lord's baptism, "the Spirit of God," we read, "descended like a dove, and rested upon him," and "a voice from heaven" declared Him to be "the beloved Son of God," Matt. iii. 16, 17; Luke iii. 21, 22; John i. 32, 33. Now what can be plainer, than the distinction here, between the "Spirit" descending and resting, the "Father," whose voice pronounced "Jesus" his Son, and that "Son" Himself, whom this "Spirit" rested upon, and this voice bore testimony to?

The same is to be said of those texts in St. John's Gospel, which we have lately had occasion to consider: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth," John xiv. 16. 26. And, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me," xv. 26. Here are manifestly acts, and persons, and capacities different; the "Father," from whom the "Spirit" proceeds, whom the Son prays, and by whom, at the "Son's" request, that "Comforter" was given. The "Son" praying the "Father," sending the "Comforter" from the "Father," and testified of by the "Spirit" so sent. And the "Spirit" prayed for, given by the "Father," sent from the "Father" by the "Son," testifying of the "Son," and "abiding" for ever with those disciples, from whom the "Son" had departed.

Again, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he, that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you," Rom. viii. 11. St. Paul, in this place, does evidently refer to Jesus the "Son" of God raised from the dead; to the "Spirit" of God, by which He was raised; and to Him, that raised Jesus, and shall raise all, in whom that "Spirit" dwells, because it is his "Spirit."

In the name of these three Persons all nations are to be baptized, as the standing form and method of making men Christ's disciples, Matt. xxviii. 19. In the name of these three those disciples are solemnly blessed: and our congregations, who were first admitted Christians, by being "baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," have all the privileges of that character implored for them by that benediction, with which they are daily dismissed, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore," 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Meanwhile I must not omit to observe, that the Scriptures, which are so clear in the Trinity of Persons, are not in any point whatsoever more express, than in the unity of the Godhead. Hence we so often read of "one Lord, one God," and "none other but he," who

Heb. xiii. 20, 21. commandments we may please thee, both in will and deed; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 St. John iv. 7.

BELOVED, let us love one another: for love is of God, is therefore styled the "only true God," Deut. vi. 4; Mark xii. 32; John xvii. 3. That although to the heathen there "are that are called gods many, and lords many;" yet "to us" Christians "there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him," 1 Cor. viii. 5, 6. That we are indeed baptized in the name of "three," but still taught, and bound to profess "one Lord," and "one God," as well as "one faith" and "one baptism," Eph. iv. 5. In all which, another apostle assures us, there is no absurdity or inconsistence, by affirming, that "there be three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and" that "these three are one," 1 John v. 7. And what greater proof can be reasonably demanded, for a doctrine of so abstruse a nature, so remote from our conception, so much above our comprehension, than that "three" Persons should be mentioned in Scripture (the only source of supernatural knowledge) in terms proper to God alone; that each should have perfections attributed to Him, which are visibly peculiar to God alone; and yet all this is done so, as, from more Persons in the Godhead, to leave no umbrage for inferences, against the unity of that Godhead notwithstanding.

This indeed is a point necessary to be guarded, because leaving it liable to just objection had defeated one great end of Scripture. For the Old Testament was intended to bring off the Jews, and the New to deliver the Gentiles, from idolatry. And that idolatry did consist in worshipping them which "by nature are no gods," not instead of, or exclusive to, but besides and together with, the one supreme and true God. So that, had not the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, been the one supreme and true God; those Scriptures, which so frequently, so solemnly, so industriously, and so plainly, give to the Son and Holy Spirit the names and titles, the properties and honours, given to the Father, had taken the ready and most effectual course for establishing and propagating that very idolatry, which they were designed to suppress and utterly abolish. An absurdity, which no writers of common sense and prudence, much less they that wrote by divine inspiration, can be supposed to be guilty of.

This likewise shews, that there can be no need of the many little shifts, to which some interpreters have had recourse, for avoiding the plain and literal constructions of the texts alleged in defence of this doctrine. All danger, possible to arise from such construction, being sufficiently provided against by the many other texts, which inculcate the unity of the Godhead. And the niceties, by which they labour to turn off those which assert more divine Persons than one, being too subtle for the generality of people to be masters of, to whom the Scripture was meant for a rule. Men, I conceive, may be much more easily brought to understand the consistence of the word of God with itself in this matter, than to be satisfied in the evasions and artifices, by which a meaning is fastened upon it, so foreign from that common and natural one, which the expressions evidently carry.

Nor, lastly, does it appear that our reason is affronted by any contradiction in this doctrine. For these persons are no where affirmed to be three and one in the same respect; but one in substance, and three in the different manner of having and communicating that substance. One in all perfections essential to the Godhead; three in their mutual relations and capacities. Thus much is revealed; and more than is revealed of this matter we cannot know. So much as is revealed we have reason upon that account to believe; but the main difficulties, commonly objected in this case, will, when strictly considered, be found to lie, not so much against "that which is written," as against the notions of bold and fanciful men; who, not content to "be wise according to that which is written," will needs obtrude upon the world systems of their own, and undertake to explain what they do not understand. Nor is the use of reason, within its proper sphere, at all infringed by this belief. For, by submitting to things above it which we cannot comprehend, it does not give up its right; nor enslave us to the degree of believing contrary to our reason, in things within our level, which we may and do comprehend.

Since then Scripture is clear in the truth of this mystery, and reason cannot gainsay it: since this belief is the distinguishing character of Christians, and the profession of it a necessary antecedent condition of our being such: since we have devoted ourselves in baptism, and there promised constant homage, and obedience, and adoration, to the Trinity in unity: let us, in all humility and reverence, agree with "angels," and all the "heavenly powers," with "cherubim" and "seraphim," with "apostles" and "prophets," and "martyrs," and with "the holy Church throughout all the world," in "praising" and "acknowledging" this "holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabaoth." Even "the Father of an infinite Majesty, his honourable, true, and only Son," and "also the Holy Ghost the Comforter;" living and reigning one God world without end. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[8] — after Trinity.] The Church hath now finished the celebration of the high festivals, and thereby run, as it were, through a great part of the Creed, by setting before us, in an orderly manner, the highest mysteries of our redemption by Christ on earth, till the day He was taken up into heaven, with the sending down of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost. Now after she hath, in consequence and reflection upon these mysteries, broke out into a more solemn and special adoration of the blessed Trinity; she comes, according to her method, in the intervals of great feasts, to use such Epistles, Gospels, and Collects, as suit with her holy affections and aims at this season. Such, namely, as tend to our edifying, and being the living temples of the Holy Ghost our Comforter, with his gifts and graces; that, having oil in our lamps, we may be in better readiness to meet the Bridegroom at his second advent or coming to judgment. And this is done in the remaining Sundays, till Advent; which in their services are, as it were, so many echoes and reflections upon the mystery of Pentecost, the life of the Spirit, or as trumpeters for preparation to meet our Lord at his second coming. Which will be more manifest, if we take a general view of the Gospels together, and afterwards of the Epistles and Collects.

The Gospels for this time, according to the method which hath before been declared, are of the holy doctrine, deeds, and miracles of our Saviour; and so may singularly conduce to making us good Christians, by being followers of Christ, and replenished with that Spirit, which He both promised and sent, and for which the Church lately kept so great a solemnity: for to be charitable, heavenly-minded, repentant, merciful, humble, peaceable, religious, compassionate, and thankful; to trust in God, and abound with such spiritual and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent his only-qualities, are the lessons taught us by our Lord in these Gospels; and that not only by word and deed, but many miracles also; for diverse Gospels are of such, and tend much to our edifying. From his healing of the sick, and going about doing good, we may learn, to employ that power and ability we have, in works of mercy and goodness. He that raised the dead, and did such mighty works, can be no other, we may be sure, than God and man, the Saviour of the world, able to protect us even against death itself, to raise our bodies from the dust, and glorify them hereafter.

Thus we have in general the intent of these Gospels, as may easily appear by particular observations; and withal, how pertinent they are to the time. And with them the Church concludes her annual course of such readings; having thereby given us, and in such time and order, as are most apt to make deep impression, the chief matter and substance of the four Evangelists.

In the Epistles for this time there is an harmony with the Gospels; but not so much (as some have thought) in their joint propounding of particular considerations, and those several and distinct, as the days they belong to; for that belongs to more special solemnities; but rather, as they meet all in the common stream, the general meditation and affection of the season.

We may therefore observe, that, as all the Gospels for Sundays, since Easter-day hitherto, are taken out of the beloved disciple St. John, who therein gives us many of the last and most tender and affectionate words of our dear Lord, before his passion and ascension, his promising of a Comforter, bidding them not fear, bequeathing his peace to them, and the like: so now the two first Epistles are taken and most fitly, out of the same apostle, who therein minds us with much earnest affection, of that Spirit which our Lord promised for our Comforter, and of the great effect and sign of it, "the love of one another. If," saith he, "we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfect in us: hereby know we, that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." And the Epistle for the second Sunday exhorteth us in like manner, "to love one another as he gave commandment, and he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him; and hereby we know that he abideth in us, even by the Spirit which he hath given us." In the Epistle for the third Sunday, we are put in mind by St. Peter, of submission and being humble; for God gives grace to such; of sobriety, watching, faith, and patience in affliction, with an exhortation "to cast our care upon God, who cares for us, and shall perfect, settle, strengthen, and stablish us;" which is according to what Christ said, "that he would not leave us comfortless." The fourth Epistle is out of Rom. viii, and is a comfort against afflictions, "as not worthy of that glory, which shall be shewn upon us;" provided we be such as they whom the apostle there speaks of, "who had received the first-fruits of the Spirit." The Epistle for the fifth, being taken out of St. Peter, exhorts us to love, peace, innocence, and such spiritual affections; and if any trouble us, "not to be afraid," but to "sanctify the Lord God in our hearts." The rest of the Epistles, for all the days following, relate much to the same business, as newness of life, and all the fruits and gifts of God's Holy Spirit; as a particular insight will sufficiently manifest. But being not the first that are used in this season, they seem to have been chosen with more indifferency; for they are taken out of St. Paul, and keep the very order of his Epistles, and the place they have in each Epistle. For of them, the first are out of the Epistle to the Romans, and so in order; the next out of the Epistles to the Corinthians, the first and second, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians; for so far the order reacheth, till the time of Advent. Only two of the Sundays, the eighteenth and twenty-fifth do vary from this method in the choice of their Epistles; and there is reason for both.

The Collects remain to be now spoken of: and they, in the same manner with the Epistles and Gospels, have a general congruity with the affection of the season. For as faith, hope, and charity, the graces and gifts of the Holy Ghost, are the general subject, more or less, of these Epistles, and the same taught, exemplified, and confirmed in the Gospels; so are these Collects certain general invocations upon God, for the assistance of his Holy Spirit, and bringing forth the fruits of it, and consist usually of a most humble acknowledgment, and a petition suitable, as was above declared.

And as we have taken before a brief view of the pious sense and spirit of these acknowledgments, so it will not be amiss to do the same here concerning the petitions; which in each Collect are some or other of these following, or such like: "That God would be pleased to prevent and follow us always with his grace, and with his mercy in all things direct and rule our hearts; to stir up our wills, pour into our hearts, and graft in them the love of his holy name, make us to have a perpetual fear and love of it, to ask such things as shall please Him, to have the Spirit, to think and do always such things as be rightful, and to please Him both in will and deed; that He would increase, nourish, keep us in true religion and all goodness, give unto us the increase of faith, hope, and charity, that we may live according to his will, with pure and free hearts follow Him, accomplish those things He would have done, and may be cleansed, assoyled, delivered from all our offences, have pardon, peace, protection, and defence, may plentifully bring forth the fruits of good works, and by Him be plenteously rewarded, and obtain his promises, which exceed all that we can desire." Such requests as these, besides some others, "that God would hear the prayers of the people," are by the priest presented to God; fit for the Church's meditations at this time after Pentecost: and not unfitly following the lessons, the decalogue, and the following supplications of the people, as the proper place of Collects: being all of them (though in several branches and expressions) in effect thus much: that by the merciful grace, inspiration, defence, and protection of God Almighty, we may be cleansed from our sins, may obey his commandments, may live as Christians ought, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, and so be fitter to meet our blessed Lord, at his second advent to judge the world. Bp. Sparrow.

[t] The first Sunday after Trinity] The Collect for this day teaches us to beg of God the acceptance of our prayers, and the assistance of our infirmities, that by keeping his commandments we may please Him both in will and deed. The Epistle mentions and insists upon the great commandment of love, which is indeed the sum of all the commandments, and the keeping of which is therefore styled "the fulfilling of the law." The Gospel sets forth the extreme danger of neglecting this duty, or casting it off by hardheartedness and inhumanity. Dr. Hole.

begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us; because he hath given us of his Spirit. And we have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgement; because as he is, so are we in this world. There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment: He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We love him, because he first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also[u].

The Gospel. St. Luke xvi. 19.

THERE was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple, and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs, which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man also died, and was buried: and in hell he lift up his eyes being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they who would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

[u] There is singular force in the expression, employed by the apostle in this passage, when he says, that "God is love." He does not say, that God is benevolent, or kind, or merciful, or compassionate, or affectionate: he does not say, that God is a being of infinite goodness, or mercy, or loving-kindness. But, as if he intended to magnify above measure this most adorable of the divine attributes, he pronounces Him to be the quality in the abstract, and thus, as it were, identifies the Godhead with love. Of that perfect Being indeed, who declares of Himself "I am that I am," and who describes "I am" as his characteristick appellation, Exod. iii. 14; the same might equally well be affirmed with respect to his other properties. It might as well be affirmed concerning Him, that He is power, or holiness, or wisdom, or justice, or any other property, the effects of which are displayed in his operations. But I do not remember, that this form of expression is employed by any of the sacred writers, in so pointed a manner, as by St. John in the text: where a special mark of distinction appears to be set on that quality of God, which the Holy Spirit describes as having actuated Him in the redemption of mankind.

The moral perfections of the Deity are, in our contracted sphere, and to the extent of our capacities, the fittest objects for our imitation: and they are so largely and so frequently set before us in holy Scripture, undoubtedly for this reason in common with others, that, by striving to imitate them with the assistance of his grace, our corrupt and sinful nature may be continually purified, and we may become more and more like unto Him. Of all these adorable perfections, as there is no one, in which our heavenly Father appears to be more delighted, so also there is no one more carefully recommended for our example, or more adapted to our continued imitation, than that which is set before us in this Epistle. As it was "love," which actuated our heavenly Father to send his Son into the world for our redemption, so has He injoined upon us the cultivation of that divine quality, as the indispensable duty, and the distinguishing and never-failing mark, of every disciple of his Son. "We love him, because he first loved us." "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." Thus does the beloved disciple connect the duty of a Christian, in its two great divisions of religious and moral obligation, with this most adorable attribute of the Deity, illustrated in one of the most interesting and important articles of the Christian faith. Nor can we desire or possess a more powerful inducement to the diligent observance

Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead[x].

The Collect.

O Lord, who never failest to help and govern them whom thou dost bring up in thy stedfast fear and love; Keep us, we beseech thee, under the protection of thy good providence, and make us to have a perpetual fear and love of thy holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

of this duty, than the assurance of the same apostle, that "God is love;" and that "he, that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." Edit.

[x] From this Gospel we learn, 1. what mistaken measures they go upon, who form a judgment either of their own, or another's happiness and misery, by their different fortunes or stations in the world; for, according to this standard, who would have scrupled to pronounce the rich man in this parable most blessed, and Lazarus the most wretched of all mortal creatures? And yet, how distant had this rash sentence been from the truth of the case?

2. Here is comfort and encouragement for those of our brethren, whose circumstances are strait and low in the world. This passage shews, they shall not always be forgotten; but, if their poverty be sustained with patience, and contentedness, and trust in a good God, there is a time coming when He will not neglect them, though men may. And they, who so haughtily and coldly look down upon their sufferings in the mean while, may one day find cause to envy their happiness. For, when the gay, but fleeting, vanities of this world shall be reduced to a coffin and a shroud, when pomp and honour vanish like a shadow, when proud-hearted wealth lies covered in the dust, the pity, or the scorn and curse, of survivors; then shall the godly poor be taken up by angels, and carried into rest; from grief and labour to mansions of peace, and joy, and glory everlasting.

3. But, above all, in the third place, the rich should take this warning, to use their plenty wisely and profitably: lest either their luxury and vanities, if it be employed amiss, or the intemperate love and rust of this talent, if not employed at all, be a witness against them in the last day. This parable casts no reproach upon the rich man for raising his estate by unjust and fraudulent methods, or for not paying punctually for all his gay clothing and sumptuous table. And yet, supposing him the fairest dealer that ever lived, this single fault of hardheartedness, and not distributing to the necessities of the poor, was sufficient to consign him to the flames of hell. So true it is, that they, who fall into temptation by wealth, perish by a snare of their own laying, and that it is not money, but the "love" and the abuse "of money," which is "the root of all evil," 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10. For good this may do much; much to other people, more to the owners: and therefore they who have the power and means, must look well to it, that the inclination be not wanting; which want must indeed be inexcusable, especially when such opportunities for improving, and such objects for inviting, the exercise of this noble grace of charity, are plentifully and perpetually offering themselves.

If then your riches and the glory of your houses be increased, remember how this Scripture reminds you, that you "can carry nothing away with you when you die, neither shall" one whit of "your pomp follow you," Ps. xlix. 17. If any, like another rich man in this Gospel, Luke xii 16, be in perplexity and doubt, where to bestow his fruits and his goods, let him reflect upon the application. Thence he will learn how little need there is to pull down his barns, and build greater; when so many large and safe storehouses stand ready provided to his hands, where he may bestow, where he may lay them up for many years; nay, where he may put them out to the most growing interest, with a most infallible security to the principal: for by these good works it is, that men escape the condemnation of the rich man now before us; which God give us grace to do for his sake, who Himself vouchsafed to "become poor," that "we through his poverty might be made rich," 2 Cor. viii. 9, even Jesus Christ our Lord; to whom with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be all honour and glory, now and for ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[y] The second Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day reminds us of the never-failing care of Almighty God, to help and govern them, whom He doth bring up in his stedfast fear and love: and thence beseeches Him to take us under the protection of his good providence, and to make us have a perpetual fear and love of his holy name. To this end, the beloved disciple, in the Epistle for the day, first warns Christians of the hatred and malice of the world against them; after which he shews the blessed fruits of a true love to the brethren, together with the mischievous effects of hatred and ill-will towards them; concluding with some marks and directions for satisfying and assuring our consciences in these matters.

In the Gospel our blessed Saviour, according to his down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him; how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed, and in truth. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us[z].

The Gospel. St. Luke xiv. 16.

A Certain man made a great supper, and bade many; and sent his servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready. And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it; I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them; I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the Lord said unto the servant, Go out into the high-ways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper[a].

usual way of instructing the people, sets forth in a parable the liberal provisions He hath made in the Gospel, for all that will come to Him; as also the way and manner of his inviting them; together with the danger of refusing his invitations. Dr. Hole.

[z] As this portion of Scripture suggests some considerations, which should fortify and support good men in the discharge of their duty, when they meet with unsuitable and unworthy returns from an injurious and wicked world; so does it suggest others calculated to be a warning to us, not to give way to the least motions towards an uncharitable disposition. The former case hath the justice, the goodness, and the unchangeable promises of God, the examples of the blessed Jesus Himself, of his apostles and disciples, saints and glorified spirits innumerable, and the sweet satisfactions of a clear conscience, for its comfort and encouragement. The latter hath the instance of Cain; the dreadful guilt of all, whose malice renders them his cursed seed; the sentence of the divine law; and the severity of a Judge, "from whom no secrets are hid:" as so many monuments of justice, and sure indications of condemnation and severe vengeance for its terror and scourge. Let us not therefore be weary of well-doing, how ill soever our good actions are received, because there is a time coming, when we shall certainly reap, if we faint not. And let us not cherish any thought of the least tendency towards uncharitableness or malice, remembering that our very inclinations and desires lie open to Him, with whom we have to do, and that, if we could in this matter deceive and mock even our own consciences, yet cannot He be mocked, who (as we read to-day) "is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things." Dean Stanhope.

[a] By comparing this with a passage elsewhere of very close affinity to it, we may see evident reason to conclude that the "kingdom of heaven," Matt. xxii. 2, that is, the Gospel dispensation, was represented by it. This, as ministering true plenty and pleasure, all that men can want, all that they can wish, to render them perfectly happy, is compared to a "supper." The bounty and infinite love of Almighty God are signified by the "greatness" of that "supper," and the multitudes bidden to it. The first bidding denotes all the previous notices of the Messiah, by which the law and the prophets were intended to prepare the Jews for receiving Him and his doctrine. The second bidding, when all things were ready, seems to import all that Jesus did, and taught, and suffered, for their conversion and salvation; and all the testimonies, and importunate exhortations of his apostles and disciples to the same purpose. The excuses sent for their absence, are those prejudices, and passions, and worldly interests, which did not only hinder those Jews from coming into the faith; but disposed them to treat all attempts to win them over, with the most inflexible obstinacy and ut-

Ps. lxii. 5, 6. Isa. li. 12. Ps. lxxxvi. 7.

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter v. 5.

ALL of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour: whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world. But the God of all grace, who hath called us into his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen[c].

most contempt. The guests, brought in from abroad to supply their places, are the Gentile world; to whom, after the Jews had thrust it from them, the subsequent tenders of this grace and salvation were made. And the declaring, that "none of those that were bidden" should "taste of" his "supper," implies the giving of those Jews over to a reprobate sense, and leaving them under that infidelity and perverseness, in which they continue hardened to this very day.

Such is the analogy, no doubt, of the parable here before us. But, though its primary intention be what we have seen, with regard to the different entertainment, which the Gospel found at its first setting out; yet have we a part and concern in it also. For by the same reason, that they who would not receive it at all, were punished for their refusal, shall every Christian, who professes to have received it, if he be slothful, or lukewarm, in the duties of that profession, be punished for his indifference and neglect. It were easy enough to shew, that a bare acknowledgment and belief of our Saviour's doctrine is far from answering the ends of it to us. And I think I may venture to say, that they, who "hold the truth in unrighteousness," hold it more by chance than by choice. For the same seducements, which now obstruct their practice, would, if they had been born and educated in any other persuasion, most probably have obstructed their belief of the Christian religion.

The ministers of God's holy word and sacraments are the servants sent out to invite to this supper. Faith cometh by "preaching;" but if faith does not produce a life of piety and virtue, agreeable to its principles, our preaching is vain, and your faith is also vain. They, therefore, upon whom the name of Christ is called, are not thereby quite beyond reach of the true import of this parable. They may still retain the vicious dispositions reprehended in it; they, consequently, may incur the sentence of exclusion, denounced in the close of it. They actually do the one, and will certainly fall under the other; if they suffer the cares or the pleasures of this world to draw them into an indifference for, or neglect of, the duties of religion and the concerns of eternity. And, therefore, we shall do well to make such application of the parable, as may (by God's blessing) prevent the folly, and sin, and misery, of so doing. Dean Stanhope.

[b] The third Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day beseeches God mercifully to hear our prayers; that we, to whom He hath given an hearty desire to pray, may by his mighty aid be defended, and comforted in all dangers and adversities. Now because pride and haughtiness of spirit is the greatest obstacle to the success of our prayers, and to our security from dangers; and nothing conduces more to a good event and issue in both, than humility and lowliness of mind; therefore the Epistle for this day cautions us against the one, and earnestly exhorts to the other. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel in the form of two similitudes, of which it principally consists, ministers arguments to wicked men for repentance and amendment of life: being intended to encourage and support those publicans and sinners, who at the time of its delivery drew nigh in great numbers to our Saviour. Dean Stanhope.

[c] This Epistle contains a recommendation of several virtues, always fit to be cultivated by Christians, but especially useful and necessary in afflicted circumstances, such as the apostle is here describing, and such as were felt by the persons to whom his Epistle is addressed.

The first is humility: which is the most effectual expedient for containing every man within his own sphere; for securing the deference and submission due to superiors of every sort and capacity; and so for preserving inviolate the order, and unity, and peace of the Church. This virtue, likewise, above any other, disposes men to be liberal in those mutual comforts and assistances, which, in times of hazard and difficulty, are most wanted, and most welcome. But especially this virtue is of mighty service for preparing men to receive from the hands of God any events, which his wisdom shall think fit to send, with a becoming resignation of mind.

That "care," which the apostle would have persons under hardships "cast" entirely "upon God," is, no doubt, that anxious and disquieting solicitude, which distracts the mind, perplexes all our thoughts, breaks and confounds all our measures, and so not only does more hurt than good, but betrays a want of consideration and religion.

By "sobriety" is meant, not only a temperate use of the creatures appointed for our sustenance and refreshment, but the government of our passions and desires in general, with respect to any objects or events whatsoever, which, in the present life, are wont to provoke them to violence and excess.

By "watchfulness," no question, is meant a continual circumspection and care, that we be not surprised either through our own neglect, or the infirmities of our nature.

This is the general acceptation of the word, which yet here may perhaps have a view somewhat more particular and restrained. That branch, I mean, of watchfulness, which considers, and is aware, of what importance the different events of this life are to the

The Gospel. St. Luke xv. 1.

THEN drew near unto him all the Publicans and sinners for to hear him. And the Pharisees and Scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them. And he spake this parable unto them, saying, What man of you having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost. I say unto you, That likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost. Likewise, I say unto you, There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth [d].

happiness or misery of the next; and what advantages the enemy of souls is ever taking to convert them to our destruction.

In this encounter, St. Peter tells us, all we have to do, is stoutly to stand our ground, supported by a vigorous faith, and animated by the examples of other good Christians, engaged in the same cause, and pressed with the same difficulties.

After these seasonable admonitions, the apostle concludes with a prayer, which does so implore the good effects, as at the same time to suggest, that they are the certain comforts and consequences of afflictions rightly undergone. That these are every way consistent with the gracious design of making good men eternally happy; that they are but of short continuance; that they add lustre to such men's virtue, inflame their zeal, fix their resolution, qualify them for greater undertakings, render them at last impregnable, and by conforming them to the likeness of a suffering, resemble them in the end to the triumphs of a victorious, Redeemer. But till this be, (which, if we do not obstruct our own happiness, will not fail to be,) let us remember that we are creatures and servants, and He our Maker and Lord; consequently, that to us belongs submission and obedience and fidelity; to Him "power and glory and dominion, for ever and ever." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[d] Our blessed Master here makes no difficulty to affirm the joy in heaven to be greater, upon the account of one instance of a reclaimed penitent, than for a great many, who, having never been so bad, never stood in need of so strict and painful a repentance. These circumstances, and the reason of them, deserve our very serious attention.

1. Now, as to the angels; although we are but little acquainted with their condition, and the ingredients of their happiness; yet thus much the Scripture hath informed us concerning them, that "they are ministering spirits, sent out to minister for them that shall be heirs of salvation," Heb. i. 14; and that children, both in the natural and spiritual capacity, have those which are styled their angels, Matt. xviii. 10. Those spirits then may be very reasonably, and seem generally to be, thought full of tenderness for their charge, solicitous for their particular safety, and extremely glad of any good that befals them. How these heavenly hosts were affected with the salvation of mankind in general, is evident, from the hymn, with which they attended at the birth of Christ, to welcome Him into the world, Luke ii. 9, &c.; as also from their constant earnest desire of contemplating the mystery of our redemption, 1 Pet. i. 12. Every occasion then of this kind may be glad tidings to them. And, though their nature be far distant from us mortals, and their bliss exquisite, beyond what we are able to conceive: yet, in regard both their nature and their bliss are finite, their joy may certainly admit of an increase. And, as often as a sinner is converted from the evil of his ways, there may spring up a fresh object, and a large and literal addition to it.

But can this properly be said of God too, whose perfection of happiness allows no such accumulations? No, doubtless. And therefore, with respect to Him, we must interpret this, as religion and reason oblige us to understand many like passages, where human parts and passions are attributed to Him. All which is done, that, by such condescending resemblances, He might the better manifest Himself to the weakness of our capacities. As therefore the Holy Ghost, meaning to represent his displeasure and our baseness, does it, by saying that we "provoke him to anger, kindle his fury, grieve" and "weary" his Spirit, and the like: so here, by saying, that God "rejoiceth" over a repenting sinner, is intended that such repentance is highly agreeable to Him.

If it be urged, why so partial in this love? Why "the fatted calf killed" for the prodigal, when he, who paid a constant duty to his father, never had so much as a "kid given him" to make "merry with his friends?" If some, nay, if great joy be just for one, yet ought it to be greater for one, than for ninety and nine? for one once bad, than for so many always good? or, shall we say, it is better to sin and afterwards repent, than not to sin at all, so as shall need such repentance? This difficulty still remains to be considered.

Now we are to remember, that God hath declared, "all souls are mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall die," Ezek. xviii. 4. Implying, that all mankind are, by nature, equally related to God; and that the distinctions, He makes between one man and another, are upon the account of virtue and vice. If then the stray sheep be sought, and the rest, in appearance, neglected in the meanwhile, it is not that the shepherd hath a particular fondness for that sheep above the rest; for He would have done the same for any of them under the same circumstances.

The Collect.

Prov. xxix. 25. Ps. xxxvii. 39, 40; xxxi. 19; lxviii. 34, 35. John vi. 44; xv. 4, 5. Ps. lxix. 16; lxxiii. 24. 2 Cor iii. 5; iv. 16—18. Matt. xvi 26.

O God, the protector of all that trust in thee, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy; Increase and multiply upon us thy mercy; that, thou being our ruler and guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the things eternal: Grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Rom. viii. 18.

I Reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope: because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body[f].

Therefore neither is this part to be too rigorously understood; but as spoken after the manner of men. And the resentments of men are evidently raised by the greatness of a change from the contrary. Thus sickness and pain and danger give a more sprightly relish of safety and ease and health. The surprise of an escape which we did not expect, and the regaining of a treasure we had given for gone, is entertained with transport and rapture; because this gives it us afresh, it is a kind of new accession to our fortunes, and a like thing we never enjoyed before. And such is the case of men immersed in a dissolute and debauched life: an ample subject of pleasure, and even of wonder, when they are "recovered from the snare of the devil," who were long used to be "taken captive by him at his will," 2 Tim. ii. 26. This is a new conquest, and enlarging of Christ's dominion, an addition made to the number of the blessed, and an example, of noble influence, for encouraging others to shake off their chains.

In a word. Joy there will be somewhere, let us act how we please. Only it is at our choice, whether this shall be the joy of devils insulting us in torments, or the joy of God and angels congratulating their own and our unspeakable felicity to endless ages. And the odds between these is so great, the difference so plain, that, if we had not to deal with a generation that have no knowledge, it might look like an affront to the common sense of mankind, to desire that they would "advise and see which" of the two "they will choose, that God may do it unto them." Dean Stanhope.

[e] The fourth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day teaches us to pray unto God, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy, to multiply upon us his mercy, that, He being our ruler and guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the things eternal. Now, because nothing is so apt to discourage and hinder us from seeking or attaining eternal good things, as the temporal evils and sufferings of this present life; therefore the Epistle for the day heartens us under them, with the expectation not only of a speedy relief, but of an eternal reward for them; for "if we suffer with Christ (saith the foregoing verse) we shall also be glorified together." And then setting them one against the other, "I reckon," saith the apostle, "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."

The Gospel is taken out of our blessed Saviour's divine sermon on the mount, as delivered by St. Matthew and St. Luke. The part or portion of it, selected for this day's meditation, contains the great duty and virtue of mercifulness, which is here recommended to us in all its branches. Dr. Hole.

[f] St. Paul, having mentioned our being "joint heirs with Christ," and signified that being likewise "joint sufferers" with him is a condition of obtaining that inheritance, here proves the reasonableness of being well-content with submitting to this condition.

This he proves, as by the common sense and wants of mankind in general, and by the concurrence of Christians in the same opinions and vehement expectations, so by his own authority and certain knowledge. For that word "I reckon" is not, as we sometimes use it in our language, a form of speech importing some remains of doubting, or the giving of an opinion cautiously, with a reserve of deference for others of a different judgment: but it carries the signification of a persuasion, as strong and peremptory, as can possibly be entertained. It implies the having stated an account, considered all matters nicely; the sufferings, the very worst of this present time, on the one part; the glory, the not yet revealed glory, on the other part: and, after all reasonable allowances, and deductions made, upon a fair and exact computation of the whole, St. Paul pronounces the latter so vastly superior to the former, that it is an indignity done to it, so much as to name them together; or to suppose a proportion between them, capable of forming a comparison upon.

It is true, this glory is not yet "revealed" in us. We neither enjoy it, nor have a distinct and adequate notion of it. But this is far from any argument, for abating our value, or cooling our zeal in the pursuit of it. We know it is prepared, and we may know, that its excellence, and our infirmities, are the true reasons, why we continue so much in the dark about it. We know, that it is perfect; that it is all, and above all, that can be wished or thought: whereas our present sufferings are partial, and never destitute of some allay to, or support under, them. In a word, we know, that this is uninterrupted and eternal: but experience plainly demonstrates, that most of our sufferings have comfortable intervals; and that all we can possibly suffer, must quickly have an end.

From this it follows, that "the glory that shall be revealed" is a most powerful argument, for enduring with constancy and meekness "those sufferings of this present time;" to which, how sharp soever, that glory is so in-

The Gospel. St. Luke vi. 36.

BE ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful. Judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven: give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again. And he spake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch? The disciple is not above his master; but every one that is perfect shall be as his master. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye[g].

GRANT, O Lord, we beseech thee, that the course of this finitely an overbalance, as, upon a fair and due calculation, to be injured and dishonoured, by being so much as brought into any comparison with them. God grant us grace to consult, not our duty only, but our interest and happiness, by seriously laying to heart this vast inequality. Which would not only soften, and support us under, any afflictions that can possibly befal us; but curb and conquer that slavish fear of death, of all passions, the most tyrannical and tormenting. A passion, which nothing, but this persuasion thoroughly imbibed, can be a match for; by enabling us to conquer it as Christians, though we cannot wholly suppress and remove it as men. Dean Stanhope.

[g] As Christianity expects of us the most merciful and affectionate deportment, even where offences and injuries are manifest and flagrant; so much more does it oblige us, not to aggravate or resent the actions of others by unjust jealousies, and hard misconstructions. The tendency of these is to render all conversation uneasy, and to destroy peace and charity and mutual good understanding: very particular care therefore is taken by the Christian religion to correct the vice of censuring and judging; than which, as lamentable experience too plainly demonstrates, there is scarce any one more mischievous, and yet more common and predominant in the whole world.

Amongst other arguments used against it by Scripture, a very forcible one is suggested by this passage, which informs us that herein consists the advantage of the charitable man, that God will judge him according to his disposition; and overlook, and be as kind to, his failings, as he hath been sparing of, and tender to, those of his brethren. Whereas to the rigid and censorious and bitter, He will mete their own measure exactly, and go to the extremity of justice. And surely this is discouragement and terror enough in all conscience; to reflect, that by giving a loose to a licentiousness of thought and tongue, we must expect to find no more kindness from God, than men have found from us: for, if God "enter into judgment with his servants, no flesh living can be justified in his sight:" and if He will "be extreme to mark what is done amiss," where is the man able to "abide it?" Ps. cxliii. 2; cxxx. 3.

Least of all are those men qualified to abide it, whose critical observation, and inhuman exposing of other people, is here insinuated by our Lord Himself, to be an effect and mark of their hypocrisy: and whose zeal, to pull out the "mote in their brother's eye," proceeds from being insensible of the "beam, which is in their own." Hereby is likewise intimated, that men, who themselves are grievous sinners, are by no means proper persons to reprove, and put to shame, those who at worst are but their own resemblance: and that the true way to amend mankind is for each man to look at home, and begin with mending one. How much better were it to employ ourselves, in publishing the praises of God, and vindicating the innocence of our abused brethren; in setting every action in its most advantageous light, and pouring balm into the many bleeding reputations, which have been wounded deep, by artificial malice, and words, which, though "smoother than oil," are yet in effect "very swords?" Ps. lv. 21. So should we promote peace and goodness and charity in this world. So should we likewise ensure to ourselves favour at that great and terrible day, when "by our words we shall be justified, and by our words we shall be condemned," Matt. xii. 37. That day, in which even the secrets of all hearts shall be brought into judgment; every hard uncharitable thought placed to account; and in which therefore it is of the last concern, most earnestly to endeavour, and to pray, that our "good Lord" may "deliver us." Dean Stanhope.

[h] The fifth Sunday after Trinity.] We are taught in the Collect for this day to beseech Almighty God, that the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by his governance, that the Church may joyfully serve Him in all godly quietness. To effect or bring this to pass, the Epistle for this day prescribes this excellent advice to that end, "Be ye all of one mind;" signifying to us, that unity of mind and judgment is the best means to preserve the peace of the Church and all godly quietness; and likewise that diversity of opinions is the main cause of all the discord and confusion that happens in it. And therefore, St. Paul, in his last advice to the Corinthians, joins them both together, saying, "Finally, brethren, be of one mind, live in peace," 2 Cor. xiii. 11; thereby intimating, that there is a connexion, or mutual dependence of these two upon each other, that unity will put an end to divisions, and the best way to live in peace, is to be of one mind. Dr. Hole.

The Epistle. 1 St. Peter iii. 8.

BE ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts[1].

The Gospel. St. Luke v. 1.

IT came to pass, that as the people pressed upon him to hear the Word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesareth, and saw two ships standing by the lake; but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets. And he entered into one of the ships which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land: and he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship. Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. And Simon answering said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net. And when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net brake. And they beckoned unto their partners which were in the other ship, that they

[1] The apostle had, in the close of the second and beginning of this chapter, inculcated such duties, as Christians are obliged to, by virtue of some particular relations and capacities, wherein the providence of God hath placed them. After which, he proceeds here to some of a more general nature, ver. 8, whose obligation is of extent, equal with this religion itself; and such, as all who profess it have a concern in. But, though no person be exempted from, no time improper for, the exercise of them; yet are they more especially seasonable in persecution and affliction. Unanimity in principles, mutual forbearances, tender affection, fellow-feeling of hardships, that bear close upon our brethren, and all the comforts and encouragements of a kind and condescending deportment; as they are indications of a temper most truly resembling the meek and holy Jesus: so are they the best defence against a common enemy; and of mighty efficacy, to soften, and keep up the hearts of each other, under the calamities, which a whole set of men shall be exposed to, by being all embarked in the same good cause. Assistances, which nothing can so well prove the power of, as experience. And such, as they, who want the wisdom mutually to contribute to each other, do manifestly take the adversary's part, and betray their own safety, or lose their consolation. They break that force, which, united, might make head against their danger; and add to that burden whose weight would be abated, if each were ready to bear a part in it, by esteeming the sufferings of others his own, and acting in concert against them accordingly.

But even, when thus joined, and disposed to all the charitable offices, ver. 9, which the same profession, and the same distress, ought to produce in persons, so nearly and so many ways allied; they are not at liberty to enter into all sorts of measures. They are presumed to suffer wrongfully, and to be blackened with malicious calumnies; which are designed to give countenance to the injuries they sustain, by representing them as persons that deserve to suffer. But wrong must not be repaid with wrong, nor falsehood with falsehood, no nor yet true reproaches with the like.

That then, which Christians, when persecuted and injured, have to do, is not to let any of those despondencies overwhelm their spirits, which their oppressors are labouring to drive them to; and which they, who have none but human helps to depend upon, find it impossible to bear up against. They must "sanctify the Lord God in their hearts:" that is, testify their belief of his glorious attributes to all the world. And this is done, when they depend upon his power to extricate them out of (otherwise invincible) difficulties, and so flee to, and rest upon Him, as a sure sanctuary. When they refer to his wisdom and justice the season and the methods of exeeuting vengeance upon those wicked men who "smite down his people," and "trouble his faithful" ones: when, notwithstanding any delays in the accomplishment, they buoy up their sinking spirits with the certainty of his promises: and lastly, be the event of these things at present what it will, when they stedfastly adhere to their duty, at the expense of all the world counts dear, and will not be prevailed upon for any terms to incur his displeasure. Men of this disposition do Him true honour; and as they may reasonably hope that "his eyes will be" always "over them," and "his ears open to their prayers," Ps. xxxiv. 15; so are they in the true frame of mind, for offering up the prayer of this day in particular, even that "the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by his governance, that his Church may joyfully serve Him in all godly quietness, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Dean Stanhope.

should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink. When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord. For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken; and so was also James, and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men. And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed him[k].

The Epistle. Rom. vi. 3.

KNOW ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall [k] By following Christ, which the apostles are said to have done, three things are manifestly intended.

1. The disciples were the constant followers and attendants upon his person; for they went up and down with Him wherever He went, they were the eye-witnesses of his miracles, and the ear-witnesses of his discourses; and, though He sometimes withdrew from them into places of solitude and retirement upon some extraordinary occasions, yet, for the most part, they were daily companions with Him, and the constant spectators both of his glories and troubles; as we may read at large in all the four Evangelists. This way of following Christ was peculiar to the apostles and first disciples, who had the honour of seeing and conversing with Him during his abode upon earth; a privilege not to be enjoyed by any since his ascension into heaven. But there are two ways of following Christ still attainable by us; in both which senses we are still his followers.

As, 2. By following his doctrine and learning of Him. This privilege the apostles had by receiving the word from Christ's own mouth; but we have it at second hand by receiving it from them who have handed it down to us. However, the doctrine is the same in both, and we are as well taught by Him now, as they were then. He that teaches another, and instils his instructions into him, is said to be his master; and they that are taught by him, and embrace his tenets, are styled his followers. Now we are bid as much to "learn of him" as his first disciples; and his apostles inculcate upon us the same lessons as He did upon them; namely, that "the same mind should be in us, as was in Christ Jesus:" so that as He was equally a teacher to them and us, so are we equally his disciples and followers as well as they; and so we may all well be, for He was a "Teacher come from God:" and was alone able to deliver "the words of eternal life." He hath given us the best instructions and assistances too that were ever communicated to the world, and hath delivered the most sublime and heavenly truths, that we are capable of receiving; by learning whereof, we cannot miss the way to eternal life; and so by embracing them, we are truly and properly said to be his followers.

3. To be a follower of Christ, is to follow his example, and to act by the pattern that He hath set us; he that treads in the same steps after another, is said to follow him: and he that takes Christ for his director and guide, and walks even as He walked, may be justly reckoned in the number of his followers. Now Christ hath given us the best example for our imitation; He hath gone every step of our way to heaven before us, to the intent, saith the apostle, "that we should follow his steps, who did no sin, neither was any guile found in his mouth." He hath set before us the most excellent pattern of love, meekness, humility, and patience, and indeed of all other virtues; in which we are bid to "be followers of him as dear children;" and when we are arrived to that, we may be said with the disciples in the Gospel, to "forsake all, and follow him." Dr. Hole.

[l] The sixth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day reminds us of the good things which God hath prepared for them that love Him, which are indeed such as pass man's understanding; and from thence teaches us to pray to Him to pour into our hearts such love towards Him, that we, loving Him above all things, may obtain his promises, which exceed all that we can desire, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Now because these good things are obtained for us by the death of Christ, and the promises of them depend much upon his resurrection; therefore the Epistle for the day mentions our conformity to both, as the best means to procure a title to them, and to secure an interest in them; which things are represented to us in our baptism, and the profession made in it obliges us to them.

The Gospel contains another part of Christ's sermon on the mount, wherein He vindicates the law from all false glosses, and refines it into a more pure and perfect rule of life and manners. Dr. Hole.

also live with him; knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reekon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord[m].

The Gospel. St. Matth. v. 20.

JESUS said unto his disciples, Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of heaven. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill: and whosoever shall kill, shall be in danger of the judgement. But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgement: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing[n].

[m] How greatly and ardently is it to be desired, that the generality of Christians would seriously lay this Scripture to heart! That they would now and then reflect upon the engagements, and the end, of baptism! That they would carefully examine, what conformity is to be found, between themselves and a dead and risen Saviour; and be convinced, that they have no foundation for hope in, nor benefit from, that death and resurrection, farther than such conformity can justify their title! Men would not then content themselves with such a lame obedience, as covers, and quite swallows up, a few faint essays towards, or acts of, piety and virtue, with frequent and grievous relapses in sin: as if the Lord, whom they are bound to imitate, had died often, and lain long buried, but rose and lived for very short intervals. They would not think it sufficient to lead a life of ease and idleness, of no use, no example, as if the doing of good were of no consequence, but the abstaining from notorious evil were the whole of their engagement; which, indeed, is in some degree to copy after a dead, but by no means after a risen and living Saviour. Much less could any, who attend to this passage, allow themselves in such habits, as are a scandal to religion, and a virtual abjuration of their baptismal covenant. Adultery and lewdness, gluttony and drunkenness, covetousness and ambition, strife and revenge, profaneness and irreligion: these are such raging plagues, as assault the very seat of our spiritual life: the persons guilty of them could not do a kinder thing to the credit of Christianity, than openly to renounce it. I had almost said, not a kinder thing to themselves, since they only profess it to their heavier condemnation; since they neither imitate their Lord, nor any servant of his, except that traitorous one, who said, "Master, Master, and kissed him," as a signal to those enemies, who came under his conduct to take, and to mock, and to kill Him. Dean Stanhope.

[n] The Gospel of this day may teach us, 1. to carry our righteousness above and beyond that of the scribes and Pharisees; they were curious about the outside, and were fair and beautiful without, but within full of filth and rottenness. But let us endeavour to cleanse the heart, and see that matters be right within. They stuck to the letter of the law, without minding the true intent of it; but let us look more to the spiritual sense and meaning of it, and observe it in the full extent of it. They condemned gross sins, and connived at less; and, if they abstained from the outward act, could allow themselves in the inward motions, occasions, and tendencies to it; but let us lay the axe to the very root, and cut down every branch of iniquity. They rested in the external acts of religion, as prayer, fasting, and almsgiving, without regarding the true ends or manner of performing them; but let us look more to our aims and intentions in these duties, that they may be rightly to the glory of God, and the good of our own and others' souls. In a word, the Pharisees were proud, partial, and hypocritical, in their righteousness; and therefore let us exceed them in the humility, integrity, and sincerity of ours; for since heaven and happiness lie beyond the bounds and extent of their righteousness, we must inevitably perish and miscarry with them, if we go not farther than they. 2. Let our obedience to God's laws extend to the whole design and intention of them. In the affirmative precepts, let it reach to all the means, motives, and incentives requisite to the observance of them; in the negative precepts, let it take in all the occasions, steps, and tendencies, to the breach of them. Particularly in keeping the sixth Commandment against killing, here mentioned, let us avoid all rash and causeless anger, all malice and hatred, that naturally lead to it; for malice is a frequent occasion and forerunner of murder, and St. John tells us, that "he that hateth his brother is a murderer," 1 John iii. 15; for hatred is attended with a desire of taking away the object of it, either by himself or another. Moreover, let us avoid all virulent and opprobrious speeches, such as calling our brother Raca, or fool, a vain, empty, witless, and wicked fellow, which commonly provoke to rage, and draw on murder. In short, "let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from us, with all malice;" especially when we draw nigh to holy things; and let us "be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us;" reconciling ourselves to our greatest foes. And let

The Epistle. Rom. vi. 19.

I Speak after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity, unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness, unto holiness. For when ye were the servants of sin, ye were free from righteousness. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord[p].

that be done quickly, lest it be too late; and so, by living in peace and charity with God and man here, we shall live in eternal peace and joy with both hereafter. Dr. Hole.

[o] The seventh Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day beseeches the Lord of all power and might, who is the author and giver of all good things, to graft in our hearts the love of his name, to increase in us true religion, to nourish us with all goodness, and of his great mercy to keep us in the same. The Epistle for the day is the latter part of the same chapter from whence that for the last Sunday was taken; where the apostle having shewed the new converted Romans the efficacy of Christ's death for the killing of sin, and the virtue of his resurrection for the quickening of them to a life of righteousness, he exhorts them to a conformable practice. To which end, he here in the close of the chapter accommodates himself to their weakness, and labours to convince them of the great danger of their former sinful courses, and likewise of the safety and happiness that is to be found in the ways of righteousness. Dr. Hole.

The miracle recorded in the Gospel, though differing in some few circumstances, is, with regard to the almighty operation effecting it, the same as is recorded in the Gospel for the fourth Sunday in Lent. The parts of Dalmanutha, ver. 10, answer to the coasts of Magdala, Matt. xv. 39. Magdala is said to have been a town so considerable, as to give name to a tract of the country about it. Hence some have thought Dalmanutha a village within that division. Others, taking Magdala for the town of that name only, suppose our Lord to have come into that part of the coast between this and Dalmanutha; so that either of them might be named indifferently. These places lie near each other, in the half tribe of Manasseh, beyond Jordan. Dean Stanhope.

[p] In drawing a comparison in this passage between a state of sin and of holiness, St. Paul does not set himself here to prove, as might most easily be proved, that the toil and drudgery of a course of vice is insupportable; and that men would have unanswerable objections to religion, should it impose upon us commands, in any degree so slavish and tyrannical as our own lusts and passions do; but, as he is treating with converts, that had broken their chains, and asserted their native liberty, he therefore contents himself with the mention of such consequences, as that service, even when forsaken, does naturally produce. Of these one present and inseparable effect is "shame;" which, to a mind of any ingenuity, must needs be very grating and terrible: for what can make a man amends for the continual reproaches of his own breast, and the reflections of having long persisted in facts which cannot be remembered without the utmost confusion? On the contrary, when we are happily got loose from this tyranny, and become our own men, reason never fails to justify, nor conscience to applaud, our better choice. And these are satisfactions so suited to human nature, that all the commendations, nay, all the honours and rewards, capable of being bestowed by the whole world upon an ill action, are not an equivalent for the private pleasure and peace, which result from a testimony within, borne even to the most traduced, afflicted, and persecuted virtue.

Again; the "end of these things is death;" death of the body, even when renounced and repented of; but otherwise death, that is, infinite and irreversible misery of body and soul both. And what a lamentable consideration is this, that, after unconceivable labour and pain, a man hath not only purchased reproach and self-condemnation, but ensured to himself remorse and torment, without interval or end? Whereas, by employing his time in the gentle and agreeable service of God, he acts every day more and more in compliance with the dictates of reason, advances and improves human nature, exults and triumphs with inward peace and joy, which carry him through his work with alacrity and delight; but, when that work is brought to a conclusion, he is paid, and overpaid, for all the difficulties in it, by a bliss, of which all his former satisfactions were foretastes and pledges: a bliss therefore styled "life," because all that is dear and desirable is implied and included in it: and a bliss that is life indeed, because subject to no decay from within, nor to any destruction from without.

There is yet one very remarkable circumstance behind, greatly to the advantage of a holy life. It is that the "death" inflicted upon sin is the "wages" of it; what God hath expressly threatened and given men sufficient warning of; and therefore what they, who know beforehand upon what terms they enslave themselves, and who have so many assistances and opportunities put into their hands of being free and happy, do by their obstinacy deserve. But the "eternal life," awarded to good men, is what the very best of them neither do, nor ever can deserve. For what can we deserve of reward hereafter for embracing that virtue which so amply rewards its own practice here? How can a happiness be strictly merited, between the eternity whereof, and the very short term we serve for it, there is no manner of proportion? What claim can an obedience lay, which is interrupted with multitudes of backslidings and neglects, each whereof would in rigour evacuate its title? We may indeed deserve our punishments, because sin is our own, entirely

The Gospel. St. Mark viii. 1.

IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them, I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat: and if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way; for divers of them came from far. And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness? And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven. And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground. And he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people. And they had a few small fishes; and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them. So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets. And they that had eaten were about four thousand. And he sent them away[q].

our own act; but can we, with any good sense, be said to deserve a recompense, and such a recompense, for acts, not entirely, not originally, ours; and that at his hands too, whose free grace and good Spirit it is that worketh in us both the will and the deed? Most justly, therefore, doth the apostle put the difference here between "wages" and "gift:" that is the effect of justice, this of bounty; a bounty not inclined by any consideration moving it on our part; but redounding to, and descending upon us, by and for the sake of a person who hath, it must be confessed, merited it to the uttermost: even Jesus Christ, whose servants we are, who condescended to purchase it at the price of his own blood: and therefore not unto us be the praise, or any part of it, but unto Him be honour, and glory, and thanks, "for this his unspeakable gift." Dean Stanhope.

[q] Since the necessities of our brethren in want are by far more and greater, than the liberality of the wealthiest and most open-handed man can possibly supply; it is absolutely necessary that we should make some distinction. Wherein we shall do well to imitate our Lord's conduct, as exemplified by this miracle, in the following particulars.

1. That we generally bestow our charity upon such, as are least in a condition of sustaining themselves; for that which the desert was to these multitudes, the same in effect are old age, maimed limbs, long sickness, multitude of helpless children, and the calamities which more immediately and visibly come from the hand of God, to the poor in general. They disable them, I mean, from furnishing themselves by painful labour and honest industry; and, in so doing, they lay them at our doors, and charge us with them: but as for them, whom pride or profusion, sloth or vice, have reduced; them, who continue poor only because they will not take any trouble to be otherwise; the laws of God have not commanded, and those of men wisely discountenance, the same compassion for such. To them, who make wandering and beggary a trade, and choose the shame, but ease, of that, before an honest and laborious livelihood, the best and truest charity is what Solomon and our own laws have prescribed, "a scourge for the sluggard, and a rod for the fool's back." Want then, involuntary want, is the proper recommendation to our pity and relief. And this is to be rated, not always according to what men stand in need of, but sometimes according to the circumstances from which they are fallen: not always according to what they endure, but often by their being more or less destitute of remedies and helps against it. This gives the widow and the fatherless, the outcast and the stranger, a double title to our pity; if their necessities be the same with those of other persons, who yet have relations and friends, to assist and take care of them.

2. These multitudes followed Christ for his miracles and his doctrine; and hence we may learn, that those poor ought to have a preference, who frequent and love the worship and service of God, and lead honest and orderly lives. If the image of God in man be the true ground of our charity, then they, who are doubly like Him, are doubly worthy of our charity: and therefore great difference should be made, between those lewd and scandalous wretches, who deface and dishonour his likeness impressed upon their souls; and them, who by their virtues, and such improvements as their circumstances are capable of, endeavour to resemble Him more and more: to the similitude of nature, adding that better and more valuable one of goodness and grace.

3. Once more, this action of our Lord instructs us, that it suffices, if our charity minister to present necessities; without thinking itself obliged to provide either that which is superfluous, or so much as may arm men against future contingencies. It shews us too, that managery is an ornament, and an advantage to our charity. And to this purpose that advice of St. Paul is highly commendable, that men would contrive their distributions so, as to be regular and easy, by "laying up in store of that which God hath prospered them with," 1 Cor. xvi. 2, as their affairs will permit. Thus would our alms be always in readiness, and the poor would have a separate purse: a fund that, by rising insensibly, would be parted with less grudgingly; a tribute due for our successes; a most reasonable return to Him, from whom we receive our all; nay, who condescends to accept of part of his own again, as not only paid back, but given to Himself; and who will not fail in his own time and way to recompense it accordingly, either before, or at, the last great day of account. Dean Stanhope.

[r] The eighth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day beseeches God, whose never-failing providence ordereth all things, both in heaven and earth, to put away from us all hurtful things, and to give us those things which be profitable for us.

Now the things hurtful to us are chiefly the works of in heaven and earth; we humbly beseech thee to put away from us all hurtful things, and to give us those things which be profitable for us; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Rom. viii. 12.

BRETHREN, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together[s].

The Gospel. St. Matth. vii. 15.

BEWARE of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits: do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven[t].

the flesh, which lead us to death and damnation; and the things profitable for us are the fruits of the Spirit, which lead to life and salvation. Accordingly the Epistle for the day treats of both these, exhorting us to put away the one, and to put on the other.

The Gospel is another part or portion of our blessed Saviour's sermon on the mount, wherein He cautions his disciples and followers against false prophets and teachers; letting them know the manner and ends of their coming, and giving them some marks of distinction to discover and discern them by. Dr. Hole.

[s] From this Epistle we are instructed in the following lessons:

1. From our not being debtors to the flesh, we are taught to abandon all the sinful lusts and desires of it, and that too upon pain of death and damnation; for, if we live after the flesh, we shall die. Indeed to satisfy the ordinary and natural cravings of the flesh, is necessary to preserve our bodily life; but to gratify the unlawful and irregular motions of it, will bring upon us death temporal and eternal.

2. Being debtors to live after the Spirit, let us labour to discharge that obligation, by giving up ourselves to the guidance and conduct of God's Holy Spirit, following the direction of his light, and the influence of his grace in all our ways. This is to walk "worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called," and to "walk as becometh the Gospel of Christ;" which will stand the trial of the last day, and secure to us the reward of eternal life; "for there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

3. From the great privilege of sonship granted to all such, we may learn to behave ourselves as the sons and children of God. The duty of children, we know, is to love their parents with a hearty and entire affection; to shew to them obedience; to place a trust and confidence in them, and a dependence upon their care and provision for them: and in like manner should we consider it our bounden duty to love, to shew our obedience to, and place our trust and confidence in, our heavenly Father.

4. From God's making all his sons heirs, we learn the exceeding great honour and dignity, to which Christianity brings its followers; it makes them heirs at present, and if they act in a manner worthy of their Christian profession, will shortly enter them into the possession of a kingdom, and that not an earthly fading kingdom, that soon vanishes away, but a kingdom in heaven, that never can be moved or taken from them. "Now are we the sons of God," saith the apostle, "but it doth not yet appear what we shall be; this we know, that when he shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory." Dr. Hole.

[t] Our Saviour in this passage warns his disciples against two sorts of deceivers: "false Christs," or such as should pretend to be the Messiah; "false prophets," or such as should pretend to own Christianity, but should draw persons away from the simplicity of the Gospel. The ground of his caution is, "they come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves:" that is, they make fair pretences to strictness in religion, with which their real character is at variance. Hence we may learn,

1. That such as go about to seduce others, usually pretend to extraordinary measures of sanctity themselves, that they may raise an admiration among those, who judge of saints more by their looks than their lives; more by their expressions than their actions. What pious looks and devout gestures; what long prayers and frequent fastings, were observed by the hypocritical Pharisees, beyond what Christ and his disciples ever practised!

2. From the rule laid down by our Saviour, "by their fruits ye shall know them," we may learn, that the best method which we can take for judging of teachers pretending to be sent by God, is to examine the design and tendency of their doctrines, and the course and tenour of their conversations. Good teachers, like good trees, will bring forth "the good fruits" of truth and

The Epistle. 1 Cor. x. 1.

BRETHREN, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink: (for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ.) But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it [x].

holiness: but evil men and seducers, like corrupt trees, will bring forth error and wickedness in their life and doctrine.

3. From our Saviour's declaration, "Not every one saith unto him, Lord, Lord," that owneth Him by way of profession, by way of prayer, by way of appeals, shall be saved; "but he that doeth the will of his Father," sincerely and universally: we may learn that multitudes at the great day shall be disowned by Christ, as none of his servants who did nominally own Him for their Lord and Master: that the bare name of Christianity, without the practice of it, is a very insufficient ground, whereon to build our hopes of heaven: and that a profession of faith, and purposes of obedience, without actual obedience to the commands of God, will avail no man living to salvation. Burkitt.

[u] The ninth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day beseeches God to grant to us his Spirit, to think and do always such things as be rightful, that we, who cannot do any thing that is good without Him, may by Him be enabled to live according to his will. Accordingly, the Epistle for the day teaches us to think aright concerning the Church, both under the Law and under the Gospel; and likewise to do aright by the directions of it under both dispensations. And because, of ourselves, we can neither think nor do as God would have us, we are to implore the assistance of his Holy Spirit, to enable us to please Him in both. Lest Christians now should boast of higher and greater privileges than the Jews had of old, and so be exalted above measure by the abundance of the Gospel revelations; the apostle tells them, that the Israelites of old were the people of God as well as we, and had the like favours and miraculous works vouchsafed to them under the Law, as are now afforded to us under the Gospel; and as they were punished for their ingratitude and abuse of God's mercies, so we may not hope to go unpunished, if we run into the like enormities.

In the Gospel for the day we are presented with the parable of the master and the unjust steward: in which are figuratively represented to us, 1. The great bounty and goodness of God in dispensing his blessings. 2. The great injustice and unfaithfulness of men in wasting and abusing them. 3. The great danger and difficulties that ensue upon so doing. And, 4. The best means to prevent these evils, and to turn the good things to a better account. Dr. Hole.

[x] The history of Moses, as referred to in the several instances mentioned in this Epistle, leads us to examples of God's severity, even upon his chosen and covenanted people; and shews, that Christians cannot, by being such, promise themselves exemption from the like judgments, if they shall, by the like disobedience, render themselves obnoxious to his angry justice. But the inference, which, in the infancy of the Christian church, St. Paul could ground upon parity of reason, and in comparison with the Jews only: we, in these latter ages, may strengthen from matter of fact; and events that have already befallen this Christian church itself. The parts of it, once most conspicuous and flourishing for soundness of faith, and piety of life, have long since been overrun with Mahometism and barbarity. The light of the Gospel is taken away from them, and they are once more given up to the blackest darkness of sin and infidelity. Nor is the case thus with whole nations only, who have been abandoned by God, after having first abandoned themselves to wickedness; but, where the truth is still professed, with private persons also, whose punishments resemble those of the Israelites, where their transgressions have done so. For how often does the wisdom of Providence exert itself, in undoing men by their own foolish choice? How common a thing is it, for the sensual and the worldly to have his inordinate desires gratified to his manifest detriment; and those honours, or riches, or pleasures, which he sought, as the most desirable

The Gospel. St. Luke xvi. 1.

JESUS said unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig, to beg I am ashamed. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord? And he said, An hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore. And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations[y].

blessings of life, made his curse, and his ruin? How frequently do discontent and distrust, weariness and impatience, delay, or utterly put by, those good, and hasten or occasion those evil things, which, by waiting the leisure, and submitting to the methods of the great Governor of the world, would be ordered infinitely more to our advantage? But especially (which is the punishment, common to all the instances of disobedience recited in this Scripture, and which indeed is the heaviest of them all) how certain are the vicious dispositions and practices, contrary to our vows and our duty, to bring us under that common fate of the rebellious Israelites, of being excluded the land of promise: and so, whatever be our portion in the wilderness of this world, to cut off all access to the heavenly Canaan?

In one word, no covenant can be more solemn and express, than that between God and his ancient people. No promises on his, no engagements on man's part, more firm. The marks and miraculous appearances of his presence and favour were then as evident and as glorious; their privileges and deliverances were as distinguishing and valuable, as the condition of that church could admit. Yet, all this notwithstanding, when they so foully violated their part, they did at the same time release God of his. They therefore, from the most signal monuments of the divine goodness and mercy, becoming by their own perverseness the most stupendous monuments of wrath and vengeance; have furnished us with abundant ground for that inference at the 12th verse, "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Dean Stanhope.

[y] This parable sets before us a steward, about to be dismissed from that gainful office, for his improvident behaviour in it. This melancholy prospect puts him upon contriving, how to secure himself a future maintenance at his master's cost. The method chosen for this purpose was to deal secretly with his lord's debtors, and, by making false, but favourable entries, into their books of account, to engage their kindness when he should stand most in need of it, as a grateful return for the sums thus remitted to them. In this practice indeed there was great dishonesty, for which reason our Saviour calls him an "unjust steward," ver. 8; but that part of his character, not falling within the compass of our Lord's design in propounding this parable, is passed over, without farther notice taken of it. Meanwhile his silence in that point can by no means be construed into approbation; but an instruction rather, that, in the interpretation of parables, we are to content ourselves with drawing such consequences from thence, as their substance and main intent naturally lead us to; without insisting too nicely upon circumstances which are incidental only, and beside the purpose, properly to be served by them. Now that, in the case before us, is manifestly to provoke our imitation of this man's wit and forecast; who so dextrously laid the scheme for subsisting hereafter, by the management of a trust, which although a present support, yet he perceived was not likely long to continue so. And his great providence and application, so agreeable to that earnestness of thought and care, which sticks at nothing to secure the so uncertain advantages of this world, is insinuated as a just reproach to the inconsideration and remissness, which even they, who make it their principle and profession to secure the everlasting advantages of another world, are observed to be guilty of in the management of that affair.

Let us then make a proper use of the parable, and allow it to awaken our diligence in this great concern of our souls and a future state. Let us consider our character, and the account to be given of it: that our stewardship can be but short: and therefore, that no time should be lost in getting the best security we can, for an habitation which may last for ever. Let us be wise and generous at the same time, by turning that wealth, which is one of our most dangerous temptations, into an occasion of the most profitable virtue. Let us adore the wisdom of our gracious Lord, who thus instructs us, how to improve the perishing dross of this world, into a "crown that fadeth not away for ever in the heavens," 1 Pet. v. 4. Let us adore that goodness which so amply rewards a small return of his own gifts: and "shew mercy with cheerfulness," Rom. xii. 8, since sure to be accepted when employing his riches to our own true interest: in a word, let us always remember, that we are stewards; and manage every gift entrusted with us, as men that must give an account. So shall we provide effectually against our dismission from this service; and, when we fail, as shortly fail we must, shall be sure to find "friends"

The Epistle. 1 Cor. xii. 1.

CONCERNING spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God, who worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will[a].

ready and glad to "receive us into everlasting habitations." Which God of his mercy grant we may, for Jesus Christ's sake. Dean Stanhope.

[z] The tenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day beseeches the Lord, to let his merciful ears be open to the prayers of his humble servants; and that they may obtain their petitions, to make them ask such things as shall please Him. And that we may be the better enabled to ask such things, the Epistle of the day treats "concerning spiritual gifts," which the apostle here declares to be so useful and so necessary a piece of knowledge, that he would by no means "have us ignorant of it:" and to the end that the Christian church might be rightly instructed in so divine and excellent a subject, he here treats at large of the nature, the Author, the number, and the use of these spiritual gifts. Dr. Hole.

In the passage preceding the Gospel of the day, the Evangelist had just described our blessed Saviour's triumphant passage to Jerusalem, the respects paid Him in his way, and the general joy and acclamations at his entrance into the city. The divine mixture of compassion and zeal, then expressed by Himself, is the subject of this day's Gospel. The "former" was seen in those tears of pity drawn from his eyes, and in the tender lamentations of that ruin, and all the dismal circumstances of it, which He here most punctually foretels, as a punishment now determined, for avenging the Jews' obstinate infidelity, and affected blindness. The "latter" appears in his resentment of the profanations committed upon the "temple," in driving out those that sold and bought there, and reproaching them with that injustice and extortion, which turned that "house" into a "den of thieves;" though they could not but be sensible that God had asserted a peculiar property in it, and designed it purely for the uses of piety and devotion. Dean Stanhope.

[a] Although it be allowed on all hands, that the gifts mentioned in this passage are those miraculous ones, which, though necessary in the first ages of the Church, have long since been withdrawn, upon that necessity ceasing; we ought nevertheless bear in mind, that there are also assistances and gifts, of use and continuance in all ages of Christianity, to which the force of the apostle's reasoning extends itself. These likewise are the gifts of God; these are given to be exercised for promoting his glory, and the good of mankind; and these are so distributed, that every man may be in some, though none in all, respects serviceable; but all have their particular stations and endowments, in which, if rightly chosen, and diligently improved, they are fitted to discharge their duty, by bringing honour to God and benefit to the world.

It is also presumed, by some, that St. Paul here, as well as at the end of the chapter, speaks of gifts imparted to, and exercised by, those that are frequently distinguished under the title of "spiritual persons;" such as bore some office in the Church, or administered in holy things. The occasions, and in proportion the supplies, of these persons, no doubt, were greater than those of common men. And some of the gifts, specified in this passage, seem in a more peculiar manner accommodated to their character. But here again I cannot but apprehend it of importance for every Christian, in what capacity soever, to think himself concerned. And this, without all controversy, is the intent of our excellent Church, when propounding this Scripture, in the yearly Epistle for this day, to the pious meditation of all her children. It is, that they might be reminded whence their good gifts come; awakened to a conscientious improvement of them; thankful for, and contented with, what they have received; humble and modest in their opinions of themselves; diligent in the business of their particular callings; useful and profitable to the body in general; tender and respectful to their brethren; compassionate to their failings, liberal and kind to their wants, and glad of their advantages. For these are the good qualities which this Epistle aims at promoting: qualities, which it is as reasonable for us to cultivate, as we are bound by our religious obligations to cultivate them. Dean Stanhope.

over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation. And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought, saying unto them, It is written, My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves. And he taught daily in the temple[b].

O God, who declarest thy almighty power most chiefly in shewing mercy and pity; Mercifully grant unto us such a measure of thy grace, that we, running the way of thy commandments, may obtain thy gracious promises, and be made partakers of thy heavenly treasure; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. 1 Cor. xv. 1.

BRETHREN, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached

[b] The expression, by which our Saviour here describes the place dedicated to God's worship, suggests to us with what respect the Church ought to be regarded, considering it, 1. as it is "the house of God," and, 2. as it is "the house of prayer."

1. The church, considered as God's house, obliges us to demean ourselves in it, as under God's more immediate presence and observation. His presence and his eyes, no doubt, are every where; but yet we are taught to believe, that He manifests Himself in some places after a more especial manner than in others. Not that we attribute to these places an holiness inherent and essential, but such as is relative only, and due for the sake of their owner and inhabitant; and therefore all aspersions, that charge such respect with idolatry or superstition, proceed either from great ignorance or great perverseness.

2. As the church is a "house of prayer," every man should be careful effectually to make it such to himself; that the offices, performed there, may be frequented conscientiously, and joined in devoutly. The benefits of publick prayer are many and great; and our petitions, when with united force ascending to heaven, bid much fairer for acceptance and success, than any the most vehement importunities of a single and solitary devotion: particularly the unanimous and uniform prayers of the Church express the unity of our faith, our mutual charity, our joint relation to Christ, the mystical Head of this body. In this regard, prayer and sacraments have an advantage above reading, or hearing, or any other religious duties: and probably this may be one main reason why God's house is called the "house of prayer;" for preaching and expounding are indeed instructions in our duty, sent from God for our good; but we may be instructed by pious advice, and useful books at home: we may likewise pray alone, but we cannot do the one or the other alone so as to testify to the world our communion with Christ and with one another, like the same things done in the publick assemblies of Christians. Hence every one should make a conscience of improving every opportunity for such prayers; because every one is obliged to acknowledge that spiritual society, the being a member whereof does (originally speaking) put him in a capacity of salvation.

But to come is a small thing, unless we join too; join with our hearts, with our mouths, with our whole bodies. The minister pronounces the petitions in the people's name and behalf; but let it not be supposed, that he will be heard for any, who neglect to pray for themselves. Every one, therefore, should repeat the confessions, to acknowledge his own sin and vileness; and the creeds, to declare and confirm his own faith; and the Lord's Prayer, to call God Father with his own mouth. The hearts of the people should go silently, and reverently, along with him, in all the other parts of the service, and confirm every Collect for themselves, by expressing the earnest desires of their souls, in a distinct and hearty Amen. As oft as he says, "Let us pray," they should recollect their wandering thoughts, rouse their heavy hearts, and double their vehemence and zeal. And throughout all the Litanies and answers, they should be very diligent to do their part; esteeming it (as in truth it is) a singular privilege, that the lay-members of the Church of England have a greater share allotted to them in her offices, than those probably of any other persuasion. This may be safely affirmed; that, if our public prayers be defective, it must be on the part of those that use them. For the Church hath taken admirable care of her part: and by the prudent constitution of a most excellent Liturgy, gives us great hopes of obtaining the mercy, which we are directed to beg in the Collect for this day. Namely, that being thus taught to "ask such things as please God, his merciful ears will be open" (and may they ever be open) "to the prayers of" us "his humble servants, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[c] The eleventh Sunday after Trinity.] We are taught to pray this day for such a measure of divine grace, that, by running the way of God's commandments, we may obtain his gracious promises, and be made partakers of his heavenly treasure. The grace here chiefly prayed for, is the grace of faith, to which the running of the ways of God's commandments, and the obtaining of the promises, are frequently ascribed. And in this we may be the more confirmed by the Epistle appointed for the day: in which the apostle labours to establish the Corinthians and in them all Christians in a firm belief of the death, burial, and resurrection of our Saviour; which he the rather did, because some false teachers had crept in among them, who denied the resurrection, and had shaken the faith of many in that great article, as some have likewise attempted to do in our days.

The Gospel for the day sets forth, in a parable, the unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand: by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried; and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present; but some are fallen asleep: after that he was seen of James; then of all the Apostles: and last of all, he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time. For I am the least of the Apostles, that am not meet to be called an Apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God. But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me. Therefore whether it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed[d].

The Gospel. St. Luke xviii. 9.

JESUS spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others: Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a Publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican: I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the Publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased: and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted[e].

right way and manner of praying unto God, and the certain good success that will ensue upon the due performing of it; as also a wrong way of address to Him, too often used, with the bad issue and unsuccessfulness thereof. Dr. Hole.

[d] The assertion of our Lord's dying and rising from the dead, as a necessary and well-attested article of the Christian faith, which is contained in the former part of this Epistle, having been spoken to on former occasions; it may be more useful here to remark on the latter part, which is introduced incidentally by the apostle, and contains a digression concerning himself. In this he hath left us an example of these following virtues:

1. Of humility, and a mean opinion of our own performances, even when highly useful and commendable; in allowing to others their just praises and deserts, and being so far from any vain-glorious emulation, or detracting from their worth, as to practise that modesty and "lowliness of mind" elsewhere prescribed, of "esteeming others better than ourselves. I am the least of the apostles," &c. Phil. ii. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 9.

2. A frequent recollection even of those faults from which it is our happiness to be perfectly reclaimed. For though God, in the greatness of his mercy, vouchsafe to blot out and forget these, yet it is highly necessary for us to keep them in remembrance. This is an admirable expedient for preventing all ill effects of that spiritual pride, so apt to get ground upon men eminently good, for awakening our caution and just fears of relapse, by modest remembrances what we have been, and humble apprehensions what we may be again, and for preserving, by these means, a thankful sense of the change made in us. "I am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God," ver. 9.

3. A very extraordinary diligence and zeal, to make reparation by the following part of our lives, for any omissions, neglects, or notorious crimes, whereby our consciences have been wounded, or the cause and credit of truth and religion may have suffered heretofore. "I laboured more abundantly than they all," ver. 10.

4. Even when this change and reparation shall be made, arrogating no merit or glory to ourselves, but ascribing the whole to God's goodness, and the operations of his blessed Spirit. "By the grace of God I am what I am." And again, "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me."

In all these particulars we shall do well to follow the apostle; for otherwise we shall hardly obtain God's gracious promises, and be made partakers of his heavenly treasure, for which the Collect teaches us to pray. Dean Stanhope.

[e] The sum of the instruction, intended to be conveyed by this parable, amounts to thus much. That, however men may mistake themselves, or one another, "God always hath respect unto the lowly, but beholds the proud afar off," Ps. cxxxviii. 6: that no past offences, how many, how heinous, how habitual and inveterate soever, will shut out from his pardon any sinner, who humbly bewails and heartily forsakes them: that a lofty conceit of our own sufficiency differs as much from the testimony of a truly good conscience, as the swellings of a disease, from the kindly proportions of a healthful body: that a theatrical affectation of godliness, with pride and uncharitableness, and disdainful judgment of others, is nearer to hell than a profligate and scandalous course of life, with contrition, and charity, and lowliness of spirit: that it behoves us therefore to take good heed, lest even the most solemn duties of religion be abused and turned against us: and that he only attends upon these as he ought, who really mortifies his vanity and his passions, and brings himself to be more humble, more charitable, more sensible of his own failings, and

SUCH trust have we through Christ to God-ward: not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God. Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory[h].

less severe upon those of other people: and, lastly, that the proper way of a sinner's applying for mercy and grace, (and all of us are sinners,) is, not arrogantly to thank God, that we are "not as other men are;" but, as the purest of churches hath directed us, "meekly to acknowledge our vileness, and truly to repent us of our faults." For our good Lord hath promised, and it is the express design of this parable to assure us, that "they, whose consciences by sin are accused, by his merciful pardon shall be absolved, through Jesus Christ our Saviour." Dean Stanhope.

[f] The twelfth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day puts us in mind of God Almighty's great readiness to hear our prayers, and to give more than we desire or deserve; and thence teaches us to implore the abundance of his mercy, for the pardon of our sins, and the pouring out of his graces upon us. To which end, the Epistle for the day speaks of putting our trust in God through Jesus Christ: "such trust" (saith the apostle) "have we through Christ to God-ward:" which words relate chiefly to the fidelity of the apostles in the work of the ministry, and the success they had thereby, which they looked upon as their greatest glory, and needed no other commendation; not arrogating any thing of it to themselves, but ascribing all to the power and grace of God; for in the next words he acknowledges their utter insufficiency to think or do any good thing of themselves; saying, "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves:" to which he adds God Almighty's all-sufficiency to help them; "but our sufficiency is of God." Which they found in the exercise of a ministration far beyond that of Moses, as plainly appears from the sequel of this Epistle. Dr. Hole.

The subject of the Gospel is the relation of a miracle wrought by our Saviour on the person of a deaf and dumb man, who was thereby healed of both his infirmities. Dr. Hole.

[g] — more than either we desire,] It may be said, that we often offer up to God such general requests, as include all particulars whatsoever. How then can God be said to give "more than we desire?" The answer is, that the expression relates to such requests, as are not general but particular. We do not always know, what particular things are most fit for us; and therefore we cannot desire those things in particular. So that though we do desire them in general terms, when we beseech God to give us whatever we stand in need of; yet we do not desire them in that sense, in which the phrase is manifestly understood in this place. Dr. Bennet.

[h] The purport of this day's Epistle may be improved into the following lessons:

1. Our great weakness and inability to do any thing of ourselves may serve to check all pride and presumption, and to keep us from trusting too much to our own strength. He that relies upon his own power, leans but upon a broken reed, which will fail and deceive him. 2. As the sense of our insufficiency should keep us from presumption; so should the sense of the sufficiency we have of God preserve us from despair: for though we are unable to think or do any thing of ourselves, yet "his grace is sufficient for us;" and "we can do all things through Christ that strengthens us:" who is never wanting to the hearty desires and endeavours of his people; for He is ever more ready to hear us, than we are to pray to Him; and the returns of his goodness far exceed both our desires and deserts. 3. This discourse may teach us to banish all vain conceit of merit, and to ascribe all that we have, are, or can do, entirely to the divine bounty; for if all our sufficiency be of God, then we are nothing of ourselves, and consequently can merit nothing at God's hands; for He that can do nothing can deserve nothing. 4. If all our sufficiency be of God, then let us thankfully own from whence we receive it, and duly employ what we have in his service. This is the end of all the gifts and graces bestowed upon us, that we should use them to the honour of God, who gave them, and the good of them for whose sake they were given. 5. Since this sufficiency is derived to us by the Gospel covenant, we learn the excellency and benefit of it above the legal dispensation. The law exacted duty, but afforded no strength to perform it: it required perfect and universal obedience to all its precepts, and pronounced a curse upon every one that continued not in all things that are written in the book of the law, to do them; but gave no power to keep, nor any pardon for the breach of them: for which reason the letter of the law is said to "kill," and the law itself to be a "ministration of death and condemnation," because it left men in a hopeless and helpless state without any remedy or relief. Whereas the Gospel, on the other hand, not only requires duty, but promises grace to assist and enable to the perform-

The Gospel. St. Mark vii. 31.

JESUS, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis. And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him. And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue; and looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain. And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it; and were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well; he maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak[1].

---

ance of it; and therefore as the law is styled "The Letter," so the Gospel is styled "The Spirit:" the one is said to "kill," called therefore a "dead letter;" the other to "give life," called therefore "the ministration of the Spirit and righteousness." In short, the Gospel relieves us from the curse and sentence of the law, by the sanctifying graces and assistances of the Holy Spirit; it requires no more than it gives strength to perform; it accepts of sincerity, instead of perfect obedience; and if we happen to fall by a temptation, it helps us to rise again by repentance. And therefore we should bless God for making this new covenant, and taking us under this easy and gracious dispensation; "we are not under the law," saith St. Paul, "but under grace:" for which we have great reason to thank God, and to make a right use of it. Lastly, since all our sufficiency is of God, we are taught where to seek it, and how to find it, in time of need; namely, by having recourse unto God by prayer, who hath promised to give wisdom to them that ask it, and grace to them that lack and desire it: to Him therefore let our prayers and praises be directed, who is able and willing to do more for us than we can ask or think. Amen. Dr. Hole.

[1] From the Gospel of this day the following reflexions arise:

1. Our blessed Saviour, by looking up to heaven, whilst He performed this miracle, not only reminds us, that there was his home, and his throne, and the seat of his majesty, and that there the greatest angels adore Him; but teaches us likewise, that there our eye should be fixed, whence cometh down every good and perfect gift. He did not teach us to say, O infinite God, which art every where; but, "O our Father, which art in heaven." There let us look up to Him. Thence let us acknowledge all the good we receive: thence let us expect all the good we want.

2. Our Saviour sighed: surely not for need; the least motion of a thought was in Him effectual. He could not but be heard of his Father, who was one with his Father. But He sighed, partly for compassion; partly for example: for compassion of those manifold infirmities, into which sin had plunged mankind, a mournful example whereof was here presented unto him; for example, to fetch sighs from us for the miseries of others, sighs of sorrow for them, sighs of desire for their redress.

3. Christ was not silent, while He cured the dumb. His "ephphatha" gave life to all his other actions. His command of the ear and mouth to open was the act of God. He could not command that which He made not. His word is imperative; ours is supplicatory. He doth what He will with us: we do by Him, what He thinks good to impart.

4. In his mouth the word cannot be severed from the success. Our Saviour's lips are no sooner opened in his "ephphatha," than the mouth of the dumb and the ears of the deaf are opened. At once we behold here celerity and perfection. Natural agents work by leisure, by degrees: nothing is done in an instant: by many steps is every thing carried from the entrance to the consummation. Omnipotence knows no rules. No imperfect work can proceed from a cause absolutely perfect. Bp. Hall.

Lastly, Our Lord, having wrought this miracle, "charged them that they should tell no man." The reasons, which induced Him to forbid the divulging of this and of some other miracles, might probably be these:

1. To decline, as much as was possible, the envy and opposition of the Pharisees. He did not only "know what was in man," John ii. 25, and, consequently, what entertainment each of his actions would meet with; but He had, by many experiments, found, how those men in particular stood affected towards Him. He saw them so far from any disposition to improve, by fresh demonstrations of his divine power; that those did but add to their guilt, and provoke them to blasphemy and rage. The construction they made of such miraculous recoveries was, that He dispossessed devils, by a good understanding and secret collusion "with the prince of the devils," Matt. xii. 24. This point He sometimes vouchsafed to argue with them, and exposed the unreasonableness and absurdity of such malice; but this gave him great interruption in his main work, and engaged Him in contests, disagreeable to the peacefulness of his temper. So that, though our Lord could have confuted the folly and malice of his slanderers, yet it was more for his purpose to conceal some evidences of his power, than to provoke them to be troublesome, by making that power publick.

2. But neither was envy and contradiction all He had to avoid: for those enemies did not only blaspheme his person, but attempt upon his life. The Son of God indeed came into the world with a purpose to die: but the scheme laid by the divine wisdom had ordained a course of many things before, and in order to, his dying. He could also, by his almighty power, have defeated their wicked conspiracies, and borne down their utmost force; (as He afterwards made appear in the garden, by striking to the ground, with a word of his mouth, the men who came to apprehend Him;) but this was not a proper season for exerting that power. John xviii. 6. The truth of his human nature was now to be attested. And, his appearance at present being that of a mere man, the same methods of prudent care were fit to be taken, by which common men, in like cases, are wont to preserve themselves.

ALMIGHTY and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that thy faithful people do unto thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech thee, that we may so faithfully serve thee in this life, that we fail not finally to attain thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

1 Cor. xv. 10.

Heb. vi. 11, 12.

The Epistle. Gal. iii. 16.

TO Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one; And to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, That the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the Law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the Law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the Law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come, to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one; but God is one. Is the Law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the Law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe[l].

3. A third probable reason of this concealment might be, to prevent any sedition or tumults among the people. The common notions of the Messiah at that time are sufficiently known; and, as it could not become our Saviour to countenance those errors, so neither could it, by rendering himself suspected to the government, to give his adversaries the advantage they desired. Now every thing that contributed to their belief of his being the Messiah, would be a temptation to desert their established governors and put themselves under his protection, as ordained by God to be their rightful king and victorious deliverer. Hence, it is likely the disciples are forbidden to declare Him the Christ, till He should be risen from the dead, Matt. xvi. 20; as well as because the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost was a requisite qualification for the bearing of that testimony effectually.

4. But, I make no doubt, another reason for our Lord's conduct in this matter was, that He might set us an example of humility, and of doing good for good's sake. He had directed his disciples to content themselves with the knowledge and approbation of God, and the inward satisfactions of having discharged their duty, Matt. vi. 4; that they should consider, they serve one, who sees in secret, and who will one day shew that He knows and remembers their good deeds, by rewarding them openly. As therefore, in other instances of virtue; so here our Lord approves Himself a pattern and practiser of his own doctrine; by not courting the fame and praise of men, and declaring his behaviour free from all suspicion of vanity. What other hidden causes there might be for such commands of secrecy, is best known to the infinite wisdom of Him who gave them; but to us these are sufficient. Dean Stanhope.

[k] The thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day teaches us to pray unto God for grace, that we may so faithfully serve Him in this life, that we fail not finally to attain his heavenly promises. The promises here meant are those of justification and salvation by faith in Christ, whereby all mankind, who, by the sin of our first parents, were doomed to temporal and eternal death, are, by the merits of a Saviour, happily restored to a spiritual and everlasting life. These St. Peter styles "exceeding great and precious promises," as proceeding from the rich inexhaustible treasure of divine goodness, 2 Pet. i. 4. And of these St. Paul here treats in the Epistle for this day.

The Epistle having spoken of Christ in the promise made to Abraham long before his coming, the Gospel speaks of Him as actually come, shewing Himself to his disciples, and delivering to them the words of eternal life: and thence declares the much greater blessedness of those that saw Him in the flesh, than of those that only beheld Him in the promise. Dr. Hole.

[l] From this Epistle may be inferred the following weighty and useful lessons:

1. We may learn hence to magnify the infinite wisdom, power, and goodness of God, in providing a remedy for us in the promised seed. We were all lost in Adam, but are happily restored in Jesus Christ: the sin of the one being done away by the righteousness of the other. This was the blessed contrivance of heaven for the restoration of mankind; who had neither knowledge nor ability to help themselves. In this forlorn condition our gracious God took pity upon us, and found out this expedient to relieve us in our lowest state, and thereby distinguished us in his favour above the noblest rank of creatures; for, though the angels fell from their station of glory, and afterwards drew us into the same misery with themselves, yet the Son of God was pleased to pass by them, and restore us: for He took not on Him the nature of angels, but took on Him the seed of Abraham: which is an instance of the divine goodness, ever to be acknowledged and admired by the sons of men.

2. We learn hence the right way and method of our justification, which is not by the works of the law, whereby no flesh living can be justified, but by faith in Christ. The law speaks nothing but death and condemnation: and as many as are under the law, are under the curse. It is the grace and spirit of the Gospel, which alone speaks life and salvation: it is that which provides us with the pardon of our sins, and the acceptance of our persons as righteous before God. We all stand condemned by the sentence of the law, which the best of us daily break in thought, word, and deed: so that we can expect no favour thence, and it would be arrogance and folly to build the hopes of salvation on so bad a

The Gospel. St. Luke x. 23.

BLESSED are the eyes which see the things that ye see. For I tell you, That many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them. And behold, a certain Lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? He said unto him, What is written in the Law? how readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live. But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour? And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain Priest that way, and, when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and, when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise[m]. foundation. To find mercy, we must have recourse to the promise made to us in Abraham, and look for a blessing to the promised seed; and to obtain justification, we must appeal from the rigour and curse of the law, to the mercy and favour of the Gospel, and rely upon the atonement revealed in it as purchased by Christ, and bestowed on them that believe.

Lastly, let us learn to qualify ourselves for that blessing, and that is by faith in Christ: for the promise is made and given only to them that believe. It is not the bare descent from Abraham that will intitle to it: for St. John the Baptist bade the Jews, not to think it sufficient to say, "We have Abraham to our father; for God," he added, "is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham," Matt. iii. 9. And our Saviour tells them, that "calling Abraham their father" would be of no use to them, without doing the works and following the faith of Abraham, John viii. 39. 56. No external privileges could do them any service, without internal grace in the heart: for "neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature," or "faith which worketh by love." Wherefore let us pray and labour for a firm and stedfast faith in Christ: and that, not a dead, idle, and ineffectual faith; but a faith that is lively and operative, and is accompanied with good works; for a dead faith will never bring us to life, nor obtain for us the promise of salvation. Dr. Hole.

[m] From this Gospel we learn two very material points, relating to the duty of love to our neighbour. The first concerns the persons, to whom it ought to extend; the second the instances, whereby it ought to be expressed.

1. Of the enmity and aversion between the Samaritans and the Jews the Scriptures have given us frequent intimations: the result of which is, that there was not upon earth a creature more detested by the Jews than a Samaritan. They loaded these separatists with execration; they refused all dealing with them in the common business of life: they would not allow them the usual civilities to strangers; nor do for them any of those offices of humanity, which no one man would think much to do for any other man. And the Samaritans (like the generality of those on whom the guilt of separation lies) were, on their part, no whit behindhand in perverseness and spite. The instance, therefore, of charity here described, was such, as, all circumstances considered, could least be expected. So that this example (when drawn into a rule, and made, as here it is, a pattern for others to copy after) does manifestly import, that let a person in necessity and affliction be who or what he will, still he is a proper object of our charity, and we are bound to be touched with, and to have a very tender compassion for, his case.

2. The Samaritan, who made good the character of a neighbour, did not express his pity in idle and unprofitable bemoanings, but in active and effectual relief. He expended his own provisions; poured the oil and wine, bought for his own use, into the bleeding wounds of the forlorn stranger; dismounted himself, and set the impotent wretch upon his own beast; conveyed him to a place of rest and refreshment; furnished him with necessaries during their stay together, and at parting undertook for the continuance of his support, and the perfecting of his recovery. And all this he frankly did; when his own countrymen, when they, whose profession obliged them more especially to be charitable, had overlooked him, and done nothing at all for him.

This deportment again instructs us, that it is not sufficient, to have a tender sense of want and distress, without expressing that sense in such instances of succour, as our own and the sufferer's circumstances shall render

The Epistle. Gal. v. 16.

I Say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law. Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, That they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts[o].

seasonable and proper: that we ought to be content with some inconvenience, to give ourselves some trouble, not to grudge some expense, for such a one's comfort and relief: that we should not be weary of well-doing, but carry on our compassion and liberality to perfection; and not think much to continue our assistance, so long as there continues to be need of it: that we may not turn a fit object off, and shelter our inhumanity, under that too common, but very frivolous excuse, of some, who are more nearly allied, or more strongly obliged to such care than we are, having neglected him. For what is more absurd, than to suppose, that another's crime can be our justification? A countryman, an acquaintance, a near relation, may be hard-hearted and unnatural: but, if they have not done their part, the obligation is not less, and the occasion is greater, for us to do ours. And though the party in affliction be neither kinsman nor friend; nay, an heretick, an heathen, an enemy though he be; yet he is still in the Gospel sense "our neighbour:" and consequently, it is our part to contribute all we can, that may be serviceable for his consolation and assistance, his support under, and his deliverance out of, his sufferings and sorrows.

And "this" is truly and properly to "love our neighbour as ourselves." The meaning of which command is not, either that we should love any neighbour with equal tenderness as ourselves: (for that I conceive is hardly possible:) or that we should love every neighbour alike: (which, if we suppose it possible, were neither just nor natural:) or that we should do for our neighbour all that he now does, or that we, if in his circumstances, might perhaps wish and desire to be done for ourselves (for such desires may be irregular; or, if not sinful, yet unreasonable). But it is, to do all that for him, which, were our case his, and his ours, we should in reason and good conscience expect, and be glad, to have done to us. And as the love a man bears to himself is always sincere, so should the love of our neighbour be, in this respect, as that to ourselves: not mercenary and designing, but disinterested and hearty; intending the benefit of the party we express it to; not indirectly seeking our own profit or pleasure; and, as an evident proof whose good it is we aim at, not balking any proper expression of it, either to "them," who have no past or personal considerations to induce it; or to "them," from whom we can have no prospect or human possibility of a return to be made for it. Dean Stanhope.

[n] The fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day teaches us to pray for the increase of faith, hope, and charity, the three great virtues and ornaments of a Christian's life; which, by inclining us to love what God commands, will entitle us to all that He hath promised.

Now these excellent graces of God's holy Spirit being mainly, if not only, opposed by the works of the flesh, the Epistle sets forth both the works of the flesh, and the fruits of the Spirit; to the intent that we may eschew the one and embrace the other.

The Gospel records the miracle wrought by our Saviour on the ten lepers. Dr. Hole.

[o] From this passage it may be observed, 1. That the word "spirit," besides other significations, sometimes denotes the third Person in the blessed Trinity; sometimes the gifts and graces of that Spirit; sometimes the Gospel of Christ. In this place it must be taken in one of these three senses: and in any of them it will answer the apostle's purpose; as is manifest by his opposing it to the flesh and the law. For the flesh here denotes that corrupt principle in every man, which strongly disposes us to sinful and present profits and pleasures. And, as the Gospel is sometimes called the Spirit, because the graces and guidance of the Holy Ghost are a privilege peculiar to this dispensation, and expressly covenanted for under it; so the law is sometimes called the "flesh," because it neither could convey, nor did contract for, any such supernatural assistances, but left men under the power of their sensual inclinations, without the counterbalance of any higher and better principle.

Now the use I would make of these several distinctions is, to infer from them, that leading a life of purity and virtue, in opposition to our brutish and carnal lusts, and a law of carnal ordinances, "living by faith and grace," in opposition to works, and any confidence in moral duties performed by reason and natural strength; that governing ourselves by the word of Christ, and following the directions and holy motions of his good Spirit within us; that these, I say, however expressed variously, do mean and come all to the same thing at last. That he, who does one of them, does the other, and that "having the Spirit, living after the Spirit, walking in the Spirit," and "being led by the Spirit," include them all, in which soever of the forenamed meanings the word Spirit be used or interpreted. For evidence hereof no other argument is needful, than St. Paul's catalogue of virtues

The Gospel. St. Luke xvii. 11.

AND it came to pass, as Jesus went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria, and Galilee. And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off, and they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us. And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go, shew yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed. And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, and fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks; and he was a Samaritan. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger. And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole[p].

here, which he so positively affirms to be the "fruit of the Spirit," and that long black roll of vices, which he denominates "works of the flesh," and the "crucifying" whereof he gives in as a certain mark of being Christ's. So perfectly unscriptural are the fancied notions, which some have advanced concerning the actings and the signs of the Spirit; so great an indignity to true evangelical religion are all the reproaches and disparagements cast upon moral duties, when performed by the assistance of his grace. I say by the assistance of his grace, because the Second thing I would observe is that encouragement for "walking in the Spirit," but especially the ground and foundation of it which we have in the 16th and 17th verses. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." How can we be sure, that such walking will be attended with so happy an effect? Why, even from hence: "For," (says he,) that is, because "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." The true meaning whereof must certainly be, that, as Christians, who still continue to be men, do carry about with them a corrupt principle, inclining them one way; so have they, by virtue of their being Christians, a supernatural and divine principle, drawing them another way. In a word, as he, who is left to the powers of nature, cannot do the good which his own reason, or "the law in his mind," tells him is fit to be done; because, destitute of that Spirit which is the cause of all the good we do: so he, that is conducted by the Spirit, cannot comply with the "law in his members," which is the cause of all the evil we do. The former is the case of persons "under the law," represented at large in the 7th to the Romans; the latter is the privilege of persons "led by the Spirit," assigned here as a reason for their "not fulfilling the lusts of the flesh."

I observe once more, thirdly, that among "the works of the flesh" some are reckoned which seem to consist in the errors and evil dispositions of the mind. Such in particular are "heresy, malice, envy," &c. But the propriety of this denomination may very well be justified, by considering that even these are effects of the same cause, a wicked and worldly principle; and that the ends men propose to themselves, by indulging them, are gratifications of the outward man, by some pleasures and advantages peculiar to the present state, and of a sensual nature. Meanwhile, when these works of the flesh are said to be "manifest," we may fairly understand it, that the malignity of their nature and consequences evidences itself to the reason of every thinking man, and that nothing but corruption and prejudice and passion, could blind our judgment, or ever reconcile us to the practice and indulgence of vices so pernicious and detestable. Dean Stanhope.

[p] This miracle, and the circumstances attending it, (like sundry others done by our blessed Lord,) carried a very significant sense, couched under that which lies open to common view. It is a lively image of the reception which Jesus and his Gospel met with in the world; how the ungrateful Jews rejected both with indignation and scorn; how the Gentiles, like this Samaritan, from whom such an instance of ingenuity could be least expected, received his doctrine thankfully, improved it diligently, and shewed that they valued the inestimable mercy justly,

But it offers to our consideration something besides, which we are more nearly concerned to take strict notice of. For, the truth is, this passage is the very picture of mankind, and holds to us a glass, in which almost every soul may see its own disposition but too exactly resembled, too strongly reflected. The generality of the world, are they not like these lepers, extremely clamorous and importunate in their cries and complaints, impatient of sorrow and distress; but when those cries have prevailed for ease and deliverance, are they not then every whit as like them in the other part of their deportment too? For rarely, very rarely, do we meet with such vigorous impressions, such becoming acknowledgments, as every considering standerby can easily discern the goodness of God to call for at our hands. How often in the anguish and bitterness of our souls, when a sudden danger hath threatened our persons, or a wasting sickness hath brought us down to the gates of the grave; when the guilt of our past lives hath stared us in the face, and the prospect of hell, gaping to receive us, hath distracted the conscience with amazement and despair; how often, I say, in seasons of publick or private calamity, in concerns for ourselves, or for some very dear to us, have we poured our hearts before God, and shewed Him of all our trouble? Promised if He would spare that relation, recover us from that disease, or put away from us that death only, or pardon that sin which wounded our hearts, that we would never forget the mighty mercy? And yet how suddenly, how scandalously, have his gracious condescensions, and our most solemn and affectionate vows slipped out of our minds? How have all remembrances, all effects of his rod, been quite lost and gone, as soon as ever the smart of it ceased? All, I say, except that worst and most deplorable effect, of increasing our condemnation, and having his merciful answers to our requests rise up in judgement against us? We read the Gospel for this day in cold blood, and stand perhaps astonished at the stupidity of those base unthankful lepers; and yet, if we descend into our own breasts, they are able to reproach us, as Nathan did David, with a "Thou art the man." Nay, thou art worse than the worst of those men, whom thou blamest for forgetting one mercy; for every one of us have received frequent and eminent instances of the divine goodness: no day passes without refreshing our memories, by new demonstrations of it, and yet (insensible wretches that we are) scarce one among us takes care to acknowledge it in any tolerable manner; or makes his praises in ease and prosperity hold proportion with his prayers when in misery and want. These are reflexions which the case before us ministers but too just occasion for. And therefore it greatly behoves us all, to take all the means we can for remedying so great an evil: especially by taking pains to represent to our minds in the most lively manner the infinite variety of mercies we receive. Those that seem to be benefits of course, and enjoyed in common with all mankind: those that are national, or local, or domestick, or personal: and these should be recounted very often, because scarce any day passes without some memorable instance; not any, to be sure, without the renewal of manifold blessings, in some capacity or other. But those which should be always uppermost in our esteem, and consequently would be so in our thoughts, are the spiritual mercies, "the inestimable love of God in the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ, the means of grace, and the hope of glory." All these should be nicely observed, justly valued, and seriously considered. And, were they so, we should be out of all danger of falling under the reproach of the nine Jews: and daily, hourly, with the humble zeal of that ingenuous Samaritan, should "with loud voices glorify God, and fall down at Jesus's feet, and give" Him those thanks, which to Him, with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, do continually belong. To whom therefore be glory for ever and ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

YE see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand. As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ. For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh. But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God. From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen[r].

[q] The fifteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day directs us to pray, that God would keep his Church with his perpetual mercy: and, because our own great frailty daily exposes us to many dangers, we beseech Him to keep us from all things hurtful, and to lead us to all things profitable to our salvation. Now the keeping of the Church, here prayed for, is chiefly to keep it in the true faith; and, because there are many things that are apt to corrupt it, and to make men fall away from the purity of it, as prosperity and persecution, we are here taught to pray to be preserved from all things that may prejudice, and to be led to all things that may promote, our salvation. Accordingly the Epistle for this day acquaints us with St. Paul's great care to preserve the Galatians in the purity of the Christian faith, against the attempts of false teachers, who sought to bring them back to the antiquated rites and ceremonies of the Jewish worship.

The design of the Gospel is to take off men's hearts from an inordinate love and pursuit of the perishable things of this world, and to place them upon a more lasting and substantial treasure in heaven. Dr. Hole.

[r] From St. Paul's discourse here we may learn to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not to be entangled again in the yoke of bondage." St. Luke tells us, that the Church sometime groaned under a heavy and burdensome yoke of carnal ordinances, such as neither they nor their forefathers were able to bear; from this yoke Jesus Christ hath happily delivered his church, having blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances against us, and rescued us from the beggarly rites and rudiments of the ceremonial law, and particularly the painful rite of circumcision. Let us not then suffer ourselves again to be brought into bondage to these things; Christ being the sole Master of our faith, let us not become the servants of men. This advice St. Paul frequently gave in most of his Epistles, which yet we must not strain so far, as to think all comely ceremonies relating to time, place, and gesture, to be now forbidden in the service of God; for, without some of these, it cannot be performed in that decency and order that is required; but that we are not to return again to the Mosaical ceremonies and sacrifices, which being types and shadows of good things to come, must vanish and cease at the coming of them. Insomuch that we are now called to no other circumcision, save that of the heart, nor to offer up any other calves than those of the lips: for "we are the circumcision" (saith the apostle) "that worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh," Phil. iii. 3.

2. From what is here said, we may learn not to shrink from the faith for fear of persecution, but rather with our apostle to glory in the cross of Christ, by which we shall be crucified to the world, and the world to us.

3. We learn here, that no external privileges or advantages are sufficient of themselves to bring us to

The Gospel. St. Matth. vi. 24.

NO man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon. Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on: Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven; shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself: sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof[s].

---

heaven: for "in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature:" nor will baptism, or any other Gospel privileges, do us any service, without a true faith, and the answer of a good conscience.

4. They that walk by the rules of the Gospel, shall find peace and mercy heaped upon them; and so shall "the whole Israel of God," both Jew and Gentile, for there is no difference.

Lastly, since the Gospel of Christ is attended with trouble and persecution, let us make the yoke as easy as we can to one another: and, since the best suffer much by the professed enemies of Christianity, let them not find any additional troubles from its friends and professors. This is St. Paul's request in his own and others' behalf, "From henceforth, let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus;" which honourable scars I esteem higher than the greatest marks and badges of worldly glory. Dr. Hole.

[s] A true understanding of our Lord's words in this passage will lead us to perceive what sort of care is here forbidden, and what is not only allowed, but even expected from us.

1. That care is certainly forbidden, which betrays a greater love for the world, than for Almighty God. And this we may reckon done, by consenting to any unlawful means to promote our temporal advantage; by retaining any thing we are already possessed of, at the expense of his favour and a good conscience; by following our worldly affairs with delight, and attending his service with weariness and grudging; or, by wholly neglecting the latter, rather than miss the least opportunity of prosecuting the former.

2. That concern for the world is here forbidden, which puts us upon calling into question the power or the goodness of God; which forgets to be thankful for mercies already received, and which neglects the daily instances of his bounty to the world in general. And herein do all those querulous and desponding tempers very grievously offend, which murmur and complain of Providence; aggravate their sufferings to impatience and their wants to despair; as if there were no God that governs the world, or as if they were the only things in the universe disregarded by Him.

3. That concern for the world is certainly forbidden, which makes us regardless of our duty and eternity, which places all its endeavours and aims here below, and looks upon the present advantages as its proper happiness. Such as is not content to refer the measure of these to the discretion of that Father above, and acquiesces not in his appointments; but had rather be wealthy and great, than righteous; and is induced to virtue, more for the promises of this life, than either for the sake of its own intrinsick value, or for the rewards to be had by it in a future state.

4. That concern again is forbidden, which is placed on superfluities, and fixes a careful eye upon things a great way off: which will not let the man enjoy himself, for fear he should want several years hence, or lest his family should suffer for it, when he is asleep in his grave. Wretched folly! As if God would not be the same powerful and good God then as now; and sufficient to provide for thy children, who hath so long and so plentifully provided for thee. In short, under this particular we may include all that care of the men, who are fretful and uneasy, sordid and niggardly, griping and uncharitable.

2. On the other hand, if there be, as no doubt there is, and may be in any of us, such a concern to provide for one's self and family, as loves the world in subordination to God, and would not, to gain it all, do any thing to displease Him: a mind, that disposes us to serve God cheerfully, to follow the business of a lawful and useful calling, industriously and conscientiously, to labour hard, and manage frugally, not because we dare not trust God, but because we dare not tempt Him; if there be in us a concern for present comforts, which still remembers, that there are yet much better and higher things, to which these must give way; and that the provisions it seeks are only the recruits of a traveller, not the stores of a fixed inhabitant: a concern, lastly, that permits a man to enjoy his present blessings, with moderation, and thankfulness, and an even temper; a care, in the pursuit of which he still contentedly and cheerfully trusts God for his future subsistence: is decent in his expenses, hospitable to strangers, friendly to neighbours, just to all, and charitable to the poor: this is a concern for the things of the world, against which our blessed Saviour's whole discourse here contains not one syllable. A care, which the Scripture, wheresoever diligence and frugality are recommended, and sloth and profuseness discountenanced, plainly encourages and applauds: and which the laws of nature, of human society, and of revealed religion, all agree in demanding of us.

And now, how can we consider this matter as it deserves, and sufficiently admire the wisdom of religion, in this kind distribution of our cares? For, upon the whole, God forbids the making ourselves uneasy here, to prevent our being miserable hereafter. That care, which is of service, He hath left us to pursue; and that, which can do us no good, He hath commanded us to cast upon Him: that, which promotes the use of our reason, and chooses the properest method for success, by preserving our minds in steadiness and tranquillity, we are allowed; and of that, which brings disorder and perplexity, and perfectly bereaves us of our peace and of our conduct, we are debarred: in short, God hath so tempered the matter that we may neither despair of this blessing, nor presume upon subsisting without it. We are at full liberty to use such means, as argue, not despondency and fear, but an honest application to the duties of our station, and a willing submission to his disposal of events. If therefore our lives be uneasy, let us remember who it is that makes them so; and not accuse, either the ordinances of God, or the necessities of nature, but only our own selves: for they are then only uneasy, when we refuse to follow the directions of our Saviour, by not serving God without distraction in the one, and by not reposing our souls upon his fatherly care for all proper supplies of the other. Dean Stanhope.

[t] The sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for this day teaches us to implore the divine pity to purify and protect his Church; and, because it cannot continue in safety without his succour, we beseech Him to preserve it evermore by his help and goodness.

In the Epistle for the day we have an account of St. Paul's praying thus in the behalf of the Church of Ephesus; which Epistle begins with his request to these Ephesians, and is continued with his prayer for them, and concludes with his doxology, or praising God in their behalf.

The Gospel gives us a relation of a certain miracle wrought by our Saviour upon a dead man, whom He raised to life again, in the view of many witnesses. Dr. Hole.

[u] From this Epistle we learn upon all occasions to make our requests known unto God, the Author and Fountain of all our mercies; but more especially in times of trouble and trial, when we stand in greatest need of his most gracious aid and assistance. And this we are here taught to do, not for ourselves only, but for all that we are any way related to, or concerned with, whose good we ought to have as tender a sense of, as our own; for so we find the apostle had in all his Epistles, giving those to whom he wrote to understand, that whether present or absent he was always mindful of them in his prayers. 2. We learn hence, not to think the worse of any cause, because it may sometimes meet with opposition and persecution; for so we find St. Paul and the other apostles did in propagating the Gospel, though they had their commission from heaven for so doing; and therefore, we should not faint or be dismayed at these things, whensoever we see or hear of them. 3. We are taught from hence, that patience and perseverance in times of trouble and persecution is the gift of God; and consequently to Him we are to address ourselves for it; for all the strength, by which we stand, is not ours, but his, and is to be sought from Him. For this cause we find St. Paul praying here for himself and others; and "if any man lack wisdom," or grace to persevere, "let him ask it of God, who is willing to give liberally to all men, and upbraideth not." 4. We learn hence, that all our addresses to this purpose must be made with all humility and reverence both of body and mind; for St. Paul here "bowed his knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," in praying for it; yea, the example of our Saviour, who kneeled down and prayed, the command of the apostle requiring every knee to bow to Him, and the practice of Christians in all ages, shew this to be the proper posture of devotion. We find no instance in sacred history of any holy man that ever sate at his prayers: and this may teach us to avoid that irreverent and indevout practice, which, by our unhappy divisions, hath lately crept in among us; and to observe the Psalmist's call, to "come and worship, and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker." 5. We are here directed in the matter, as well as the manner, of our prayers, and taught for what as well as

The Gospel. St. Luke vii. 11.

AND it came to pass the day after, that Jesus went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people. Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow; and much people of the city was with her. And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not. And he came and touched the bier, (and they that bare him stood still,) and he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise. And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak: and he delivered him to his mother. And there came a fear on all, and they glorified God, saying, That a great Prophet is risen up among us, and that God hath visited his people. And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about[v].

how to ask; and that is, for spiritual strength to arm us against the power of temptation, and for grace to help in time of need. This the apostle thought necessary to do in the behalf of these Ephesians, and let us make this the platform of our devotion both for ourselves and others. Lastly, from the doxology in the close, let us learn, to all our prayers to add praises and thanksgivings unto God by Christ Jesus: adoring his power; extolling his goodness; admiring his wisdom; submitting to his will; and giving Him the glory of all; so shall we engage the divine Providence to take care of us, and keep us blameless to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Dr. Hole.

[v] In this narrative we read an account of one of the greatest of all miracles, the raising of a dead person to life; a wonderful proof of divine power and goodness. From the narrative the following lessons may be drawn:

1. We have here a wonderful example of the divine goodness. When the widow, following her only son to the grave, gave herself up for a forlorn mourner, past redress, the God of comfort meets her, pities her, relieves her. Here was no solicitor, but his own compassion. In other occasions He was sought and sued to. The centurion comes to Him for a servant; the ruler, for a son; Jairus, for a daughter; the neighbours, for the paralytick: here, He seeks up the patient, and offers the cure unrequested. While we have to do with the Father of mercies, our afflictions are the most powerful suitors. No tears, no prayers can move Him, so much as his own commiseration. O God, none of our secret sorrows can be either hid from thine eyes, or kept from thy heart: and when we are past all our hopes, all possibilities of help, thou art then nearest to us for deliverance. Bp. Hall.

2. From Christ's readiness to go from the centurion's servant at Capernaum, to the widow's son at Nain, we may learn not to omit any opportunities of doing good to the souls or bodies of men. We see here how forward and solicitous our Saviour was about both; making no scruples or delays in serving either; but cheerfully embracing all opportunities of contributing to their bodily health, and promoting their eternal welfare. He sooner wanted objects, than will to shew kindness; and nothing pleased Him better, than to find men have faith enough to come to Him, and to be healed by Him. This was the business, the recreation, and the whole employment of our blessed Lord; and nothing renders us more like unto Him, than a desire and delight in doing good in the best way and manner that we are able.

3. From the miracle here wrought in raising the widow's dead child to life again, we may learn farther to confirm our faith in Him, and to take Him for the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, for the mighty works that were done by Him, which nothing less than a divine power and goodness were able to effect. Miracles are the broad seal of heaven, which is never set to any commission but what comes from God; which made Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, say to our Saviour, "I know that thou art a teacher come from God, for none can do the works that thou doest, except God be with him," John iii. 1, 2. These miracles abundantly testify, that his doctrine is divine, and contains the words of eternal life, and that his precepts are the best and wisest and the safest rules to lead us to it: and therefore it must be not only our duty, but our wisdom, and truest interest, to receive the one, and to obey the other. Dr. Hole.

4. Let us remark the manner in which this miracle was wrought. "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." The Lord of life and death speaks with command. No finite power could have said so without presumption, or with success. That is the voice, which shall one day call up our vanished bodies from these elements into which they are resolved, and raise them out of their dust. Neither sea, nor death, nor hell can offer to detain their dead, when He charges them to be delivered. Why should we incredulously shrink at the possibility of a resurrection, when the God of nature undertakes it? It is no more hard for that almighty Word, which gave being unto all things, to say, Let them be repaired, than, Let them be made. Our Saviour doth not here stretch Himself upon the dead corpse, as Elijah and Elisha upon the sons of the Shunamite and Sareptan; nor kneel down and pray by the bier, as Peter did to Dorcas: but He so speaks to the dead as if he were alive; and so speaks, that by the word He makes him alive, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Bp. Hall.

5. From the fear that fell on the people at the sight of this miracle, we may learn to "fear the Lord and his goodness," as it was promised and prophesied of the latter days, Hosea iii. 5. Let us fear to offend so great and so good a God, who is able to do such great things for our happiness, or our destruction. Such was the fear of these in this Gospel; a fear of astonishment, that made them wonder at the greatness of his power; not a fear of desperation to make them distrust his goodness: for we find their fear did not drive them from, but to, Him; it led them to admire and adore his infinite power, and instead of falling away, they began to glorify God. Dr. Hole.

Lastly, let us reflect on the manner in which they conducted themselves to our blessed Saviour: what awful and admiring looks they cast upon that Lord of life, who, seeming homely, was approved omnipotent. How gladly did every tongue celebrate both the work

The Epistle. Ephes. iv. 1.

I Therefore the prisoner of the Lord beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all[z].

and the author! "A great prophet is risen up amongst us, and God hath visited his people!" A prophet was the highest name they could find for Him, whom they saw like themselves in shape, above themselves in power. They were not yet acquainted with God manifested in the flesh. This miracle might well have assured them of more than a prophet: but He, who raised the dead man from the bier, would not suddenly raise those dead hearts from the grave of infidelity. They shall see reason enough to know, that the prophet, who was raised up to them, was the God that now visited them; and at last should do as much for them, as He had done for the young man; raise them from death to life, from dust to glory. Bp. Hall.

[x] The seventeenth Sunday after Trinity.] We are taught to pray in the Collect for this day, that the grace of God may always prevent and follow us, and make us to be continually given to all good works, through Jesus Christ our Lord. To this end, St. Paul, then a prisoner at Rome for the cause of Christ, makes mention in the Epistle for this day of some of those graces and good works, that we are continually to follow and be given to; beginning in the first verse with a general exhortation to these Ephesians, and in them to all Christians, "to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they were called." Where by the "vocation wherewith they were called" is meant the Christian profession, by which they were called out of their former heathen state, to a state of Christianity; that is, to become Christians, and to embrace the Christian faith, revealed to them by the Gospel. To walk worthy of this vocation, is to lead holy lives suitable to the commands and obligations it lays upon us. So St. Peter expounds it. "That as he which hath called us is holy, so we should be holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy," 1 Pet. i. 15, 16. From this general exhortation he proceeds to some of those particular graces which we pray may always prevent and follow us.

The Gospel sets before us the insidious falsehood and treachery of the Pharisees towards our Saviour; and the wisdom with which He put them to silence and corrected their pride. Dr. Hole.

[y] —prevent] See the note on the Collect at the end of the Communion Service, "Prevent us, O Lord, &c."

[z] This Epistle contains many weighty and cogent arguments for unity of heart and mind among Christians; yea, it shews all our religion to be founded upon unity, and to be only promoted by it; for we are all united in one "mystical body" of Christ's Church; and this body is actuated and animated by "one Holy Spirit;" there is one door of entrance into it, that is, by "one baptism:" there is but "one faith" professed in it; and, in a word, there is but one object of all divine worship, namely, the "one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in us all." From all which we learn,

1. The nature and sinfulness of schism, which is the dividing of the body of Christ, and making it not one body, but many. "Is Christ divided?" saith the apostle to the Corinthians, upon their breaking into schisms and factions; implying, that these things not only divide Christians, but Christ Himself, by tearing in pieces his body the Church; and therefore the same apostle advises, that "there be no schism in the body," nor "any divisions among Christians," 1 Cor. i. 10. "We being many," saith he, "are one bread, and one body, and all partakers of one bread:" signifying, that by breaking communion, and setting up altar against altar, we break the unity of Christ's Church, and make a schism in his body; for thereby one member is rent and torn from another; and, as a member cut off is no longer a part of the body from which it is severed, so they who cut themselves off from the communion of the Church, by a wilful and causeless separation, are no longer members of Christ's body.

2. From the unity of the Spirit and the fruits of it, we may learn what spirit we are of, and how far we are actuated by it; for the Spirit of God is a Spirit of love, peace, lowliness, meekness, patience, and the like: these tend to promote unity of heart and mind among men, and dispose them to agree and join together in the worship of God. But the evil spirit lusteth to envy, strife, variance, and contention; and these kindle a bitter zeal and emulation among Christians, which lead them into division and separation.

3. From the unity of faith, and the one hope of our Christian calling, we may learn to unite and go hand in hand together in it, without differing or falling out about inferior matters: for, whilst we adhere and hold to the same faith, and expect the same end of it, even the salvation of our souls, no smaller things can justify a contention, or much less warrant a separation. We are bid to contend earnestly for the faith; and to continue stedfast in the profession of it; but for the inferior matters of order and decency, we are bid to submit and shew all lawful compliance, which is absolutely necessary to preserve unity.

4. From the one Lord, or the unity of the Head, we may easily learn this compliance; for the head is the seat of wisdom and power, to direct and command the other members; and this may in the most eminent manner be affirmed of this mystical Head, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and who hath the sole right to govern and guide his whole body. Besides, as the head conveys down animal spirits, heat, and vigour to the other members, by which they live, move, and have their being; so Christ, the mystical head of the Church, sends down the kindly influences of his grace and Holy Spirit upon his members, to quicken and

The Gospel. St. Luke xiv. 1.

IT came to pass, as Jesus went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath-day, that they watched him. And behold, there was a certain man before him which had the dropsy. And Jesus answering spake unto the Lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day? And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go; and answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass, or an ox, fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath-day? And they could not answer him again to these things. And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms, saying unto them, When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him; and he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room. But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that, when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted[a].

excite all their operations; which may teach us to live, to unite, and to abide in his body; for as the branches cannot live or bring forth any fruit, except they abide in the vine, so neither can we, except we are united to and abide in Him.

5. From the unity of the Sacraments, let us learn to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; for these are the ligaments and arteries to hold all the parts together. It is by one baptism that we are all initiated into Christ's Church, and by one communion that we are all confirmed and continued in it; so vain and foolish are they who think they belong to Christ, without the initiating ordinance of baptism, and so profane and presumptuous are all such as expect any benefit from Him, without the confirming ordinance of the holy communion. These are the seals of the new covenant, without which we can lay no claim to the title or privileges of Christians.

Lastly, From the one God and Father of all, let us be persuaded with one mind and one mouth to glorify our great Creator; so shall we, by preserving peace and unity on earth, arrive at last to the unity of the Church in heaven; and "come to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ;" to which, God of his infinite mercy bring us all, for the merits of his Son, and our ever blessed Saviour and Redeemer. Amen. Dr. Hole.

[a] This Gospel may instruct us in the following lessons:

1. From our Saviour's freedom of conversation we may learn to be affable, courteous, and condescending to all men; this Christ's command and example plainly teach us: "Learn of me," says he, "for I am meek and lowly in heart:" it is no part of his religion to be sour, morose, or cynical; for He conversed familiarly with all sorts of men, and hath willed his disciples to do so too. 2. From the Pharisees watching our Saviour to ensnare and entrap Him, we learn the civil effects of malice and hypocrisy, what a pernicious influence they have upon conversation, and how they poison and embitter all society. 3. From Christ's defeating the malicious designs of the Pharisees in watching Him, we may learn to walk warily and circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, and to arm ourselves against the wiles of the wicked. When Christ sent his disciples abroad into the world, He told them, "Behold I send you forth as sheep among wolves," that is, among wicked and ungodly men, who will be apt to worry and lie in wait for you, as the ravening wolves do for the innocent sheep: therefore saith ye, "be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves:" we should therefore use all good means to escape the treachery and malice of designing men; but yet to the wisdom of the serpent we are to add the harmlessness of the dove, that is, to use nothing but good and lawful means to that end, and not to betake ourselves to sinister and indirect courses to promote our safety. Dr. Hole. 4. Although the best way of setting ourselves at ease against malice, frequently is to let it spend itself, and the most effectual answer to its scandals is by silence and scorn; yet sometimes there are occasions of importance to require our defence. And when argument is seasonable, we shall do well to imitate our blessed Master's prudence in the choice of it. He might have discoursed very nicely upon the nature, the institution, the end of the sabbath; that a rest, meant for the refreshment and benefit of mankind, could not possibly oblige to an absolute cessation from works of necessity and charity, because this would tend directly to the prejudice and destruction of mankind. But He rather chooses to turn their own practice upon them. And this in truth is the method of treating violent and self-conceited men. To accommodate our discourse to their passions and interests; to shew the unreasonable creatures to themselves: for such are immoderately fond of their own doings, and will be tender in condemning the measures of their brethren; when made sensible that there is no remedy, but they must at the same time, and in the same or a greater degree, condemn those taken by themselves. Such an instance either wins them over to our favour, or at least it stops their mouths; and puts them more effectually out of countenance, than all the dry reasoning in the world. For in this effect and success also our Saviour is our precedent. This so sensible application to the Pharisees' own example (equalling, and, as is usual with men of that temper, even out-doing, the very thing they so severely blamed in Him) touched them so close, and so utterly confounded them, that, the 6th verse acquaints us, "They could not answer him again to these things." Dean Stanhope. Lastly, from our Saviour's checking the Pharisees for their affecting precedence and pre-eminence, we may learn to cast off all pride, and to be clothed with humility; for God and man "resist the proud" and pull down such as are lifted up; but both conspire to "give grace and favour to the humble." "He putteth down the mighty from their seats," (saith the blessed Virgin,) that is, from those upper rooms and higher seats, to which their pride had mounted them; "and exalteth the humble and meek," that is, such as they seek to depress and despise. Wherefore let us strive not so much to be great, as good, and labour more for lowliness than haughtiness of mind; and, by our thus humbling ourselves, God shall exalt us in due time, which God grant for the sake of Jesus Christ. Dr. Hole.

[b] The eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day teaches us to beseech God for grace to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and with pure hearts and minds to follow Him the only true God. Suitable hereunto, the Epistle for this day contains St. Paul's thanksgiving unto God, for giving this grace unto the Corinthians, together with the many blessed fruits and effects, that proceeded from it.

The Gospel furnishes us with a much higher and better instance of it in the person of our Saviour, who was set upon by all the Sadducees, scribes, and Pharisees, with all the art and subtlety of temptation; and yet we read that he effectually withstood, worsted, and vanquished them all. We read elsewhere how he vanquished the power and temptations of the devil, Matt. iv; and here how He baffled the wisdom and meekness of the world. Dr. Hole.

This Sunday does not follow the method of the rest; for the Epistle is taken out of the first to the Corinthians, not out of that to the Ephesians, as those for the Sundays next before and after. For this variation the following reason may be given. It was an ancient custom of the Church in the ember-weeks, to have proper service on the Wednesdays and Fridays, but especially on the Saturdays: when, after a long continuance in prayer and fasting, they performed the solemnities of the Ordination either late on Saturday evening, (which was then always looked upon as part of the Lord's day,) or else early on the morning following; for which reason, and because they might be wearied with their prayers and fasting on the Saturdays, the Sundays following had no public services, but were called "Dominicæ vacantes," that is, "vacant Sundays." But afterwards, when they thought it not convenient to let a Sunday pass without any solemn service, they dispatched the Ordination sooner on Saturdays, and performed the solemn service of the Church as at other times on the Sundays. But these Sundays, having no particular service of their own, for some time borrowed of some other days, till they had proper ones fixed pertinent to the occasion. So that this eighteenth Sunday after Trinity, often happening to be one of these vacant Sundays, had at the same time a particular Epistle and Gospel allotted to it, in some measure suitable to the solemnity of the time. For the Epistle hints at the necessity there is of spiritual teachers, and mentions such qualifications as are specially requisite to those that are ordained, as the being "enriched with all utterance and in all knowledge," and being "behind in no good gift." The Gospel treats of our Saviour's silencing the most learned of the Jews by his questions and answers; thereby also shewing how his ministers ought to be qualified, namely, able to speak a word in due season, to give a reason of their faith, and to convince, or at least to confute, all those that are of heterodox opinions. Wheatly.

[c] From this Epistle the following practical lessons may be inferred:

1. From the apostle's thanking God for the grace bestowed on these Corinthians, and the benefits received thereby, we may learn to congratulate the good that others enjoy, as well as ourselves, and to thank God for one another's welfare.

2. From the riches of divine grace conveyed to these Corinthians by the preaching of the Gospel, we may learn to set a due price and value upon the light of the Gospel, and the many inestimable blessings we receive by it. If we weigh things aright, we cannot raise our thoughts too high of this transcendent privilege; for without it, we should, like the benighted heathens, walk on still in darkness; and being left to the blind and uncertain conduct of nature, be unavoidably bewildered, and lose our way to heaven. We had then been destitute of all saving knowledge of God, of Christ, and of ourselves, and so must have groped on in the dark to our utter ruin. But now, by the preaching of the Gospel, we are thoroughly instructed in all these, and infallibly directed in the way that leads to true happiness. This is a mercy that is highly worthy of our loudest praises and thanksgivings, and may teach us to make a right use and improvement of it. While we have the light, (saith the apostle,) let us walk in the light, and work by it, lest our ingratitude and abuse of it cause it to be withdrawn from us, and so lose an invaluable blessing, which we knew not how to use. The neglect or contempt of it will heighten both our sin and our punishment; and better had it been, not to have had the Gospel and the means of grace, than to despise or neglect them, and to turn a deaf ear to its calls and admonitions. This we shall do well to remember before it be too late, lest the night come too gathered together. Then one of them, who was a Lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, Master, which is the great commandment in the Law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets. While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them, saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The Son of David. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If David then call him Lord, how is he his son? And no man was able to answer him a word; neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions[d].

fast upon us, and this prove at last to be "our condemnation, that light is come into the world, but we loved darkness rather than light, because our deeds were evil," John iii. 19.

3. The testimony given of Christ being so fully confirmed by the gifts and graces of the Gospel, let us learn to persevere in the faith, and love of the truth, even to the end. To this the apostle exhorts, in all his Epistles, to continue stedfast in the faith, and not to be shaken by the subtlety of false teachers, many of whom are gone abroad into the world, to deprave or destroy the faith. There are other temptations from the allurements of the world and the flesh, which we are to labour by the grace of God to withstand and conquer. To which end, the apostle, in the last place, directs us, to "wait for the second coming of our Lord Jesus, who shall confirm us to the end." The continual expecting and preparing for that day will keep us always upon our watch, and fortify us against the wiles of the wicked; it will make us "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering," and daily move us forward in our Christian course; and by that means we shall be found "blameless" and unreprovable "in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." Dr. Hole.

The conclusion of this Scripture sets us a precedent for a most comfortable inference, to be drawn from the past liberality of God to us; who begins with grace, that He may end with glory. But then this must be so understood, as to imply all those conditions which the new covenant hath interposed, to qualify us for additions of spiritual strength here, and for a reward, upon the improvement of it, hereafter. We may safely promise ourselves that God will not be wanting on his part: but we have no warrant to presume upon being either "confirmed" here, or "found blameless" at the day of Christ, if there be no care taken not to be wanting on our part. Something is expected from every one; more from each, as each hath received more abilities. And the consequence of our neglect to employ these to the profit of the publick, and the honour of our Master, is not to be "confirmed," but deserted and confounded. The talent, instead of being doubled, shall be taken quite away, and the slothful unprofitable servant cast into outer darkness, Matt. xxv. 26. 30. All this is much more just in God, than any parable can possibly represent; because not only our talents, but our power to employ them rightly, are his gift; and both are like seed sown in the ground, which, only provided we take good heed to cultivate it diligently, will bless us with a large increase. And when this care is taken, though the best we do, or can do, will be allayed with infirmities and sins, yet we shall be "blameless," that is, such as (according to the allowances of the Gospel) no reproach or fault shall be charged upon "in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." Dean Stanhope.

[d] The Pharisees had often put several questions maliciously to Christ, and now, in the latter part of this Gospel, Christ puts one question innocently to them; namely, what they thought of the Messiah whom they expected. They reply, that He was to be "the Son of David," a secular prince descending from David, who should deliver them from the power of the Romans, and restore them to their civil rights. This was their notion of the Messiah, that He should be a man, the Son of David, and nothing more. Our Saviour replies, Whence is it then that David calls the Messiah Lord? Ps. cx. 1, "The Lord said unto my Lord." How could He be both David's Lord and David's Son? No son is Lord to his father: therefore if Christ be David's sovereign, He must be more than man; more than David's Son. Hence we learn, first, that although Christ was really and truly man, yet He was more than a mere man: He was Lord unto, and was the salvation of, his own forefathers. Secondly, we learn, that the only way to reconcile the Scriptures which speak concerning Christ, is to believe and acknowledge Him to be God and man in one person. The Messiah, as man, was to come forth out of David's loins: but, as God and man united, He was David's Sovereign and Saviour: as man, He was his Father's Son; as God, He was Lord to his own Father. Burkitt.

As to the subject of the former part of this Gospel, it may be observed, that if the loving of God be the first and great commandment, then this ought to be first regarded and endeavoured by us, that we may be rooted and grounded in the love of Him; and that love, growing and increasing in us, will lead us to all the other parts of our duty to Him. To which end, we are to think often of his infinite and adorable perfections, together with his unspeakable love and kindness to us, which are great enough to engage and inflame our affections; adding hereunto our daily prayers, that He would shed abroad his love into our hearts, that we may no longer resist his powerful charms, and that we may at last obtain that crown of life, which He hath promised and prepared for them that love Him. 2. If the love of our neighbour be "the second commandment and like unto the first," then ought this in the next place to be regarded and laboured for; and let us not think (as too many do) that their duty to God will excuse them from their duty to their neighbour. We may not make the two tables of the Law to clash or interfere with one another, nor think that the keeping of the one will atone for the breaking of the other;

Rom. viii. 8—11.

The Epistle. Ephes. iv. 17.

THIS I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind; having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart: who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. But ye have not so learned Christ; if so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus: that ye put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. Wherefore, putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another. Be ye angry and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath; neither give place to the devil. Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you[f].

but, being both alike in their authority and obligation, they are to be equally kept, and observed by us, loving God for his own and our neighbour for his sake. And, lastly, If on these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets, then all our hopes and expectations must depend upon the observation of them. The will of God must not be performed by halves, nor may we hope to enter into life without keeping both these commandments. And as God hath in both consulted our good, so let us make both the standing rule of our lives and actions. Dr. Hole.

Most glorious and happy will be that day, when faith shall give place to sight, and hope be swallowed up in present and complete enjoyment! when all imperfections shall cease, all differences be composed, and nothing remain but strict unanimity, and boundless love, and exquisite delight! when a new scene shall open, of an eternity to be employed in concerts of praise and thanks, for the excellent glory of God, and his inestimable goodness to us and to all mankind! But, till that blest day come, if there be any sense of interest, or of duty; if any regard to the happiness of the publick, to the honour of religion, to the salvation of our own souls; in a word, if any care, to approve ourselves Christians in good earnest; let it be seen, by abounding in that love to God and to our neighbour, which is the "very bond of peace, and of all virtues." Let it be seen, by addressing ourselves most devoutly to the throne of grace, with those petitions which the best of Churches puts into our mouths: beseeching "Almighty God to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love him;" and to "pour down" into them "that most excellent gift of charity, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before him." And may He grant this for his only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[e] The nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day teaches us to pray to God, that forasmuch as without Him we are not able to please Him, He would mercifully grant us his Holy Spirit in all things to direct and rule our hearts.

Accordingly, the Epistle for the day shews us, 1. Our utter inability of ourselves to please God, set forth by the natural state of the Gentiles before they received the Gospel. 2. The gracious aids and assistances of God's Holy Spirit in order to please Him, represented in the happy estate of Christians by the grace and favour of the Gospel. 3. Some of those rules by which the Holy Spirit in all things directs our hearts in the right way. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel brings before us the friends of a person sick of the palsy, testifying in a remarkable manner their eager desire of obtaining, and their confident expectation of receiving, a cure from the power and goodness of Christ; upon which He, who never wanted inclination to pity and relieve the distressed, and only waited till men were duly qualified to receive the mercies which He was always ready to bestow; "seeing their faith," that is, finding them capable, and judging this a fit opportunity for exercising his divine compassion, granted their request, and healed the distemper presently. Dean Stanhope.

[f] The absolute necessity, as well as the invaluable benefits, of that divine revelation and grace, which is ministered by the Gospel of Christ, need no other evidence, than the description given here by St. Paul, of those miserable circumstances, to which the heathens were reduced for want of them. The wretched ignorance and errors, whereby the candle of the Lord within

The Gospel. St. Matth. ix. 1.

JESUS entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into his own city. And behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed. And Jesus, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee. And behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. And Jesus, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee? or to say, Arise, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. And he arose, and departed to his house. But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, who had given such power unto men[g].

them, the faculties of reason and judgment, were almost quite put out: the total depravation of the will and affections, addicted and fastened down to objects of flesh and sense; and irreconcileably averse to all the ends and methods, wherein the dignity of human nature, and the excellence of a spiritual and divine life, do consist: the utter insensibility and obduration of the heart and conscience, which customary sinning introduces; partly by men's own obstinate indulgence of their wicked lusts, and resisting the checks and admonitions of their own and God's Spirit; and partly, by that judicial hardness, which God is provoked to inflict, by withdrawing those preventing and assisting graces, which they have continued to abuse and despise: and, lastly, the inability of corrupt nature to discern and apply itself to matters of religion; plainly demonstrated, by the examples of eminent heathen philosophers, who, though exceeding shrewd and sagacious in other respects, were yet in this mistaken, and absurd, even to the most despicable degree of childishness and folly: these are experiments too plain to be gainsaid, and such as conspire at once to give us a very mean opinion of our own natural powers, and to oblige us to thankfulness for those supernatural assistances, to which we owe the very capacity, either of "pleasing God" or of thinking and acting like men.

Concerning the change said afterwards to be wrought upon persons converted to Christianity, it may be seasonable to observe, that the manner of the apostle's expressing it intimates their becoming quite another sort of people; indeed, the very reverse of what they had been before. "The old man to be put off" is said to be "corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;" those lusts, which cheated men with flattering promises of satisfactions which they cannot yield: and therefore the change in this point will consist in stopping our ears against all false insinuations from that quarter, abandoning the unprofitable corruption, and having our "fruit unto holiness." This implies mortifying and renouncing all sinful desires; repenting and effectually forsaking all our past faults: but "putting on the new man" implies a great deal more. This supposes activity and diligence in piety and virtue; doing good no less than abstaining from evil. This proves, how sandy a foundation those hopes are built upon, which look for salvation and acceptance with God, for not being vicious only; and, provided the sins of commission be carefully avoided, are as little concerned for those omissions, as if they were to make no article in our account. The danger of which too common deceit we may reasonably suppose our blessed Lord had in view, and intended effectually to warn us all against, by so directly levelling at them his descriptions of the general judgment, under those two famous parables of the "talents" and of the "sheep and the goats," Matt. xxv.

Again: as the great depravity of an unregenerate state consists in an "alienation from the life of God:" so does the commendation of a regenerate one, in being "created after God in righteousness and true holiness," Eph. iv. 24. And this consideration duly borne in mind would, I cannot but think, abundantly suffice to satisfy those doubts and scruples men dispute so variously about, concerning some liberties, the lawfulness whereof is questionable; or concerning the measure and circumstances of others, the lawfulness whereof in themselves is unquestionable. For, in such cases, would we but ask our consciences, whether a total abstaining from the former, and a prudent and somewhat severer restraint with regard to the latter, or whether a larger or more unguarded allowance, have more of the spirit of religion, more of a new heart and affections, more of conformity to the holiness of God; after whose image it is our glory to be created, and whose likeness it is our duty to preserve, and express, and aspire after higher degrees of: the resolution of this single question would clearly inform us, though not what is strictly lawful or unlawful, yet (which is more useful) what is fit or unfit, agreeable or disagreeable to our character; better than all the subtilties of casuists, or entering into the niceties of any such particular points whatsoever. Dean Stanhope.

[g] From this Gospel we may observe our Saviour's great kindness to this poor paralytick, in healing the maladies both of body and soul together: for He at once removed his palsy for the health of his body, and pronounced his pardon for the welfare of his soul, and by both blessed him with a perfect and complete cure of all his infirmities; He did not things by halves, nor made any empty and insignificant offers of kindness, but ever did more than he seemed to promise or pretend to, yea, more than any could ask or think; which is a farther instance of his inexpressible love to mankind, and ought to be both admired and imitated by us as well as we may. 2. From the scribes and Pharisees carping at our Saviour, and charging Him with blasphemy for forgiving the sins of this poor paralytick, we learn the proneness of evil men to defame the best persons, and find fault with the best actions; and, if they dealt so with Christ Himself, his disciples may not expect better treatment from them. The disciple is not above his Lord; and, if our Master met with evil treatment from the scribes and Pharisees, we may learn to bear with like usage from the like persons: daily experience shews us how apt ill-minded men are to accuse and traduce such as are every way better than themselves, and to spy a mote in their brother's eye when they cannot see a beam in their own; we find what perverse comments and constructions they make of the most innocent and well-meant actions, and how greedily they seek occasions of troubles and disturbance. We observed this in many other instances of the Pharisees, and we may easily observe the same in too many of their followers. 3. From our Saviour's working a miracle to take off the charge of blasphemy, and exerting his divine power to silence his enemies, we may learn to use all possible means, and particularly "by well-doing" (as the apostle directs) "to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." St. Paul's advice is, "Let not your good be evil spoken of." Now though it be not always in our power to prevent this, yet we are to do the best we can, to elude the cavils and calumnies of evil men. Lastly, from the people's glorifying and blessing God upon this miracle of healing a sick man, let us learn to give God the glory of all his mercies, and to ascribe to Him the honour due to his name; particularly, as we are taught by the Gospel for this day, let us praise God as for the life and doctrine, so for the miracles of our blessed Saviour, which gave the highest honour and confirmation to both. Let us frequently meditate on the number and greatness of them, the better to raise our minds to a higher esteem and thankfulness for them; that will mightily conduce to the confirming of us in the belief of his doctrines and to the building of us up more firmly in our most holy faith, and that will bring us at last to the end of our faith, even the salvation of our soul. Dr. Hole.

[h] The twentieth Sunday after Trinity] We are taught in the Collect for this day, to pray that we may be kept from all things that may hurt us, that so being ready both in body and soul, we may cheerfully accomplish those things that God would have done, &c. Which things requiring no small care and diligence to accomplish them, the Epistle for the day begins with an exhortation to a wise, wary, and circumspect walking, to prevent the evils that may otherwise befal us.

The Gospel contains a parable, in which, under the resemblance of a king's making a marriage for his son, and inviting many to it, is set forth the free and gracious offer of the Gospel, together with the invaluable blessings and privileges of it: which offer was first made to the Jewish Church and nation, and upon their refusal it was made to the Gentiles, and in them to all nations; adding, withal, a severe sentence upon those that rejected this tender, or received it not as they should. Dr. Hole.

[i] From the Epistle of this day the following lessons may be learned:

1. We may learn, that it is impossible for a Christian to maintain a holy course of obedience to the commands of God, without great care and caution, heedfulness and circumspection. None can walk holily, who do not walk watchfully. Also we may learn the excellence, as well as the necessity, of circumspect walking: it is not a foolish, unadvised course, of which we can give no rational account; but it is such as the wisdom of God recommends to us, and such as bespeaks us truly and really wise: wise for ourselves, and to our best and true interest: wise both for this world and for the next.

2. We may learn another very important duty: namely, to redeem the time: this cannot be done in a natural sense; time once past is irrecoverably lost: we can no more recal it. But in a moral sense time may be said to be redeemed, when our diligence to improve it is redoubled, and when we do much in a small portion of it. To redeem time supposes and implies a right knowledge of the use and end of it, a high valuation of the worth and excellency of it, and resolution to rescue it from the hands of those who would destroy it; namely, idleness, excess of sleep, inordinate adorning of the body, immoderate recreations, vain company, an excess of worldly business.

3. We may learn not to allow ourselves in intemperance, or in any sinful excesses; but to let our desires and endeavours be directed to procure the grace of the Holy Spirit of God; so that, being filled therewith, our souls may be kept holy, and our bodies chaste, and the whole man may be rendered fit for the service of God on earth, and meet for the fruition of God in heaven.

4. We may learn, that the hearts and spirits of good men are full of spiritual mirth and joy: that it is lawful and praiseworthy in them to give vent to their inward delight by singing; that psalms and hymns and spiritual songs well become their mouths, when they perform their spiritual exercises; and that, in singing these, there should be an inward harmony, and a melody of the soul and heart, as well as of the tongue.

Lastly, we are here instructed in the duty of thanksgiving. That we should perform it "always;" that is, at least every day, and on every solemn occasion, keeping the heart continually in a frame for praising as well as praying. That we should "give thanks for all things:" that is, first, for all providences, whether prosperous or adverse, for sickness as well as for health, God intending our good by both: and secondly, for all mercies; for mercies of forbearance, of prevention, of recovery, for common benefits, for peculiar favours, for mercies received, for mercies expected, for what we possess, and for what we have in hope. That we should offer our thanksgivings "to God and the Father;" to God, our Creator; to God, as the Father of our Lord

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxii. 1.

JESUS said, The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, who made a marriage for his son; and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding; and they would not come. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise: and the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth; and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burnt up their city. Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they who were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the high-ways, and as many as ye shal. find bid to the marriage. So those servants went out in the high-ways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good; and the wedding was furnished with guests. And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment. And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen[k].

The Collect.

GRANT, we beseech thee, merciful Lord, to thy faithful peo-

Jesus Christ, and our Father in Him. And that our thanksgivings should be offered "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ:" that as all our spiritual addresses, both of prayer and praise, must be offered up to God; so their acceptance with God is to be expected only by and through our Lord Jesus Christ, the only propitiation for our sins, the one Mediator between God and men. Burkitt.

[k] Two reflections suggested by the latter part of this Scripture are particularly deserving of notice.

1. The statement concerning the man that had not on a wedding-garment, shews that a bare compliance with the invitations, and appearing at the feast, would not suffice; and thus ministers serious subject of thought and just matter of fear to the professors of Christ's religion. The apostle, speaking of the Church's marriage to the Lamb, says, "to her it was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; and the fine linen is the righteousness of saints," Rev. xix. 8. This passage will help us in explaining the wedding-garment, and shews that by it are intended all that purity of mind and conversation, all that charity and those good works, which are the genuine fruits and evidences of a truly Christian faith. So that the person thrust out for want of such a garment, is an emblem of all those who profess and receive, but do not live up to, the principles of Christ's religion. Their embracing of these, and being baptized into them, may pass for an acceptance of the invitation, and a coming to the feast. But their coming in so irregular and indecent a garb, not "putting off the old man with his affections and lusts," nor "putting on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," Eph. iv. 22—24, do as effectually exclude them from the saving benefits of this feast, as if they had never been persuaded of the truth, and so had never come at all.

2. A consideration of this parable may serve to instruct us, who are the "called," and who the "chosen" of God. All, to whom the knowledge of Christ and his religion is come, whether they embrace it or not; and those that embrace it, whether, after embracing it, they live agreeably to it or not; all these are the "called." And they who do embrace and live up to it, these only are the "chosen." Chosen freely, because without any thing on their part to deserve, but not so as that nothing should be requisite on their part to incline this choice: for those works, which are by no means to be allowed as a "meritorious" cause, because accepted only in and for the sake of Christ, (the only meritorious cause of our salvation,) are yet necessary in the quality of an instrumental and conditional cause, because "without holiness no man shall see the Lord," Heb. xii. 14.

The ministers, the word of God, and his holy sacraments, are the means whereby we are ordinarily called. To neglect these is to reject God's call; to attend them hypocritically and formally, and rest upon these ordinances without a life suitable to them, is to come without a wedding-garment. To hear and read and pray and communicate and live accordingly, is to follow the apostle's advice, (which he would never have left us, if we had no part or concern in this great work ourselves,) that, I mean, of "giving all diligence to make our calling and election sure." Which, that we may effectually do, let us earnestly beseech God, as directed in the Collect for this day, "of his bountiful goodness to keep us from all things that may hurt us; that we, being ready both in body and soul, may cheerfully accomplish those things that he would have done, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[l] The one and twentieth Sunday after Trinity.] The petitions we offer up in the Collect for this day, are for pardon and peace; that, being cleansed from all our sins, we may serve God with a quiet mind. To obtain which, the Epistle for the day begins with an exhortation to "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," that is, to be confirmed in the faith of Christ, to be for-ple pardon and peace, that they may be cleansed from all their sins, and serve thee with a quiet mind; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Ephes. vi. 10.

MY brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and, having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth; and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication for all saints; and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds; that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak[m].

tified with grace and spiritual strength from him, and to labour for such a firmness and constancy of mind, as may carry us above and beyond all temptations.

The Gospel contains the narrative of a miracle wrought on a nobleman's son at Capernaum. Dr. Hole.

[m] We shall do well to observe the directions here given to the Ephesians, for so deporting themselves against their spiritual enemies, and so managing the armour recommended to them, that they might come off with safety and honour in their dangerous encounter.

1. By representing the multitude and the quality of our enemies, the apostle plainly intends to awaken our care and provoke us to action. And this point indeed ought to be more frequently and more seriously laid to heart, than generally it is. For to what, but the want of this consideration, can we ascribe the wretched negligence and sloth, the thoughtlessness and profound security, in which the greater part of Christians spend their days? Alas! our danger calls for all our activity and thought; and all is little enough, to obtain victory at last. But then do we most effectually give advantage to, and take part with our enemies, when we seem to forget that we have any enemies at all. And their defeat in this spiritual war is unavoidable, who say to their own souls, "Peace, peace," when there is not, cannot be, peace.

2. By being called on "to put on the whole armour of God," we are taught not to be discouraged or sink into despair, by reason of the danger previously described. This shews us where our strength lies; that neither are we left naked and defenceless, nor are the foes, we have to wrestle with, invincible. To have bidden us "be strong," and "stand" (as we say) upon our own legs, against such enemies, had indeed been most absurd. But when we are commanded to be "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, to put on the armour of God," and to resist under his assistance and protection; this proves them that are with us to be more and mightier than all that are, or can be, against us. It shews that we go out against them in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of battles; and under the cover of one, who can, nay, who actually did, conquer them long ago. It proves, that courage and vigour, resistance and resolution, diligence and perseverance, are required on our part. We must fight, and maintain our ground, and not expect deliverance and conquest without our own endeavours: but if we continue fighting, we shall not fail both to keep and get ground; because armed and strengthened by one, who will not fail to bring us off, when those endeavours are sincere and constant.

3. In order hereunto it is necessary, that as our exigencies and wants are, so our requests for seasonable recruits in this war should be, pressing and continual. That no opportunity be lost by our neglect, nor any assistances either withheld or withdrawn, for want of application. And, because the danger and the cause are common, our concern must be so too. Ourselves cannot be safe without that charity, which gives us an interest in the safety of every Christian: for no member of this mystical body is made or fights for, and therefore none ought to regard, or pray for, himself alone; and because in this, as in the body natural, every member is not of the same use and consequence; therefore our prayers should be, in a more especial manner, for those, by whose labours and the success of them the welfare of the whole is more especially promoted. Such was St. Paul, with regard to these Ephesians; such in proportion are all ministers of the Gospel to their respective charges. Each whereof may very reasonably bespeak, and each ought certainly to be heard when he does bespeak, the constant intercessions of his people. For though we are not "ambassadors in bonds," yet we are all "ambassadors," if not strictly and first to "make known the mystery of the Gospel;" yet to press faith and obedience to it, in places where it is already known; to instruct the many ignorant even there; to comfort the feeble-minded, to support the weak, to warn the unruly, and to oppose gainsayers. In all which we have great occasion for the prayers of good Christians, "that utterance may be given to us, that we may open our he went unto him and besought him that he would come down and heal his son; for he was at the point of death. Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe. The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die. Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way, thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way. And, as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth. Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend: and they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him. So the father knew that it was at the same hour in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth; and himself believed, and his whole house. This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judæa into Galilee [n].

mouths boldly;" and in despite of difficulties and discouragements, "may speak" upon all occasions "as we ought to speak." Dean Stanhope.

[n] In this miracle the manner of our Lord's proceeding is remarkable, and deserves the more notice, because so very different from his behaviour to an inhabitant of the same city, a dependent upon the same court, and in a case of very like nature. When a centurion, whose servant lay sick at Capernaum too, solicited his help, the message met with this encouraging reply, "I will come and heal him," Matt. viii. 7: accordingly, without the least delay, our Lord was moving thither; but was stopped, by this most noble, yet humble declaration of his faith, "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof, but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed," Luke vii. 6—8. Now here a person in much more eminent post makes pressing application that He would "come and heal his son." A relation, as much dearer, as the figure of the courtier was superior to that of the centurion: and yet, we find nothing like the same readiness, in complying with this request; which I mention for this very purpose, that, by comparing the cases together, it may appear, that our Lord did, what we may discern to be highly prudent and proper, in each of them.

That centurion was duly sensible, both of our Lord's power, and of his own unworthiness: to him therefore the kindest advances were made, that those preventions might furnish an opportunity for rendering both his humility, and his faith, exemplary and publick. The nobleman here seems rather to look for attendance and respect; and to have thought, that nothing less than our Lord's own presence could do any service; nay, and that even this, if not quickly granted, would come too late. This imperfection of his faith is expressed, in that second instance made, ver. 49, "Sir, come down ere my child die:" he therefore was to be treated another way; to be taught, that the Messiah is no respecter of persons, that the outward state and dignity is of far less regard with him, than the inward disposition and virtue of the man: to be convinced, that God is a God afar off as well as near at hand; and that one single word, at a distance, should be as effectual to the patient, as a sight of him, or a touch, or any corporal application whatsoever. These are instructions and convictions, which could not so fully have been given, had our Lord complied with the first entreaty, and gone down to the house; and therefore, He contrived a method of more coldness and reserve, to make at once the miracle appear greater, and the effect and benefit of it upon the asker, greater and more successful too. Dean Stanhope.

2. He, who came to complain of his son's sickness, hears of his own: "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." Our Saviour tells him of his unbelief. He feels not himself sick of that disease. All his mind is on his dying son. As easily do we complain of bodily grief, as we are hardly affected with spiritual.

3. Let us admire the meekness and mercy of this Lamb of God! When we would have looked, that He should have punished this suitor for not believing, He condescends to him, that he may believe. "Go thy way; thy son liveth." If we should measure our hopes by our own worthiness, there were no expectation of blessings: but if we shall measure them by his bounty and compassion, there can be no doubt of prevailing.

4. Justly doth Christ forbear to go down with this ruler, lest He should confirm him in an opinion, of measuring his power by conceits of locality and distance: but He doth that in absence, for which his presence was required, with a repulse, "Thy son liveth:" giving a greater demonstration of his omnipotency than was craved. How oft doth He not hear to our will, that He may hear us to our advantage! The "chosen vessel" would be rid of temptations; he hears of a supply of grace: the sick man asks release, receives patience; life, and receives glory. Let us ask what we think best: let Him give what He knows best.

5. With one word doth Christ heal two patients; the son and the father; the son's fever, the father's unbelief. That operative word of our Saviour was not without the intention of a trial. Had not the ruler gone home, satisfied with that intimation of his son's life and recovery, neither of them had been blessed with success. Now, the news of performance meets Him one half the way, and He that believed somewhat ere he came, and more when he went, grew to more faith in the way; and, when he came home, enlarged his faith to all the skirts of his family. A weak faith may be true; but a true faith is growing. Bp. Hall.

Lastly, we may remark the success of the miracle; by which is meant the conviction that it wrought upon the nobleman and his family, described by its being said, that "himself believed, and his whole house."

By his own believing we are to understand, that a consideration of the power and goodness of Christ, in raising his son from that languishing and hopeless condition, disposed him to attend to his doctrine, to acknowledge his divine authority, and to become his disciple upon a reasonable and full persuasion of the truth of both. By his "whole house believing" is meant, that he did not content himself with these improvements of that mercy, made singly in his own person; but took good care to propagate all possible effects of this miracle, and to press the natural consequences of it, upon as many as his capacity gave him any command or influence over; in both, he is and ought to be our example: for all deliverances should have the like operation. We do not, God be blessed, need the for-

The Collect.

Eph. ii. 19. Ps. lxxxiv. 11; cxxi. 5—7. 1 Cor i. 8. Phil. i. 6. 10, 11.

LORD, we beseech thee to keep thy household the Church in continual godliness; that through thy protection it may be free from all adversities, and devoutly given to serve thee in good works, to the glory of thy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Phil. i. 3.

I Thank my God upon every remembrance of you, (always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy,) for your fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now; being confident of this very thing, that he who hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ; even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart, inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace. For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge, and in all judgement: that ye may approve things that are excellent, that ye may be sincere, and without offence, till the day of Christ: being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God[p].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xviii. 21.

PETER said unto Jesus, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but until seventy times seven. Therefore is the Kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The servant therefore fell down and worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Then the lord of that servant

mer part, of being brought to the confession of Christ and his Gospel; but, alas! we need, but too much, to be quickened and confirmed in the faith we make profession of; and to be put upon using all our might, for establishing and advancing others in good principles and practices. For which the fresh experiments of God's great goodness to us minister very proper occasions. And if we duly improve them, we shall with most devout and affectionate hearts admire, adore, and serve Him; and account it our greatest joy, by example, persuasion, and every holy act, to increase the number of his zealous worshippers upon earth now, and of his glorified saints in heaven hereafter. Dean Stanhope.

[o] The two and twentieth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day prays to God, to keep his household the Church in continual godliness; that through his protection it may be free from all adversities, and devoutly given to serve in good works. Suitably whereunto the Epistle for the day contains St. Paul's prayer for those things in behalf of the Philippians, that God would prosper the Church among men, and that they might persevere in godliness and good works.

The Gospel relates to the great duty of men forgiving one another their trespasses, and illustrates by a parable the nature, necessity, and other circumstances of this duty. Dr. Hole.

[p] From this prayer of the apostle in behalf of the Philippians, and from the several parts of it, we learn,

1. That it is an office of great charity to pray for one another: for this is the best, and sometimes the only, way we have to do them any service. So did St. Paul here to the Philippians, whom he always "remembered in every prayer, making request with joy." The like we find him doing for the Colossians, chap. i. 9; "Since the day we heard of your faith, we cease not to pray for you." And elsewhere, "God forbid, that I should sin against God, in ceasing to pray for you." As if it were an act of the greatest impiety against God, as well as injustice and unkindness towards our neighbour, to neglect so weighty a duty in their behalf. These pious examples recommend to us this great office of charity, to be tenderly affected to, and to be always mindful of, one another in our prayers.

2. We learn hence the subject matter of our prayers, or what it is that we are to pray for in the behalf of each other; and that is, for the increase of love to God and man; that it may abound more and more towards both: for the knowledge and approbation of the best things, namely, such as are necessary to our present peace and future happiness; for such a sincere and unblemished life, as may lead to the attainment of both; and finally for such a stock of grace and good fruits, as may tend to the glory of God and our own salvation.

This is a good direction both for the matter and manner of our prayers for one another; to which if we keep, we shall do well, being assured of finding the return of such prayers in our own bosom; for Christ hath encouraged us with the promise of and answer to such petitions, and that whatsoever we ask the Father in his name, He will give it. Dr. Hole.

was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred pence; and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest. And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And he would not; but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt. So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me: shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses[q].

The three and twentieth Sunday after Trinity[r].

The Collect.

O God, our refuge and strength, who art the author of all godliness; Be ready, we beseech thee, Ps. xci. 2; xxxi. 4; lix. 16; xlvi. 1. John xv. 5.

[q] Our obligation to the duty of forgiveness is here illustrated by comparing the two cases in the parable together, and so shewing the disparity between them. Now that disparity consists chiefly in three things; the parties concerned, the quality of the debt, and the ability of making satisfaction. These are differences, each of them deserving our most attentive consideration.

1. For that of the parties. First, our sins against God, are a "debt" to a "King," a "trespass" upon a "Father;" those of men against us are between servant and fellow-servant, brother and brother. One known aggravation of any fault is estimated by the quality of the person offended. And the capacities, which God is here represented under, are such as do, above all others, render sinners in this respect inexcusable. His dignity and distance above us, his authority and dominion over us, are implied in the character of a King; his boundless affection, and goodness, and tender care for us, under that of a Father. The former convicts us of most insolent rebellion; the latter, of the basest and most unnatural ingratitude.

2. Secondly, The quality of the debt itself, figured by sums so distant, as that of our offences against God amounting to "ten thousand talents," those of our brethren against us rising no higher than a "hundred pence." They who take the pains to compute these two sums will, I think, find the disproportion between them to be much about six hundred thousand to one. Nor may we imagine the comparison to stand good, only in the case of very notorious and profligate sinners on the one hand, and of the slightest injuries on the other; but every man, even the most circumspect, owes his "ten thousand talents" to God, and no man, even the most unworthily treated, hath more than "a hundred pence" to demand of his brother.

3. A third difference is with regard to the ability of these several debtors. What we have offended God in, we are in no condition to make satisfaction for; but for all that men have done amiss to us, we may receive large and sufficient reparation. This remark likewise the parable suggests, by affirming, that "the servant had not" wherewithal "to pay" his Lord, Matt. xviii. 25. His asking "patience" therefore, and promising full payment, were but the artifices of common debtors, who, to gain time and quiet, make no scruple to engage for such things as they are unable to make good. But now, by no such intimation being left us of the fellow-servant, ver. 28—30, we may reasonably presume, that his "hundred pence" might, and would have been easily compassed, with a little forbearing and gentle usage.

Thus it is likewise in the application. Many offences the very persons offending may make us good amends for; many the laws will right us in; and those in which neither of these ways can help us to restitution, God hath a thousand methods in reserve, and will not fail to do us justice for.

But though men may sometimes, and God can and will always, make us amends, yet we are not in a capacity of making him any. All the payment He can receive for this vast debt on our part, is of his own. For we have nothing, and we are nothing; and therefore, knowing that we had not to pay, this gracious Lord hath provided Himself a Lamb, of more value than millions of millions of us: a Lamb, whose blood He therefore accepts in full satisfaction for the debts and trespasses of a whole world of sinners.

So strongly is this duty bound upon us, by a comparison of the two cases. To men dispassionate and unprejudiced these reasons will be sufficient: to them that are not, nothing will be so. I conclude therefore with an excellent passage out of the Son of Sirach, than which I can think of none more pertinent to the Gospel of this day: "He that revengeth shall find vengeance from the Lord, and he will surely keep his sins in remembrance. Forgive thy neighbour the hurt that he hath done unto thee, so shall thy sins also be forgiven when thou prayest. One man beareth hatred against another, and doth he seek pardon from the Lord? He sheweth no mercy to a man, which is like himself; and doth he ask forgiveness of his own sins? If he that is but flesh nourish hatred, who will intreat for pardon of his sins? Remember the commandments, and bear no malice to thy neighbour; remember the covenant of the highest, and wink at ignorance," Eccles. xxviii. 1, &c. Dean Stanhope.

[r] The three and twentieth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day beseeches God to hear the devout prayers of his Church, and to grant that those things, which we ask faithfully, may be obtained effectually. To which end, the Epistle for the day teaches us how to hear the devout prayers of thy Church; and grant that those things which we ask faithfully we may obtain effectually; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mark xi. 24.

The Epistle. Phil. iii. 17.

BRETHREN, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.) For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself[s].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xxii. 15.

THEN went the Pharisees and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk. And they sent out unto him their disciples, with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men. Tell us therefore, what thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not? But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a peny. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's. When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way[t]. our persons must be qualified, that our prayers may be accepted: to wit, by following our forerunners in the faith, and a pious imitation of their examples. The Gospel sets before us the malicious and crafty designs of the Pharisees and others against our Saviour; and his great prudence in confounding their devices and eluding their snares, together with the excellent instruction which He thence took occasion to deliver. Dr. Hole.

[s] The great lesson taught in this Epistle is, that we be followers of the holy apostles, and set their lives and actions before us, as a pattern for ours. To this end, we should read often the Scriptures of the New Testament, where their memorable works and actions are recorded, and bear them in mind, that we may have them always ready as occasion may require: not that we are to be followers of them, in doing the miracles and other wonderful works that they did, for that was a power or privilege peculiar to them, granted for a while only for the confirmation and propagation of the Gospel; which being now well confirmed and propagated, there can be no farther need or use of them, and therefore are not to be prayed for or pretended to by us. Nor yet are we to be followers of the apostles in their failings and infirmities, some whereof were very great; as St. Peter's denying his Master, St. Paul persecuting the church, and the like, which are recorded in Scripture, not that we should follow but forsake them; but that, which we are called upon to imitate in them, is their virtues, to follow their good works, to have them before us as a rule to govern our actions, or as a copy to transcribe in our lives and conversations, and to walk even as they walked. And indeed what better precedents can we follow, than those persons, who have not only chalked out our way for us by their precepts, but likewise trod every step of it before us by their examples? To both which let us all learn to conform our lives, and labour not to swerve from either in the whole course of our conversation. To which end, 2. Let us abandon the ways and works of all loose, profane, and profligate persons; and such disorderly walkers, as the apostle could not speak of without weeping, let us not think of without abhorring and avoiding, for their end is destruction, to which they lead themselves and all their followers: we have seen their description, being such, "whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, and who mind only earthly things." In opposition whereunto let us, 3. Especially imitate the apostles in their holy and heavenly conversation; for, though they lived upon the earth, yet they declared that they belonged to another country; they were but pilgrims and strangers here, their citizenship and conversation was in heaven; they were dead and crucified to this world; their hearts were there, where their treasure was, even in heaven, from whence they expected their Saviour, to come and take them to Himself. And since we also look for the same, let us learn to do and to demean ourselves likewise: especially considering the great and glorious change, that will then befal both our body and soul, from the many miseries and infirmities of this earth, to all the glories and felicities of heaven. Dr. Hole.

[t] The things that are Cæsar's, or the rights of sovereign princes, are honour, obedience, and tribute; as also, the things that are God's, or the rights of the great Sovereign and Ruler of the world, are religious worship, which is due to Him only; and some divine honours, and respects that are to be paid to sacred persons and things, for the relation they bear to Him. And it belongs to us all to practise a careful and conscientious discharge of these duties, by rendering to each what of right belongs to them. And, 1. Let us be careful that we render unto Cæsar, or sovereign kings or queens, the things that are theirs: that is, honour their persons as God's vicegerents, with all the expressions of inward and outward honour, and take care not to dishonour them in thought, word, or deed. 2. Let us

The Epistle. Col. i. 3.

WE give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints; for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the Gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth. As ye also learned of Epaphras, our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ; who also declared unto us your love in the Spirit. For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness; giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light[x].

render unto them all due submission and obedience to their laws, owning and yielding to their authority for God's sake, and not listening to any suggestions or temptations to the contrary. 3. Let us render tribute unto them as occasions shall require, which is here plainly commanded by our Saviour, and is necessary for the safety both of prince and people; the denying whereof to a lawful and pious prince of these kingdoms hath brought many miseries and heavy burdens upon them ever since. But above all, lastly, let us be careful of "rendering unto God the things that are God's," that is, by giving to Him divine worship, and to none beside Him, and likewise by paying all due respect and reverence to those persons, times, and places, that are consecrated to Him; honouring his ministers, hallowing his sabbath, and reverencing his sanctuary. In a word, by rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, we may live quietly and easily here; and by rendering unto God the things that are God's, we shall live happily for ever hereafter. Dr. Hole.

[u] The four and twentieth Sunday after Trinity.] The Collect for the day beseeches God to absolve his people from their offences, that, through his bountiful goodness, they may all be delivered from the bands of those sins, which by their frailty they have committed: which things cannot better be obtained than by frequent and fervent prayer. And therefore the apostle in this Epistle puts up his hearty prayers in the behalf of the Colossians, that all sin might decay and die in them, and that all the graces of the Spirit might grow and flourish among them. The Gospel gives an account of two of our blessed Saviour's miracles. Dr. Hole.

[x] The state of endless glory and happiness hereafter is here called by the name of an "inheritance," to signify the title we have to it as purchased for us by Jesus Christ: and the tenure by which we hold it, which is not by a term of lives, or a lease of years, but by an inheritance for ever. Hence it is sometimes called, "a kingdom that cannot be moved," and "an everlasting kingdom;" at other times "an inheritance undefiled, incorruptible, that never faileth or fadeth away," 1 Pet. i. 4. 2. It is called the inheritance "of the saints," to signify the persons to whom it belongs, which is not to all, whether in the church, or out of the church; nor yet to those, that live loose, careless, and wicked lives in it; but only to "the saints," that is, to such as are admitted into Christ's holy church, and continue true and faithful members of it to their lives' end. For these it is, that "there is laid up a crown of glory, which God the righteous Judge shall give at the last day, to all such as love and look for his appearing." 3. It is called the inheritance of the saints "in light;" to signify the glory and splendour of that happy state; for as darkness is made to represent a state of horror and endless misery, for which reason hell is described to be a place of black and eternal darkness; so light is set to signify a condition of joy and blessedness; and therefore heaven is represented as a place of bright and ever-shining light.

But how are we made partakers of this inheritance of the saints in light? Why, that is by the graces of God's Holy Spirit wrought in us, which alone can fit us for glory. They that delight in the deeds of darkness are no ways qualified for this inheritance of the saints in light; their portion will be to inherit darkness, and to be shut up in the black abyss of outer darkness for evermore. It is the children of light and of the day that are alone qualified to inherit light, and to inhabit for ever in the regions of bliss and glory. What concord hath light with darkness, or what fellowship hath the carnal and sensual mind with pure and refined spirits? These things cannot agree or abide together, and consequently cannot be happy together.

Heaven is the habitation of holiness, where no unholy thing or person can dwell; "without holiness no man can see the Lord:" and they, that cannot see Him, can never be happy in enjoying Him. Holiness is not only a condition, but a necessary qualification for happiness: and to be made "meet partakers of the inheritance of the saints," we must be holy in all manner of conversation and godliness; for it is called "the inheritance among them that are sanctified;" to signify, that no unsanctified person can have any share in it. Again, heaven is the region of purity, where no

The Gospel. St. Matth. ix. 18.

WHILE Jesus spake these things unto John's disciples, behold there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead; but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live. And Jesus arose, and followed him, and so did his disciples. (And behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment; for she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole. But Jesus turned him about, and when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.) And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise, he said unto them, Give place; for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land[y].

defilement enters; and to fit ourselves to come there, we must "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God." No unclean person, or whoremonger, or adulterer, can be admitted into those undefiled regions; nor if he could, would he find any happiness there, where there is nothing to gratify his sensual desires. We cannot see or enjoy God, unless we are like Him; so the apostle tells us, and he that hath this hope, "must purify himself, even as he is pure," 1 John iii. 2, 3. Moreover, heaven is the mansion of peace and love, there is no discord or dissension there, but all the inhabitants of those blessed regions conspire together in perfect peace and amity; they all agree in the worship of their Maker, and join with one heart and one voice in their incessant Hallelujahs. Now to be meet partakers of these joys we must tune our hearts to the same harmony of peace and concord, subduing all that pride, passion, and prejudice, that lead to contention, and labouring for those gracious qualities and dispositions, that tend to the closest union of hearts and minds. In a word, the way to be made meet partakers of this heavenly inheritance, is by the daily exercises of a holy life, and the constant practice of religion and virtue. Dr. Hole.

[y] The Gospel for the day consists of two miracles: the one, if I may be allowed so to distinguish, principally designed; the other, as it were, incidental only. In the former we have a tender father, applying in behalf of one only daughter, lying at the last gasp; yet so, that he seems to have judged it possible for our Lord to have arrived at the patient time enough to prevent her death, had He not permitted Himself to be detained by the cure of the bloody issue and the expostulations that followed thereupon, as He manifestly and in truth most wisely did: for, though every moment was precious, and the least delay seemingly cruel to a sorrowful and impatient father, yet was even this delay for his improvement and benefit: so sudden a recovery of an inveterate distemper, the obstinacy whereof had baffled all the skill and medicines of man, gave a demonstration of our Saviour's power so full of wonder, that the sight and experience of it might reasonably confirm this ruler in a belief, that nothing could be too difficult for the person who had effected it. So provident is God in all his dispensations; so gracious, even in withholding his mercies and supplies for a season, that the very delays we suffer in temporal affairs, are for our advantage. They do not only contribute to our improvement in another kind, but oftentimes make way for a more surprising and bountiful grant in the same kind; and provided we make the right use of them, wait God's good leisure with patience, consider his methods with prudence, and trust in his power and goodness with perseverance, these will not fail, in the end, to render us both happier and better men. Dean Stanhope.

2. The example of the power of faith, in the healing of the woman here recorded, may serve to produce a valuable effect upon our minds. Let this then be the first use to be made of it. Let it remind us to seek and to embrace all fit opportunities for receiving benefits and blessings at the hand of God. There are some among men who appear to think it sufficient that their needs must be known to God, although they neglect the means and opportunities which are furnished to them, in order that they may have access to the source and well-spring of all benefit and blessing. To such men the season of participation, and the hours of prayer, return from time to time, but are still suffered to pass away unheeded. There is no press through the throng, no wish to draw near, no care to signify the faith and persuasion of the heart by some act of reverence, or some device of humble piety and undissembled zeal. Let it be our first aim, in all our lives, to shun this ungrateful spirit; let us strive to put away this evil heart of unbelief; for surely if we know and believe from whence those benefits descend which bring health and life with them, we shall be glad to stoop and to extend the hand, nay, to come, in some respects unbidden, where the succour may be found, to seek relief unsolicited by friends or monitors, upon the wish and motives of our own hearts, and from the sense and recollection of our own necessities. Again, let this be one reflection to be grounded on the example of the text, in which humility was joined with faith; that it is a vain thing to dispute concerning the respective value of the Christian graces. Certain it is that none of them prevail by their own worth in fallen creatures. We have to bless God that another ground is laid for our acceptance. Certain it is too, that although there may be an order and succession which marks the Christian graces, and shews their several advances, yet each has its part and its peculiar office, and all should meet together, whilst faith forms the common bond of union. Whether they be numbered in a comprehensive sense and meaning, as effects of faith, and thus fall under one denomination and description of a lively saving faith, or whether they be added to it as comrades and attendants, faith is still the common tie, by which they are united. Above all, let the pattern in the text remind us, how earnest we should be to seek for succour, when some secret taint of sin, like a sore disease, which drains the life-blood, has preyed long upon us, and has made the cure more difficult, and the case more full of danger. Let us not delude ourselves, or think that faith requires no further effort than to have our names enlisted in the number of that company, of which faith is the common badge. The faithful heart should take a due impression from its object. In common instances of hope or expectation, they who really believe that some good thing awaits them at a certain hour, or in a known place, will not let the hour slip, or permit themselves to stray far from the place. They will be watchful, diligent, and ready for the momentary season of advantage. It is the want of this faith which keeps men in a careless indolence, or habitual neglect of time and place, when the choicest blessings might be gained by their attendance.

Let the pattern thus contemplated serve, therefore, to excite a better spirit in our minds, that we may not be as idle gazers in the throng, when the word of truth and the lessons of instruction should encourage that faith in our hearts which may bring us near to Him who condescended to assume the garb of flesh, in order that from his sacred head the gracious current of all mercies, and the grant of every blessing, might flow down even to the hem or skirt, and that the whole body might partake in that renewal, of which He is the perpetual source and everlasting author. Archdeacon Pott.

Lastly, from the miracle of raising the ruler's daughter, we may learn to give due honour to our blessed Lord. "He took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise: and her spirit came again, and she arose straightway," Luke viii. 54, 55. How could that touch, that call, be other than effectual? He, who made that hand, touched it: and He, who shall one day say, "Arise, ye dead," said now, "Maid, arise." Death cannot but obey Him, who is the Lord of life. The soul is ever equally in his hand, who is the God of spirits: it cannot but go, and come, at his command. When He says, "Maid, arise," the now dissolved spirit knows his office, his place; and instantly re-assumes that room, which by his appointment it had left. O Saviour, if thou do but bid my soul to arise from the death of sin, it cannot lie still; if thou bid my body to arise from the grave, my soul cannot but glance down from her heaven, and animate it. In vain shall my sin or my grave offer to withhold me from thee. Bp. Hall.

[z] The five and twentieth Sunday after Trinity.] The portion of Scripture from the prophet Jeremiah, containing both a prophecy and a promise of the Messias, is selected for the Epistle for this day, and ordered by the Church to be always read upon the Sunday next before Advent, to preserve the memory of his coming, and to prepare for his reception. Accordingly the Collect for the day beseeches God to stir up the hearts of his faithful people, to be ready for Him, that they plenteously bringing forth the fruit of good works, may of Him be plenteously rewarded. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel recounts Christ's miracle of the loaves, with the occasion that led to it, and the conclusion drawn from it by the people. Dr. Hole.

The Epistle of this Sunday varies from the order of the rest for a manifest reason. For this Sunday being looked upon as a kind of preparation or forerunner to Advent, as Advent is to Christmas, an Epistle was chosen, not according to the former method, but such a one as so clearly foretold the coming of our Saviour, that it was afterwards applied to Him by the common people, as appears by an instance mentioned in the Gospel for the same day; for when they saw the miracle that Jesus did, they said, "This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world." And it was probably for the sake of this text, that this portion of Scripture (which has before been appointed for the Gospel on the fourth Sunday in Lent) is here repeated; namely, because they thought this inference of the multitude a fit preparation for the approaching season of Advent. Wheatly.

[a] The use to be made of this prophecy is, 1. To confirm us in the truth of Christ's Messiahship, in whom all the titles, promises, and predictions of the Messiah do so plainly concentre and agree. 2. If Christ be a king, reigning and executing judgement and justice upon earth, then let us learn to obey and submit to Him, and to the powers set up, and ordained by Him; for "it is by Him that kings reign, and princes decree justice." He it is that gives them their commission, and it is his authority by which they act; and therefore the apostle bids us "to be subject not only for wrath, but for conscience sake;" and to "submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake," whose deputies and vicegerents they are. 3. From his bringing salvation to Israel and Judah, let us endeavour to have a share in it, and to rely upon it; for "there is no salvation in any other." 4. From his being "the LORD our righteousness," we learn where we are to seek for justification, namely, not from any inherent righteousness of our own, for that is nothing, or worse than nothing, and cannot abide the trial; but by the right-

The Gospel. St. John vi. 5.

WHEN Jesus then lift up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat? (And this he said to prove him; for he himself knew what he would do.) Philip answered him, Two hundred penyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little. One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him, There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves, and two small fishes; but what are they among so many? And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand. And Jesus took the loaves, and, when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were sat down, and likewise of the fishes, as much as they would. When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten. Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world[b].

eousness of Christ imputed to us, and by faith in Him made ours. "Abraham believed" in Christ, "and it was counted to him for righteousness;" and to them that follow the faith of Abraham, is the same righteousness imputed, as we read Rom. iv. It was the pride of the Pharisees to trust too much to their own righteousness, and to expect justification by the merit of their own works; but the poor publican, that trusted only to God's mercy, was justified far before them; the reason whereof is given, that they being "ignorant of Christ's righteousness and going about to establish their own, submitted not to the righteousness of God," and so lost all the benefit of it: Rom. x 3. And therefore St. Paul desired to be found in Christ, not having on his own righteousness, but to be clothed with his, which alone could cover the multitude of his sins. Lastly, from his being called "the LORD our righteousness," let us learn to honour and rejoice in his name, saying, with the Psalmist, "Not unto us, but to thy name be all the glory;" praying with him, "Lord, deal thou with us according to thy name;" that is, forgive us our sins, justify us by thy righteousness, as thou usest to do to them that love thy name. Dr. Hole.

Let the Scripture then at present before us be improved to the purpose our Church appears to have intended it for; by confirming our faith in the first, and awakening us into effectual preparation for the second, advent of our Lord. Both which are, by the yearly revolution of our holy offices, about to be again presented to our thoughts. And let us to that end give all possible diligence to be led by, and to work together with, that grace and good Spirit of our God, which the Collect of this day so opportunely implores, for "stirring up the wills of his faithful people; that they, plenteously bringing forth the fruit of good works, may of him be plenteously rewarded, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[b] This Scripture has occurred before in the Gospel for the fourth Sunday in Lent. The reason for repeating it here seems to have been the inference, which the multitudes drew from this miracle, at the fourteenth verse. This general expectation of the Messiah, and of his approach at that time, was particularly intimated, by giving to Him the title of "He that should come." So that the people, when declaring upon the sight of this miracle, that Jesus was "the Prophet that should come into the world," meant, that it was unquestionable evidence of his being the Messiah, John vi. 15. This meaning is yet more fully explained by their intentions to make Him a king, under which character the Messiah was foretold and expected. And, most probably, this judgment of theirs was now again set before us as a fit preparation for the now returning season of Advent.

Miracles in general are an evidence that the person working them is a teacher come from God. But our Saviour's miracles in particular proved Him to be that eminent Teacher, distinguished by the title of Messiah, "He that should come," or "the Prophet that should come into the world."

This was the Prophet foretold by Moses, in whom, every soul, that believed not, was threatened with utter destruction, Deut. xviii. 15. 19; Acts iii. 22. And, since He was to be received with a deference superior to any prophet besides, it is but reasonable to expect some marks, by attending to which men might be delivered from the danger of mistaking any prophet besides for the Messias. Again, since miracles were the proof of coming from God, common to all that brought any new revelation: and none but He came so, as that men were not to look for another; it is necessary that his miracles should have some peculiar characters, whereby the person doing these might be known to be the Messias; and distinguished from any other person, who should do "miracles," and yet was not the Messias. Now, not to insist at present upon any other considerations, there are two things observable in our blessed Saviour's miracles, which cannot be attributed to those of any others; and both of them acknowledged to be distinctions of the Messiah, from any meaner prophet. And they are,

1. The number of them. That the Messiah should excel all that ever went before Him in this respect, appears to have been the constant opinion of the Jews. Hence, some, we find, undertook to vindicate their going over to Him with that argument: "Many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?" John vii. 31. And hence our Lord seems to charge his enemies with perverseness and a peevish malice, in terms that admit their incredulity to have had some excuse, in case any teacher besides had given equal demonstration of a divine commission. "If I had not done among them (says he) the works which no other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father," John xv. 24.

2. Their quality. By which I mean not only that Christ's miracles were, in regard of the beholders, and in common estimation at least, greater, more stupendous demonstrations of a divine power, than those exhibited by any other prophet; but also, that they were such, as the doing of had many ages before been foretold, for an infallible sign to distinguish the Messiah by. Those in particular, mentioned in Matt. xi. 5, are singled out as such by Isaiah, who describes the happy state of Christ's kingdom, by benefits which were never fully and literally accomplished in any other person. For, though some of the prophets might, upon very important occasions, be enabled to work one, or a few such miracles, yet to make it a general practice in all kinds, at all places and times, was so peculiar to Jesus, as to be an incommunicable property, and incontestable argument of his being the Christ.

But there is somewhat more yet, which I would say upon this occasion: it is, that these miracles were exceedingly well chosen, to characterize the Messiah, in regard of their suitableness to the design of his coming. The law was enacted with a very terrible pomp, such as spoke it to be, what indeed it was, a dispensation of servitude and great severity. But the Gospel is a covenant of reconciliation and peace, of friendship, nay, of sonship, with God; intended not so much to strike an awe upon men's minds, as to charm and win them over with all the endearing methods of gentleness and love. And therefore the wonders, that bore testimony to its truth, were works of mercy and pity. And the kind relief they brought to the bodies, resembled the infinite compassion and tender regard which this Messiah expressed for the souls of men. The ancient prophets proved their commission by acts of divine vengeance and sore plagues, as well as by cures and corporal deliverances; but our Lord "went about" always "doing good," Acts x. 38; rescuing wretched creatures from the tyranny and possession of evil spirits; healing diseases and infirmities, but inflicting none; releasing from death, but never hastening it; insomuch that, throughout the whole course of our Saviour's ministry, we have not any one instance of his power demonstrated in the suffering or harm even of his bitterest enemies. So that if the Messiah were to be known by some particular sorts of miracles, then Jesus must of necessity be that person; because the miracles, foretold to be wrought by the Messiah, were done by Jesus, and had been done by no other person whatsoever. Dean Stanhope.

[c] If there be any more Sundays &c.] That is, if there be fewer Sundays, the overplus is to be omitted; but if there be more, the service of some of those Sundays, that were omitted after the Epiphany, are to be taken in to supply so many as are wanting: but which of those services the rubrick does not say. And for that reason there is generally a diversity in the practice; some reading, on those occasions, the services next in course to what had been used at the Epiphany before; and others, at the same time, reading the last or two last, accordingly as one or both of them are wanting. The last of these practices I think to be preferable: partly upon the account, that when there is an overplus of Sundays after Trinity one year, there is generally a pretty full number after Epiphany the next: so that if any of the services for the early Sundays after Epiphany are taken in to supply those that are wanting after Trinity, the same services will come in turn to be read again pretty soon: but the chief reason why I think the latter services should be used, is, because the service that is appointed for the last Sunday after Epiphany, is a more suitable preparation for the season that is approaching, and makes way for the service for the last Sunday after Trinity, as that does for the services appointed for Advent. Wheatly.

The following festivals are all of them fixed to set days, and so could not be conveniently placed among those we have already treated of because (they having all of them, except those from Christmas Day to Epiphany, a dependence upon Easter, which varies every year) they happen sometimes sooner, and sometimes later. So that if the moveable and immoveable had been placed together, it must of necessity have caused a confusion of the order which they ought to be placed in; for the prevention of which, the fixed holydays are placed by themselves, in the same order in which they stand in the calendar.

They are most of them set apart in commemoration of the apostles and first martyrs. Wheatly.

[d] St. Andrew's Day.] This saint's day is the first that is kept solemn; because he first came to Christ, and followed him, before any of the other apostles, St. John i. 40. He brought his brother Simon to Christ, ver. 41, 42. He it was that said, "We have found the Messiah;" and therefore his day is rightly set at the beginning of Advent for ever, to bring news of the advent, or coming of our Lord. Bp. Sparraw.

This festival is celebrated in memory of St. Andrew, who was first of all a disciple of John the Baptist; but learning from his master that he was not the Messias, and hearing him say, upon the sight of our Saviour, "Behold the Lamb of God," he left the Baptist, and became our Lord's disciple, John i. 40. And being convinced himself of our Saviour's divine mission, by conversing with Him some time at the place of his abode, he finds out his brother Simon, whom afterwards our Lord surnamed Peter, telling him he had found the Messias, John i. 41. But he did not become our Saviour's constant attendant till some time after, when "Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea, bidding them follow him, and that he would make them fishers of men," Matt. iv. 18. Henceforward he waited constantly upon our Saviour, and was instructed by his doctrine as long as He stayed upon earth. After his ascension, when the apostles distributed themselves to preach the Gospel to the different parts of the world, the province which came to St. Andrew's share was the northern part of the then known world, which was called by the name of Scythia, as Origen and Eusebius inform us. I Thess. iii. 11, 12. Ps. cxix. 60.

The Epistle. Rom. x. 9.

IF thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him, of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the Gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me. But to Israel he saith, All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people [e].

wards he came back and preached the Gospel in Epirus. The modern Greeks are more particular in relating the acts of his apostleship. They tell us, that the apostles casting lots for their mission, St. Andrew's lot lighted to be to preach in Cappadocia, Galatia, and Bithynia: after this he penetrated the coasts of the Anthropophagi, going up to both sides of the Euxine sea, even to the most solitary parts of Scythia, and the very bounds of the north; afterwards travelling backward, he preached in the country about Byzantium, [afterwards named Constantinople,] going through Thracia, Macedonia, and Achaia: in which provinces he continued a long time preaching the Gospel, and confirming it with great miracles. At last he glorified God by his martyrdom, being crucified at Ægea (where he last preached) by the proconsul of the place, a great bigot to the heathen superstition. He was only tied to the cross after his scourging, and not nailed as the usual way was, that his death might be more lingering. He shewed a wonderful resignation and alacrity under his suffering, being pleased that he should undergo the same death as his blessed Master did. Dr. Nicholls.

The instrument of his martyrdom is commonly said to have been something peculiar, in the form of the letter X, being a cross decussate, two pieces of timber crossing each other in the middle: and hence usually known by the name of St. Andrew's cross. Nelson.

The Collect for the day recommends his example to us, and founds upon it a suitable prayer. For his undaunted courage in confessing the Lord Jesus and his constancy in believing in Him, the Church hath selected the Epistle. And in the Gospel we have a particular account of his course of life before he became an apostle, of his call to the apostleship, and of his ready obedience to the call. Dr. Hole.

[e] From the Epistle of this day we may learn, 1. not only to believe in our heart, but to confess with our mouth, the Lord Jesus, in times of greatest danger and difficulty: so St. Andrew, the saint of this day, did; and so we are all commanded to do. The love of Christ should prevail above the love of this world; and that will carry us through all the troubles and tribulations we can meet with in it. The way to heaven is sometimes beset with briars and thorns; and through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God, which will for ever cease when we come thither. Let us not then be so discouraged by these difficulties, as to desert or draw back from the ways of righteousness: for, "if any draw back," saith God Almighty, "my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Yea, He is so far from taking pleasure in apostates and revolters, that He will "punish them with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Wherefore let us not be in the number of these that "draw back unto perdition:" but let us be among "them that believe to the salvation of their souls;" that so, by owning and adhering to Christ here, we may be for ever owned and accepted by Him hereafter.

2. This Epistle teaches us, to call upon the name of the Lord, and to hear his most holy word from persons duly sent and authorized to preach it to us, which are here made the necessary means of salvation. "How shall they hear," saith the apostle, "without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?" Where, as hearing is made the duty of the people, so is a commission required in the preacher: and therefore our Saviour directs us to beware of false prophets and teachers, who intrude into this sacred office, and run before they are sent. "The priest's lips preserve knowledge, and the people are to seek the law at his mouth; Mal. ii. 7: and "no man is to take this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," Heb. v. 4.

The Gospel. St. Matth. iv. 18.

JESUS, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea, (for they were fishers:) and he saith unto them, Follow me; and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him. And going on from thence he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him [f].

Lastly, we are taught by this Epistle to beware of infidelity, and "to take heed that there be not in us an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God." We see the Jews were rejected by Him for their obstinacy, in not believing in Christ; and the Gentiles were received into favour, because they accepted Him as their Saviour, and believed in Him. Let not this then be our "condemnation, that light is come into the world, and we love darkness rather than light, because our deeds are evil:" but rather let us close with the terms offered by Him in the Gospel; and then we shall receive the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls. Dr. Hole.

[f] It should be remarked, both that the call of these apostles differs from that now ordinarily vouchsafed to us; but that at the same time there is a correspondence, which still continues to affect us.

1. They were drawn off from their secular employments, and commanded so to follow their Master, as to depend upon his provision for the future: but the generality of Christians are required to "work with their own hands; to abide in their respective callings with God;" Eph. iv. 28; 1 Cor. vii. 24; in short, not to quit their professions, but to do their duty in them. And this duty is well done, by an honest industrious care for ourselves and families; when that care is not suffered to get so far within us, as to shut out those measures of living, which justice and decency, beneficence and charity, the offices of religion, and the placing of our treasure and hearts in heaven, demand from us. The world may be our concern, provided it be not our only, nor our chief concern; and the comforts of it may be esteemed good, so they be not mistaken for our supreme good. So plain it is, that the call, which our Church, in this day's service, prays God that we may be ready to obey, is vastly different from that, vouchsafed to the saint of it and his companions. Let us then look, what correspondence there is, which still continues to affect us: and for that we may give attention to the two following particulars:

First, The case of these apostles is so far our pattern, that, whatsoever is enjoined us by Christ in his word, we should immediately submit to it; whether it be any truth commanding our belief, or any precept calling for our practice: such a submission, be sure I mean, as agrees with the proper character of these apostles. Such as is the result of wisdom and deliberation, a reasonable service and a well-weighed choice; all heat and precipitance apart on the one hand, all obstinacy and prejudice on the other.

But, secondly, The case of these apostles shews, how loose the things of the present world ought to sit about us. The command of "going and selling all we have and following Christ" is what very few are put upon; but yet it is that, which every one ought to be provided for. Now the best preparation for abandoning that, which cannot be kept without guilt, is to employ it innocently and virtuously, while we have it. It is not wealth, but the inordinate love of wealth, that justifies the comparison of the camel and the needle's eye: for how small is the appearance, that a sordid wretch, who cannot find in his heart to spare a part of his superfluities to pious or charitable uses, will be brought to sacrifice the whole even of his necessaries, to God and a good conscience? "Using this world," therefore, "as not abusing it," 1 Cor. vii. 31; a constant thankful sense of all we have being lent us from above; enjoying it with modesty and meekness; dedicating a portion of it to the service of the great Proprietor; consulting the honour and dignity of his service, the decency and beauty of his house; laying out our pains and our possessions upon publick benefactions, for increase of arts and sciences and honest industry; and studying to render the talents intrusted with us the most instrumental that may be to the benefit of others; these dispositions and actions are a good step towards being well content, nay, glad, to purchase a distant treasure in heaven, with a surrender of all our substance upon earth. And, if we be so resigned, as to "take up our cross and follow Christ;" that is, to strip off every comfort, even life itself, when called to it, then have we attained to the grace of these apostles. And as oft as God by his providence orders matters so, that a man's honours, or riches, or employments, cannot be preserved with a good conscience: in a word, when any Christian is reduced to an unavoidable necessity of either sinning or suffering; then is he called by Christ; then ought he to understand the obligation to be as great, and the command as express and peremptory, as if (like this apostle) he had heard the voice of Jesus sounding in his ears, "Leave all and follow me." It is not indeed for every man to renounce an active life, and deprive the publick of a serviceable member, in a station of care and trust: nor are any man's possessions so entirely his own, but that his family and his friends have some right to share in them.

Let those then, who are desirous to imitate these apostles in leaving all and following Christ, be careful especially to imitate that first circumstance, of staying till He call them. But call them He does not, till all things are so ordered, that no relation or capacity where they stand, no duty or benefit justly expected from them, shall come under a necessity of remaining unsatisfied, by means of such a choice.

Now this being a case, which happens much seldomer than men are aware; it shall suffice for us, and for Christians in general, to use what the bounty of God hath given us conscientiously; to promote, and as we can, be liberal and rich in pious and good works; not to be guilty of any evil thing for the greatest advantage; if our dearest enjoyments cannot be preserved with innocence, to give them up cheerfully; and, how low soever reduced, to take every appointment of the divine Providence patiently and contentedly; trusting to God for the present supplies, and for a future reward. This is truly "to give ourselves up obediently to fulfil his holy commandments:" and they who thus pass "through things temporal, shall not fail in the end of things eternal: through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[g] St. Thomas the Apostle.] Called also Didymus, which, according to both the Greek and Syriack sense of his name, signifies a twin: as Thomas also doth amongst the Hebrews. It being customary with the Jews, when travelling into foreign countries, or familiarly conversing with Greeks and Romans, to assume to themselves a Greek, or a Latin name of great affinity, and sometimes of the very same signification, with that of their own country. Nelson.

This festival is kept in honour of the memory of St. Thomas, one of our Saviour's twelve disciples. His lineage and extraction is no where recorded in Scripture; though it is very probable he was by nation a Galilean, and it is certain that he was by profession a fisherman, and for some time partner with Peter, John xxi. 2. He appeared very zealous in attending on the person of his Master; for, when the rest of the disciples dissuaded Christ from going again into Judea, lest the Jews should stone Him, John xi. 8, St. Thomas declares his willingness to go and die there, v. 16. Indeed his faith was but slow in returning after our Saviour's crucifixion, so that he could not very soon credit the report of his resurrection, John xx. 25; but when our Saviour indulged him the liberty of seeing and handling his yet fresh wounds, which He received upon the cross, he made amends for all, by his noble confession, not only of the truth of Christ's resurrection, but of his divinity likewise, John xx. 28. After Christ's ascension, Thomas's apostleship was exercised in preaching the Gospel to the Parthians. Nazianzen says, that he travelled in his preaching as far as India. St. Chrysostom intimates his preaching in Ethiopia, when, speaking of St. Thomas, he says, "And Thomas has whitened the Ethiopians." Theodoret attributes the conversion of other nations to him, as of the Persians and Medes; and asserts that he preached among the Indian Brachmans. And indeed relations of travellers into India (since in the last ages commerce has been established there) do confirm, that there is a tradition among the Indians of St. Thomas's preaching among them. His martyrdom is reported to have happened in India, occasioned by the Brachmans, the Indian priests, who hated him for his preaching the Gospel, and therefore stirred up some of the rabble of soldiers to murder him. Dr. Nicholls.

Because St. Thomas's preaching was chiefly among the Gentiles, many of whom he turned from the darkness of paganism to the light of Christianity, and from the power of Satan unto God; therefore the Church hath selected the portion of Scripture appointed for this day's Epistle. Dr. Hole.

The Gospel for the day gives us a particular account of the proof afforded to St. Thomas of our Lord's resurrection. His day seems to have been placed next to St. Andrew's, not because he was the second that believed Jesus to be the Messiah, but the last that believed his resurrection: of which though he was at first the most doubtful, yet he had afterwards the greatest evidence of its truth; which the Church recommends to our meditation at this season, as a fit preparative to our Lord's nativity. For unless we believe with St. Thomas, that the same Jesus, whose birth we immediately afterwards commemorate, is the very Christ, "our Lord and our God;" neither his birth, death, nor resurrection will avail us any thing. Wheatly.

St. Andrew's Day was for the apostles' office; and this next day in order of the year, to shew the success and the exercise of their office. Bp. Overall.

[h] — for the more confirmation of the faith &c.] See John xx. 26, &c. St. Thomas's doubting occasioned our Saviour to give the most convincing proof of his being truly risen from the dead; and consequently it greatly confirmed the faith of his disciples in a crucified Saviour. Dr. Bennet.

[i] Because union gains strength, and stability is founded upon union, the apostle leads us in this Epistle to consider the unity of the church, which, he saith, is "a building so fitly framed together in Christ, as to grow unto an holy temple in the Lord:" meaning, that, as the temple of old was but one, so all believers together make up but one temple of the Lord; and that Jews and Gentiles, however distant they were formerly, are now so closely united and knit together in Christ, as to constitute one Christian church, to which they all belong, and in which they are to adore and worship God together.

Now this unity of the church consists, 1. In the unity of the head, which is Christ: for as the church is said to be "one body," Eph. iv. 4. so is Christ said to be the "one head" of that body, Col. i. 18. For as though a body may have many members, yet, being all joined to one head, they are but one body: even so the church may consist of many congregations; but, having but one head, they all make but one church, united to Christ as the head, and to one another as members, Rom. xii. 4, 5. In which the apostle tells them when Jesus came. The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God. Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his Name[k].

us, there is but one Lord to direct and govern it, Eph. iv. 5.

Secondly, the unity of the church consists likewise in the unity of the Spirit: "There is one body and one Spirit:" for, as one body hath but one soul to quicken and enliven it, so the church is animated and actuated by one Spirit, even the Holy Spirit of God, who is in it by his presence, over it by his power, and through it by his providence: so we read, "By one Spirit are we all received into one body, and made all to drink of one Spirit," 1 Cor. xii. 13.

Thirdly, the church is one by an unity of faith: there being but "one faith," or "form of sound words," professed in it, Eph. iv. 5: such, for instance, is the Apostles' Creed, which contains all the fundamental points of doctrine necessary to be believed in order to salvation, and is that one "faith once delivered unto the saints," of which we are required to "hold fast the profession without wavering," Jude, ver. 3; Heb. x. 23. And when all the members of the church consent and agree in this harmony of doctrine, then are they one by an unity of faith.

Fourthly, the church is one by the unity of the sacraments, which are the bond or ligaments to hold all the parts of it together: "There is one baptism," saith the apostle, Eph. iv. 5; "by which we are all baptized into one body; whether we be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, male or female, we are all one in Christ Jesus," Gal. iii. 28. And, "we being many are one bread and one body, eating the same spiritual meat, and drinking the same spiritual drink." By which we are united together, in one fellowship and communion.

And lastly, the church is here said to be one, by the unity of the foundation; being "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." For, as a house built upon one foundation, though it may have many rooms and apartments, is but one house; so the church, being built upon one foundation, though it may have many congregations for the convenience of worship and discipline, is yet but one church: in which "we also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit:" that is, being thus united in Christ, we are built up as so many temples of God, in which He is pleased to reside as an inhabitant, and to communicate the influences of his grace and presence by his Holy Spirit.

From this unity of the church let us learn to unite in its worship and service, and with one mind and one mouth glorify God in it together. Christ having given us "first apostles, then prophets, then pastors and teachers, for the edifying of his church in love," and the building of us up in our most holy faith; let us all join and build upon that foundation, still "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, which God grant for his Son's sake. Amen. Dr. Hole.

[k] Much improvement may result from the Gospel of this day, if we endeavour to fix upon our minds reflections like those that follow.

1. That men would observe the immediate occasion of St. Thomas's falling into this unbelief; which was his absence from the rest of the apostles, when Christ appeared to them. It seems most likely, that those assemblies, held secretly for fear of the Jews, were always employed to religious purposes. And, from the advantage which Thomas lost by not being there, we may and ought to take warning against the neglect of God's publick worship. It is in his own house, and in the congregations of the faithful, that Christ exhibits Himself. There we are to expect the enlightening of our minds, the purifying of our actions, the convictions of his truth, the assistance of his grace; for giving us a right understanding of our duty, and for disposing us to practise it, when we do understand it. These are the means of growing in goodness, which God hath ordained; and it is usual and just with Him, to suffer their virtues to fade, and wither, and perish, who will not come hither for strength and refreshment.

2. From the instance before us I would briefly take notice, what benefits and uses are to be made of the faults and failings of eminent persons recorded in Scripture. When these apostles do so freely and fully transmit to all future ages such blots as the denial of St. Peter, the unbelief of St. Thomas, the fears, and cowardice, and heaviness of all their brethren; this may satisfy us that they were men of integrity; that it was not their study to magnify themselves, or to impose upon the world, or promote any thing but the very truth. For a private design would have tempted them to disguise, and excuse, and conceal, any blemishes in their own characters. And therefore this frankness is a great motive to our belief of their writings; since them, who would not dissemble, when their own credit lay at stake, we have no reason to suppose false in other matters.

Again, these spots in the very saints themselves teach us, that no mere man whatsoever is in all points so perfect, that we should rest upon his example, or blindly make his behaviour the rule of our own: that

The Conversion of Saint Paul[1].

The Collect.

O God, who, through the preaching of the blessed Apostle Saint Paul hast caused the light of the Gospel to shine throughout the world: Grant, we beseech thee, that we having his wonderful conversion in remembrance, may shew

Acts ix. 15. Rom. xv. 19, &c. 2 Cor. x. 14. 16, iv. 4. Col. i. 6. 1 Thess. i 8, 9.

the law of God is the only true standard of our actions: and that even the best of men, when weighed in this balance, have been found wanting. Consequently, that this consideration should make us humble and meek; especially, since most of us have so unequal a mixture, so many more and greater vices, for an allay and embasement to our so many less or fewer virtues. It is an argument of great vanity for any man to say, he would not have fallen with David, or have forsworn Christ with St. Peter, or the like: alas! we are but little acquainted with their circumstances, the violence of their temptations, or the infirmities of human nature in general: and, least of all, with our own; who perhaps fall, if not so deep, or so notoriously, yet more frequently, and upon less provocations to sin; and whose sins, though they be more, yet our relentings for them are slighter, and our repentance infinitely less exemplary, than theirs.

And, therefore, thirdly, this should inspire great tenderness and caution, how we presume to censure and judge others. But, above all, it should hinder our taking upon us to determine any thing concerning their spiritual and future state, upon the account of any very ill action, which appears to us, or which in reality hath been done by them. For, if prophets, if apostles, if other shining lights, who are now so many "suns in the kingdom of heaven," have had these misfortunes; and yet, by the grace of God, and their own better consideration, have recovered their station, and come forth, like the morning light, with double lustre, after darkness and error: who are we, that we should set bounds to the grace of God, or despair even of the worst of our brethren?

Lastly, let us observe the success of the means used by our Lord, for removing Thomas's unbelief, expressed in the 28th verse. And "Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord, and my God." I call this the noblest confession; because the catholick interpreters of Scripture have understood by it, that St. Thomas did not only recognize Jesus for the Messiah, the very same Lord, to whom he had been a servant and companion during the space of his ministry; but that he moreover owned his divine nature, and drew the consequence to himself, which St. Paul did afterwards to the Romans, "That the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, and the power he" exerted in it, "did" abundantly "declare him to be the very Son of God," Rom. i. 4. Accordingly, the original here is in terms so strict, and with such an addition of the Greek article, as the very hereticks and enemies of the truth confess to be a character of the word God being taken in its proper and natural sense, and intended of the "only true God." And indeed, when they go about to make these words a note of admiration only, they do not leave them a sufficient force for expressing Thomas's conviction. For expressions of wonder, though they properly speak astonishment and surprise, yet they do not always imply belief; and may therefore import the strangeness, without inferring the truth, of the thing. But our Lord (you see in the next words) accepts this, as a full and sufficient declaration of assent; "Thomas, because thou hast seen, thou hast believed." And to make it thus, we must allow that paraphrase, which some ancient translations supply it with, by reading, "Thou art my Lord, thou art my God:" which is but in effect to say, what our Saviour had before pronounced concerning Himself; that the truth of those declarations was now apparent, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself; I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again," John ii. 19; x. 18. Now no mere man can do these things; none but God can have that power. So mighty, so sudden a change do we find in this apostle; that the person, whom so lately he could not be prevailed upon to think otherwise of, than as a dead man; lost to all hopes, all possibility of returning; he now adores and admires, as the almighty and the everliving God.

From hence let every disciple of Jesus learn, with all becoming reverence, to contemplate this resurrection of our Lord, and to adore the glories and the wonders of Him and it. Let us take all possible care to confirm ourselves in the assured belief of this, and of all other mysteries of the Christian faith. Let us observe, and be thankful for, the wisdom and goodness of our God and Saviour, who converted the failings of an eminent servant, to such excellent advantage; that not only his own mind was better established from his own doubts; but that gainsayers should be more effectually put to silence by them, and out of his weakness all succeeding believers should be made strong. Let us again, with St. Thomas, be ready to lay aside all our scruples upon sufficient conviction; and zealous to make some amends by our after-acts, for any offence, which those scruples might have given, while we entertained them. Above all, let us beg the grace and assistance of the Holy Spirit of God, to keep us always in that sincere, teachable, meek disposition of soul: and likewise in that due regard and observance of all virtues and good works, agreeable to the principles we profess, "that our faith in his sight may never be reproved." But that, from a perfect and active belief in his Son Jesus Christ here, we may be at length received to the sight and ravishing enjoyment of Him; and be, and live, and reign, with our dear Lord for ever in the heavens. Which God of his infinite mercy grant, for the same Jesus Christ's sake. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[1] The Conversion of St. Paul.] Whereas other saints' martyrdoms, or at least the days of their death, are celebrated by the holy church; St. Paul's conversion is made the holy-day, for these reasons: 1. For the example of it: that no sinner, how great soever, might hereafter despair of pardon, seeing Saul a grievous persecutor made St. Paul: "For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them that should hereafter believe," 1 Tim. i. 16. 2. For the joy, which the church had at his conversion. 3. For the miracle wrought at his conversion. Bp. Sparrow.

Probably also, because as it was wonderful in itself, and a miraculous effect of the powerful grace of God; so was it highly beneficial to the church of Christ: for, whilst other apostles had their particular provinces, he had "the care of all the churches," and by his indefatigable labours contributed very much to the propagation of the Gospel throughout the world. Nelson.

For the Epistle. Acts ix. 1.

AND Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem. And, as he journeyed, he came near Damascus, and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven. And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. And Saul arose from the earth, and when his eyes were opened he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink. And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias, and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem; and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy Name. But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my Name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel:

of Cilicia, a place remarkable for trade, and where learning and good arts likewise eminently flourished. His being born here did not entitle him to the privileges of a Roman citizen, as some have thought; for it does not appear that Tarsus was a Roman colony or Municipium; it is most probable, that one of St. Paul's ancestors had the right of the Roman city given him in the civil wars, either between Cæsar and Pompey, or Augustus and Anthony; at which time the assistants, that had done the victor any considerable service, were rewarded with this privilege. Having laid a foundation of human literature at Tarsus, he travelled to Jerusalem, to study the Jewish divinity under Gamaliel, one of the most celebrated rabbies of that age. He joined himself to the sect of the Pharisees, a very rigid order among the Jews at that time, remarkable for their zeal, and for their tenaciousness of every the least punctilio of the Mosaical ceremonies. This occasioned him to persecute the Christians, whom he thought to be heretical violators thereof, with a furious severity; and to run into the mad proceedings of those cruel zealots who took away St. Stephen's life. Being converted to Christianity after a very miraculous manner, he made amends for his former errors, by the wonderful diligence of his labours in preaching the Gospel; for he propagated the Gospel of Christ throughout all Greece and the Lesser Asia, in Italy, Spain, and Illyricum, establishing Christian churches in the principal towns thereof. Ancient writers affirm, that he suffered martyrdom at Rome under Nero, at the same time with St. Peter. The most probable reason assigned for his condemnation was, his infecting several Roman ladies with a foreign religion, as the Romans used to call Christianity, and particularly some ladies with whom Nero had had formerly an unlawful familiarity; but who, after their conversion to Christianity, refused his embraces; which story is not improbable, since Suetonius, Tacitus, and Dio, and indeed all that write of Nero, speak of his debauching numbers of ladies, as well of chief quality as others. Our apostle, for this pretended crime, being condemned to death, he, being a Roman citizen, could not be crucified by the Roman laws, as his colleague St. Peter was, and was therefore beheaded by a great sword, which gave the occasion for his being pictured with such a sword in his hand. Other writers give an account of his personage, from the pictures I suppose they had seen of him. For Eusebius writes, that the pictures of St. Peter and St. Paul were kept by some of the Christians in his time. St. Chrysostom says that he was of a low stature, but three cubits high. And Nicephorus describes him to be of a little body, &c. Dr. Nicholls.

The Epistle for this day gives an account of the time, manner, and other circumstances of St. Paul's conversion: shewing what he was before, and what he was after it.

The Gospel is selected for the day, because St. Paul was one of those, that forsook all worldly interests and relations, to attend the work and business of his Saviour. And though he was not one of the twelve apostles, yet had he the honour of being an apostle in extraordinary, and of being immediately called in a way peculiar to himself, as is shewn in the Epistle of the day. Dr. Hole.

for I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my Name's sake. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and, putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, (even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest,) hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized. And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this Name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ[m].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xix. 27.

PETER answered and said unto Jesus, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit ever-

[m] The example before us furnishes a good rule, for judging of our own, or of other people's zeal. It shews the possibility of being under strong prepossessions, exceeding vehement for grievous errors, furiously bent against those of a different judgment, and yet, that all this may be consistent with honesty and a good meaning. And, ought we not to learn from hence to enlarge our charity, by forbearing to censure even our adversaries, nay, even our persecutors, as wretches lost to all integrity and conscience? Such sentences are too often barbarous and unjust, and, in St. Paul's case, had been manifestly false. And doubtless we should do more real service to God and our cause, by believing the best, hoping almost against hope, pitying the ignorance, patiently contending with the prejudices, and praying for the pardon and amendment of the faults and furious oppositions, of contradictors and persecutors; than by rashly impleading their integrity, pronouncing their intentions wicked, and accounting them all to be the children of hypocrisy and hell.

2. But the same example, which persuades such tenderness in judging others, is a very good argument for being exceeding nice and severe in judging ourselves. Men are too frequently imposed upon by specious appearances of zeal; and think thereby not only to excuse, but even to sanctify, many unwarrantable actions. Whereas, would they bring these to St. Paul's standard, the difference would soon be found between that, which is really a zeal for God, and that, which affects to pass for it. For, if men will not be brought fairly to consider; if they stick pertinaciously to their point, and refuse to submit to all methods of conviction; if, upon conviction, they do not effectually disengage themselves from such prepossessions, as can no longer be justified; if the same affectionate and vigorous desires do not appear, in favour of truth lately discovered, as were used to exert themselves for beloved and inveterate errors: these persons have none of those marks to shew, which proved St. Paul's sincerity; and mistaken zeal is too tender a name in such cases. And it ought to be remembered that one, in much better circumstances, who had no partiality or indirect ends to be suspected of, did yet style himself "blasphemer, injurious, and chief of sinners," for even those very things, which he did ignorantly, and "verily thought" himself "obliged to do, against the name of Jesus of Nazareth."

Lastly, Let us admire and extol the wisdom of Almighty God, for the mighty advantages which the Christian religion received by the conversion of this apostle in particular. For, (as an ancient father well represents it,) "Who was Paul? Once a persecutor, but now a preacher, of Christ. And what made this change? Was he bought over? Alas! there was no body disposed to bribe him to it. No! it was because he saw Christ, was convinced, and worshipped, and was caught up into heaven. He took his journey to Damascus, that he might persecute: and after three days did there commence preacher. And with what power! others, in matters concerning themselves, produce the testimony of their own friends and retainers; but I produce a witness, who was once an enemy. And can any doubt stick with you after this? The evidence of Peter and John are of great weight, it is true; but a man, disposed to be jealous, might object that these were companions and servants. But can any one question the truth of his evidence, who first was a professed enemy to Jesus, and afterwards died for Him? I have, for my part, always admired the wise management of the Holy Ghost on this occasion, in ordering that the Epistles written by others should be few, but Paul's, the late persecutor, no less than fourteen. Not that Peter or John were inferior to Paul; but because his were more likely to persuade." And accordingly we read, "All that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this Name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But now he preacheth the faith which once he destroyed. And they glorified God in him." To the same God let us also give glory, for ever and ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[n] That "many who are first shall be last," ought to be a warning to all those, who have had the happiness of instruction, imbibed good principles early, and made proportionable improvements; that they do not depart from the way in which they have been trained, nor suffer their latter end to be worse than their beginning. It should also prove an effectual prevention to all those intemperate overvaluings of our own virtue: than which no other temptations are more likely to destroy it, by betraying us into spiritual pride and security. How well aware was our great apostle of this rock? How careful to admonish others of the danger of splitting upon it? The vain confidences of his converted Gentiles at Rome he takes down, with "Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God spared not the natural branches," the Jews, "take heed lest he also spare not thee," Rom. xi. 20, 21. The falsely presumed indefectibility of his Corinthians he confutes, from the example of God's dealings under the Old Testament; and leaves this advice upon those who depend too far upon the privileges of the New, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall," 1 Cor. x. 12. His Philippians he instructs, that the "salvation" of a Christian "is to be wrought out with fear and trembling," Phil. ii. 12; and therefore declares, that he "counts not himself to have apprehended already," but that, in order to it, he "kept on continually pressing forward to the mark," Phil. iii. 13, 14; as being duly sensible, that such only, who "continue faithful unto the end," can have reasonable hopes of receiving "a crown of life," Rev. ii. 10.

2. As our Lord's declaration, that "the last shall be first," is a gracious intimation of mercy on God's part; so is the example insisted on from it a good direction, what is fit and necessary on our part, in order to such advancement. That very large abatements in the account of past faults, and liberal allowances for passions, and infirmities, and mistakes, are made by our great Master and Judge, men are forward enough to infer, from the example of St. Paul; and they so far reason justly. But then they would do well to proceed a step or two farther; and to observe, from the same example, to what sort of persons such marvellous grace is extended: that they are such, as he was. They that bewail and forsake their past faults; that see, and are humbled with a sense of them; that conflict with, and, to the best of their ability, subdue their passions and infirmities. Hence again we learn, that late penitents, when truly and effectually such, will double their diligence, fetch up the time they have lost, and by an uncommon piety and zeal testify the sincerity of their conversion, and the thankful esteem they have of it. In a word, that nothing will be more at the heart of such men, than making reparation to the world for any past offences given; and not only wiping out the scandal of a bad example, but exerting all the power and lustre of an eminently good one.

To all which purposes I know not what better expedient to advise, than a devout compliance with the Church in the solemnity of this day; by endeavouring to make the apostle of it more and more our pattern, from lively remembrances of his conversion and following life. Both these are most deservedly commemorated by the Church in general, because an invaluable blessing to all the Christian world: but more particularly so to us of this nation, whose once blind and barbarous region was most probably enlightened by his presence and ministry in Britain.

Let us therefore beg most earnestly of God to give "us his grace," and labour (as the Church hath taught us to pray) "that we may shew forth our thankfulness, by following the holy doctrines which he taught." So shall we at last obtain a "crown of righteousness laid up," not for him only, but for all them, who, like him, serve the Lord Jesus, "and love his appearing," 2 Tim. iv. 8.

To whom with the Father, and Holy Spirit, three Persons and one God, be all honour and glory for evermore. Dean Stanhope.

[o] The Presentation of Christ in the Temple.] Whereas some churches keep four holy-days in memory of the blessed Virgin, namely, the Nativity, the Annunciation, the Purification, and the Assumption; our Church keeps only two, namely, the Annunciation and Purification; which though they may have some relation to the blessed Virgin, do yet more peculiarly belong to our Saviour. The Annunciation hath a peculiar respect to his Incarnation, who, being the eternal Word of the Father, was at this time made flesh: the Purification is principally observed in memory of our Lord's being made manifest in the flesh, when He was presented in the temple.

On the Purification the ancient Christians used abundance of lights both in their churches and processions, in remembrance (as it is supposed) of our blessed Saviour's being this day declared by old Simeon, to be "a light to lighten the Gentiles," &c.; which portion of Scripture is for that reason appointed for the Gospel for the day. A practice continued with us in England till the second year of King Edward VI. when Bishop Cranmer forbad it by order of the Privy Council. And from this custom I suppose it was, that this day first took the name of Candlemas-day. Wheatly.

This holiday is kept in memory of the presentation of Christ in the temple. For it was a precept, "That every male that openeth the womb," (that is, every first-born,) "should be holy unto the Lord," Exod. xiii. 2. 15. The first-born of the cattle were to be reserved for sacrifices for God: and the first-born children were to attend in the service of the temple or tabernacle; or were to be redeemed by an offering of money or sacrifice, Numb. xviii. 16. And besides, the mother was whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple; even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgement, and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts[p].

obliged to separate herself forty days from the congregation after the birth of a male, and eighty after the birth of a female; and then was to present a lamb, if in good circumstances, or a couple of pigeons, if she was poor, Lev. xii. This was exactly performed after the birth of our Saviour, who came to "fulfil all righteousness," and was willing in all particulars of his life that a just obedience should be paid to the publick ordinances of his religion and country.

This feast is of considerable antiquity in the Church; those, that place the beginning of it the latest, say it commenced in Justinian's time, about the year 540, upon the occasion of some publick calamities, as a great earthquake, showers of blood, and some malignant distempers following thereupon. The Greeks call this feast by the name of Hypante, which signifies the Meeting, because Simeon and Anna met our Lord in the temple this day. But I take this feast to be much older than Justinian's time; for St. Chrysostom mentions it as a feast celebrated in the Church in his days. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for this day puts us in mind of the only-begotten Son of God being presented in the temple in the substance of our flesh: and thence teaches us to pray, that we may be presented unto God with pure and clean hearts, by the same Jesus Christ our Lord: which presentation of the Son being accompanied with the purification of the mother, and both for our sake, they have been thought fit to be kept in remembrance; and, to that end, to be yearly commemorated in the publick devotions of the Church. Accordingly the Epistle for this day speaks of it in the prophecy; and the Gospel, in the event or accomplishment of it. Dr. Hole.

[p] The prophecy, contained in this portion of Scripture, partly received its accomplishment in the event commemorated on this day. A consideration of it may suggest us the following useful lessons:

1. From Christ's coming to the temple, to fulfil the prophecies, let us come to it, to fulfil his precepts: so the Psalmist resolved, "We will go into his tabernacle, and worship towards his holy temple." And elsewhere, "I was glad when they said unto me, We will go into the house of the Lord: our feet shall stand in thy gates, O Jerusalem." This was the practice likewise of the holy apostles, who "were continually in the temple, blessing and praising God," Luke xxiv. 53. This God requires and expects of us, that we should meet together in his house, to praise Him: and then He hath promised to meet us there, to bless us; and to make us joyful in his house of prayer. Let us not then "forsake the assembling of ourselves together in God's house, as the manner of some is:" but let us exhort and call upon one another daily to resort to it; and the rather, because the day of our final account is approaching.

Secondly, from Christ's being presented in the temple, and thereby honouring it with his presence, let us learn to honour and esteem it holy, by keeping it from all profanation: He having taken possession of his Father's house, and thereby dedicated and devoted it to his service, we may not desecrate or pollute it, by putting it to any other common uses. And therefore we read, that, at our Saviour's entrance into Jerusalem, He went into the temple, where He had been formerly presented; and finding his Father's house made a market, or place of merchandise, He was highly incensed at the profanation, insomuch that, as St. John tells us, He made a scourge Himself, and with great indignation whipt the buyers and sellers out of it, saying, "It is written, My Father's house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves:" hereby fulfilling that prophecy of Him, "The zeal of thine house hath even eaten me up." It was God Almighty's own command, that we should "hallow his sabbath, and reverence his sanctuary," Lev. xix. 30. And it is our Saviour's precept, that we should keep it holy; by setting it apart from vulgar uses, and consecrating it to divine service. And therefore, we should take care, decently to repair and beautify the temple, and after that diligently to repair and resort to it.

Thirdly, from Christ's coming as a refiner's fire, to purify the sons of Levi, and, as fullers' soap, to wash and cleanse the Church, we should learn all purity both in life and doctrine. "Blessed are the pure in heart," saith our Saviour, "for they shall see God," Matt. v. 8. And "without" purity and "holiness no man shall see the Lord:" for "he that hath this hope," saith St. John, "purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Into heaven no defilement enters: nor can any unclean thing inhabit those pure and unpolluted regions. Our Saviour's coming was to free us from the defilement, as well as the power of sin; and thereby to fit and qualify us for the beatifick vision: for otherwise we are neither prepared for that, nor that for us. And therefore, "having these promises, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

Lastly, from Christ's coming to sit in judgment, and to be a swift witness against several sorts of sinners, let us learn to prepare for his coming, and to escape the doom by true repentance: turning from all sin unto God; and especially from those mentioned in the Epistle for this day: as, from all sorcery and witchcraft; from adultery and uncleanness; from perjury and false swearing; from all sorts and degrees of oppression: in a word, let us turn from all sin and wickedness; and then God will in much mercy turn to us, and stand by

The Gospel. St. Luke ii. 22.

AND when the days of her purification, according to the Law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; (as it is written in the Law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb, shall be called holy to the Lord;) and to offer a sacrifice, according to that which is said in the Law of the Lord, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons. And behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him. And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against; (yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also;) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. And there was one Anna a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser; she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity; and she was a widow of about fourscore and four years; which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day. And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem. And when they had performed all things according to the Law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee to their own city Nazareth. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him[q].

us in the needful time of trouble, for his Son Jesus Christ's sake, our Lord. Dr. Hole.

[q] From this day's festival we may learn,

1. To bless God for the confirmation of our faith in the holy Jesus, given us by these two witnesses, who were blessed with a sight of Him: as also for the manifestation, thereby made to us, of the consolation of Israel. For, though we now cannot see our Saviour with our bodily eyes, as they did; yet we may behold Him with the eye of faith, as He is revealed to us in holy Scripture, where our Saviour hath pronounced those "blessed, who have not seen, and yet have believed."

2. From the purification of the Virgin mother, we may learn to purify ourselves both in body and soul; and to practise that holiness and purity, together with that obedience, which our Saviour and the blessed Virgin have taught us by their own example; and from them to be meek and lowly in heart. Dr. Hole.

3. From her presentation of the holy child Jesus to God, from whom and for whose glory she had received Him, we may learn to return to God whatsoever we have received from Him: and, if we unite our offerings and devotion to this holy present, we shall by the merit and excellency of this oblation exhibit to God an offertory, in which He cannot but delight for the combination's sake, and society of his holy Son. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

4. Let us learn from the good old Simeon, never to think of dying in peace, till we have embraced our Saviour with our understandings and affections, and heartily believe and practise what He hath revealed and taught us. Then will He shortly embrace us with the arms of his mercy, in order to bring us to the blessed vision of Himself in the highest heavens. Dr. Hole.

Lastly, from the story of the aged prophetess Anna, who had lived long in chaste widowhood, in the service of the temple, in the continual offices of devotion; and who was now rewarded by God with a great benediction, and an earnest of a greater; we may learn that the returns of prayer and the blessings of piety are certain; and though not dispensed according to the expectances of our narrow conceptions, yet shall they so come, at such times and in such measures, as shall crown the piety, and satisfy the desires, and reward the expectation. It was in the temple, the same place where she had for many years poured out her heart to God, that God poured forth his heart to her, sent his Son from his bosom, and there she received his benediction. Indeed in such places God does most particularly exhibit Himself, and blessing goes along with Him wherever He goes. In holy places God hath put his holy name; and to holy persons God doth oftentimes manifest the interior and more secret glories of his holiness; provided they come thither, as Simeon and Anna did, not with designs of vanity, or curiosity, or sensuality, but by the motions of that holy Spirit of God. Bp. Jeremy Taylor.

[r] St. Matthias's Day.] The Scripture takes notice of choose thy faithful servant Matthias to be of the number of the twelve Apostles; Grant that thy Church, being alway preserved from false Apostles, may be ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Acts i. 23—26. 2 Cor. xi. 13—15. 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2. 1 Cor. iv. 2.

For the Epistle. Acts i. 15.

IN those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty,) Men and brethren, this Scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus: for he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem, insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood. For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein; and, His bishoprick let another take. Wherefore, of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen; that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbered with the eleven Apostles[s].

St. Matthias, in that place and upon that occasion only, which comes into the service of the day. He is, both by Eusebius and St. Jerome, affirmed to have been one of the seventy disciples. The province assigned him is said by the latter to have been one of the Ethiopias. The rivers, mentioned in that account, incline Dr. Cave to think it should be Cappadocia. He was there murdered by the pagans. In what manner it is uncertain; but an hymn, cited by Dr. Cave out of the Greek offices, seems, as from a received opinion, to speak him crucified. Dean Stanhope.

The Collect and Epistle for this day acquaint us, first, with a vacancy in the apostolate by the untimely death of Judas: secondly, with the filling up of that vacancy by the election of St. Matthias, together with the manner and circumstances, that attended both.

The Gospel appears to have been chosen upon the presumption, that Matthias, like some others of the apostles, was a person of mean birth and obscure parentage; and was instructed in the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and chosen for an apostle, when persons of greater birth and parts had not the knowledge of those divine truths, nor were admitted to so high and sacred a function. Dr. Hole.

[s] St. Peter's discourse in this passage concerning the wretched man, into whose place this day's apostle was chosen, contains some things calculated to be very profitable if duly noticed.

1. First, then, It is observable, that St. Peter mentioning the fact for which Judas perished, does it in these terms: "Judas, who was guide to them that took Jesus." We cannot reasonably imagine this apostle, or any to whom he spoke, to be wanting in a just indignation at the treachery of this fallen brother; and yet the most villainous of all crimes could not have been expressed in softer words. Now my design is, by this remark, to give check to that liberty men are apt, and think themselves abundantly warranted, to take, in speaking of ill actions and ill men, with the most aggravating terms of infamy and reproach. There are, I confess, some occasions, which even require this sort of treatment from us. But, except in particular circumstances, and for promoting very good ends, it argues more of a charitable and truly Christian spirit, to abate of our fierceness, even against those practices, of which we do well to conceive the utmost abhorrence. For the virulent language so often poured out upon profligate and wicked people, is many times the effect, not of zeal, but ill-nature. But how barbarous and wicked a pleasure is it to upbraid, expose, and insult over, the faults of our brethren, which we ought to pity, and be sorry for, even then, when we ought to condemn and detest them?

2. To this purpose we shall do well to attend to a second particular, very considerable in St. Peter's management of this subject: which is, referring the audience to an ancient prophecy, foretelling that crime of Judas many hundred years before. Thus it appeared, that in the whole matter there was a secret over-ruling Providence, without whose knowledge and permission none of those things are done, which in themselves carry so great a degree of guilt and horror, that one would stand amazed, how even the most abandoned of men should ever be capable of committing them. Such events they, who think too superficially, have frequently made objections against the being and providence of God. But the apostle here hath taught us to penetrate deeper into, and pronounce more justly of, them. He hath shewed the reflections properly resulting from thence to be, that it is reasonable to endure patiently the ill effects of that astonishing wickedness, which God sees fit to permit: to contemplate his wisdom and long-suffering in them all; and not give way to impatience or irreligious suggestions,

The Gospel. St. Matth. xi. 25.

AT that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light[t].

upon account of any injuries or uneasiness to ourselves, from practices which He, who knew, did yet not prevent or interpose against, though they were manifest affronts to his honour, and outrageous violations of his laws. In short, we should satisfy ourselves, that He, who always orders that which is best, and can at pleasure put an effectual stop to the most daring and potent offenders, forbears to do so, for no other reason, than because He knows it to be better, though we short-sighted mortals cannot tell why, that their impieties should not be more restrained.

3. But then those offenders should by all means observe, thirdly, that St. Peter, together with the crime, does also relate the punishment, of Judas; as a thing no less foreknown and foretold. And the natural consequence of this would be that wickedness, so connived at and foreseen, does involve the actors in no less degree of guilt, for bringing about such events, and effecting such wise counsels of Providence, as are produced from thence: for God, as a wise man expresses it, hath left men in the hand of their own counsel, Ecclus. xv. 14. And, although the divine omniscience do perfectly understand all their doings, and all their thoughts, long before: yet are those thoughts and doings still their own. He does not determine their wills by any physical or forcible restraint, but He hath given them great variety of moral restraints; the light of reason, the guidance of revelation, the power of conscience: and by these He expects men should govern themselves. If they do not, He convinces them, that, though the fact be theirs, the consequences are his: and therefore He frequently exerts Himself in turning to his own glory, and the good of the world, the malice and mischievous designs of base and villainous wretches. Thus He did in the very case before us. But still God punishes men, not according to events, but intentions; and considers, as a judge, the mischief they actually did, or designed; without any regard to the benefit He turned it to, which it was not any part of their meaning to promote. Dean Stanhope.

[t] The comment on the Epistle for this day having been occupied upon the case of Judas, that on the Gospel, instead of fixing on the particular passage there contained, may be made useful by reverting to the case of Matthias, who was chosen into the place of that wretched man.

The manner of his appointment was remarkable, and may be thus explained. The heads of the tribes of Israel after the flesh, according to the number of whom the twelve apostles seem to have been chosen, were first named by God Himself: the princes of the Israel after the Spirit were chosen by Christ. And the person, here chosen, was of divine designation. For the manner of the proceeding is such, as manifestly refers the issue to God's determination. The nominations of this kind were afterwards made by the apostles themselves, because then their act was properly God's act; and the choice of fit persons to serve in so high a station, was a matter of so great importance to the church, that no doubt can be made, but his very particular assistance was present with them in it. But at this time the Holy Ghost was not yet given; therefore in a case, which was singular, they had recourse to a method, which had often been practised, and was always believed to denote the special appointment of God.

The deciding of things contingent by lots was a practice instituted by God's own command. Thus the two goats, on the solemn day of atonement, were separated; the one for slaughter to be sacrificed, the other for escape into the wilderness, Lev. xvi. 7, 8. Thus the land of Canaan was divided, and a portion of it assigned to each tribe, Numb. xxxiii. 54. Thus the cities of the Levites were set apart, out of the inheritance assigned to the other tribes, Josh. xiii. 2—6; xxi. 8. Thus it was determined who should revenge the wickedness of Benjamin, by attacking Gibeah, Judges xx. 9. Thus the services of the priests in the sanctuary were distributed, 1 Chron. xxiv. 5, &c.; Luke i. 5. 9. All which were so constantly believed to be of God's immediate assignation, as to give occasion for that aphorism of Solomon, "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord," Prov. xvi. 33.

From hence, as a matter universally acknowledged, among persons conversant in the religion and customs of the Jews, it appears, that putting the choice of an apostle upon this issue was a very solemn way of referring it to the decision of God Himself, which is yet farther evidenced by that solemn invocation of Him upon this so very important exigence. Whereby these great patterns of piety have set us an example, which the wisdom of our excellent Church hath directed us all to follow, by begging, in her Collect for this festival, that we and all Christians, "being always preserved from false apostles, may be ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[u] The Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.] The great business of this day's festival is to celebrate the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary: by which is meant the declaration made to her by an angel, of her being the mother of the promised Messiah, togethe incarnation of thy Son Jesus Christ by the message of an angel, so by his cross and passion we may be brought unto the glory of his resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ther with the glory, greatness, and everlasting duration of his kingdom. Which things are this day commemorated, both in the prophecy of them in the Old Testament, and in the accomplishment of them in the New; the former being contained in the Epistle, the latter in the Gospel for the day. Dr. Hole.

This day is appointed by the Church in memory of the blessed Virgin, and particularly of the message of the angel to her, concerning her being to bring forth the Messias our blessed Lord. This holy person was a young woman of the tribe of Judah, who derived her pedigree from King David, the branches of that royal family, after many descents, being reduced to a low degree of fortune. Some ancient writers of the Church do write, that her father's name was Joachim, and her mother's Anna. Some time after she was espoused to Joseph, it was declared to her by an angel, that she should bring forth one, who should be the Son of God, and who should have an everlasting kingdom, Luke i. 32; and that this extraordinary offspring, which should be born of her body, should not be produced after the usual way of human conceptions, but by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost, Luke i. 35. The holy Scriptures record of her, that she was a person eminent for devotion and holy contemplation; by observing and remarking the extraordinary occurrences concerning her Son, and "pondering them in her heart," Luke ii. 19; by "keeping his wise sayings in her heart," Luke ii. 51; by frequently following after Him to hear his divine sermons, Matt. xii. 46; Mark iii. 32; Luke viii. 20; and lastly, by constantly joining herself in the publick devotion with the apostles, Acts i. 14. There was a tradition in the church that she travelled with St. John to Ephesus; for the fathers of that council, in an Epistle of theirs to the clergy of Constantinople, mentioning Ephesus, say, "In which John the Divine, and the Deiparous Virgin Mary some time dwelt." There are various opinions about the time of her death, some placing it in the fifty-eighth year of her age, some in the seventy-second, but most in the sixty-second or third year of her age, and in the year of Christ 48. Some writers, both in the Greek and Latin church, tell a strange story about her assumption into heaven, and that with great variety in their relations; some affirming her to be conveyed thither alive, like Enoch and Elias; others, that, after her death, she arose again, and was carried triumphantly into heaven. But as all the legendary history of this translation is taken out of apocryphal books, it deserves not much credit: and, though the church of Rome has adopted this story of the assumption of the blessed Virgin into her belief and worship, yet the authors, which support this history, are condemned by all the learned authors of that church. Dr. Nicholls.

[x] The proper Scriptures, now offered to our meditation, exactly answer the design of this festival: the mercy which it commemorates, being in the Epistle with great solemnity foretold, and in the Gospel for the day related with very particular circumstances, as punctually accomplished. The consequence of the thing itself, and therefore of our belief of it, must needs be very great; by reason it lets us into a knowledge of the first act, whereby the Son of God vouchsafed to empty Himself for our sakes. In that act it reveals the mystery of "God made man:" upon which the whole scheme of the Christian religion seems principally to turn. Hence all avowed adversaries of the faith have with open malice attacked, and all the corrupters of it have with subtlety and dissembled friendship, endeavoured to subvert, the article of our blessed Saviour's miraculous incarnation.

It is important then to shew, how this prediction, purporting that the "name" of the promised child "should be called Immanuel," can belong to Him, whose name we acknowledge to have been, by express command from heaven, called Jesus, Luke i. 31; ii. 21; Matt. i. 21. Now nothing is more common in Scripture, than, by the calling or naming of a person or thing, to mean that the person or thing shall really be what that name imports: and so again, "being called" stands generally for "being." In the former sense we find it foretold of Jerusalem by this prophet, that she should be called "the city of righteousness." Why? because, as was promised in the words foregoing, "God would restore her judges, as at the first, and her counsellors as at the beginning," Isa. i. 26.

In the latter sense it is twice used by the angel, in the Gospel for this day; who says of Jesus, that "he shall be great," and "shall be called" (that is, shall be) "the Son of the Highest," Luke i. 32; and again, "that holy thing, which shall be born of thee, shall be called" (that is again, shall be) "the Son of God," ver. 35.

Without proving this, therefore, by a multitude of instances, which might make it endless; it shall suffice to say that, according to the usage of the Jewish, more especially the prophetic language, the name of a person or thing, so called, imported only such qualities or effects, in or from it, as that name signified. And by consequence, that Christ's name was truly and strictly called Immanuel, in full and punctual completion of this prophecy, if He were "God with us," (which is the adequate meaning of the Hebrew word,) in so distinguishing a manner, as none besides ever was or can be.

Now (not to mention that presence of God, whereby He is in every place, and with every person, and which cannot be the meaning of the name we are considering) there is a presence of favour and distinction, whereby God is said to be, in a peculiar manner, with those, whom He loves and blesses above others. In this regard the child here spoken of is justly called Immanuel;

The Gospel. St. Luke i. 26.

AND in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee named Nazareth, to a Virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the Virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favour with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever: and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. And behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age; and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren: for with God nothing shall be impossible. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her[y].

because, as St. Paul speaks, "God was in him reconciling the world to himself;" for his sake and "sufferings not imputing their trespasses unto them," 2 Cor. v. 19: and again, by Him, they who "were sometimes afar off are made nigh, have access to the Father, are accepted in the Beloved," Eph. ii. 13. 18, 19; i. 6; and become, of enemies and strangers, friends and children; insomuch, that God vouchsafes to dwell in us, and be one with us. And, as He unites us to Himself by grace, so did He in this child condescend, by an ineffable generation, to unite our substance and nature to Himself: to be "perfect God, and perfect man," that so He "might be the first-born among many brethren, and redeem the children from death, who are partakers of flesh and blood, by himself taking part of the same," Rom. viii. 29; Heb. ii. 14. Let it not then be any more objected that the child of this prophecy could not be called "Immanuel," whom we confess to have been called Jesus; for He is therefore our "Immanuel," because our Jesus; therefore most eminently, most literally, "God with us," because, by so miraculous an union, a "saver of his people from their sins."

But, lastly, as the name "Immanuel" leads us to contemplate the reality of our Saviour's divine nature, so does the description, which follows, help us yet more to a thankful sense of his inimitable condescension. For, by adding, "butter and honey shall he eat, that," or until, "he know to refuse the evil and choose the good:" the prophet is reasonably supposed to signify to us, not only the reality of our Saviour's human nature; but all the frailties and infirmities of it, which might render Him, as the apostle speaks, in every point "like unto us," sin alone excepted, Heb. ii. 17; iv. 15. The first Adam was created in the utmost maturity and perfection both of body and mind, that any of the species ever attained to; but the second Adam, though "the Lord from heaven," 1 Cor. xv. 47, vouchsafed to enter the world a tender babe, stooped to the weaknesses of infancy, and the gradual progressions of youth. His body was nourished with the food usually administered in those countries to common children; and his understanding brightened like theirs, and received enlargements proportionable to his years. So that Isaiah here foretels in other terms, what St. Luke relates to have been exactly fulfilled: when acquainting us, that the "child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom;" and again, that "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man," Luke ii. 40. 52.

There are many useful inferences arising from this subject. Let it suffice at present, briefly to observe, the reverence which becomes the devotions appointed for, and the glorious pre-eminence due to, this happy day. For this is the day, that began first to scatter the thick night of ignorance and error, and the veil of types and shadows, in which till then mankind were all involved. The day, which of right begins our ecclesiastical year; because on it, the redemption and true life of mankind was first put into motion, by the author and giver of it taking our substance in the womb of his holy mother. The day, which, by this wonderful operation, began to reconcile, not only God and man, but the word of God with itself; and is the common centre of agreement and union between the Old and the New Testament. The day, in short, whose honour it is, that, to the glorious event set forward in it, the mysterious proceedings of four thousand years had been made subservient. And therefore, on this day especially, let us be glad, and rejoice, and give glory, and praise, and humble adoration, to God the Father, "creating this new thing," Jer. xxxi. 22; to God the Son "incarnate;" and to God the Holy Ghost "overshadowing;" three persons and one God for ever and ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[y] We have in this Gospel an account of the glorious mystery of our Lord's incarnation, intermixed with such a description of his blessed mother's virtues, as seemed to have inclined Almighty God to make choice of her, for the happy instrument of conveying this inestimable mercy to mankind. Having, therefore, upon the portion of Scripture appointed for the Epistle, treated of the former of these points; we will endeavour to do due honour to the saint of this day, by taking such a view of her excellent graces, as the Gospel, now read, does plainly set before us.

1. The first of these is that contained in the character of her state, the purity and chastity of a virgin. A heart free from vain imaginations, or loose desires; and so unsullied with all those filthy pollutions, that defile and deform the wanton and unclean soul. It is not indeed the singleness of life, but all that modesty, and purity, which are figured by it, and ornaments of it, that must recommend men to God. The divine "Spirit flees deceit," and "removes far from folly;" and "will not abide when unrighteousness cometh in," Wisd. i. 5. The unspotted mind makes the body a temple fit for the Holy Ghost. And, because that part of Mary was clean and unblemished, because she was entirely devoted to piety, and abominated the very thoughts of filthiness, therefore was she "highly favoured." It was her chaste and virgin heart, that prevailed with the Son of God, when He "took upon him to deliver man, not to abhor" or disdain her "virgin womb." And of such virgins as these it is, St. John speaks, when he says, they are clothed with white robes, and have the honour, in the New Jerusalem, to attend upon the person of Christ, and "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth," Rev. xiv. 4: a bright and shining innocence, which with good care may be preserved in any condition of life; and such whereof even celibacy itself, and all the affected vows of it, are but too often destitute.

Secondly, Another grace, very conspicuous in this blessed Virgin, is humility. In the whole account of this affair, we find no circumstance, that speaks her exalted with the thoughts of this revelation to intemperate joy, or lofty conceits of herself: no pleasing reflections upon her own virtue; nor any of those things, that are usually looked upon as symptoms of pride and arrogance. How natural, indeed how almost unavoidable, may we think it in such a case, for a woman to be transported with being thus preferred above the rest of her sex, and enjoying such tokens of the divine favour, as none ever did, none ever should, beside herself; to be tempted to look down with some sort of pity and contempt upon mankind, in the retrieving of whom she was thus made instrumental, and think something extraordinary due to that person, whom the King of heaven thus delighted to honour, by joining her substance and human nature to his own divine nature? But, instead of all this, she receives the astonishing message with modesty, and meekness, and awful wonder; she seems to make no other use of the strangeness of the thing, than from thence to entertain the mystery with a becoming reverence, and to be more amazed at the greatness of the condescension: "Behold the handmaid of the Lord," and "he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaid," and "God hath done to me great things," and "he hath exalted them of low degree," and "he hath filled the hungry with good things." These are the meditations that rise in her heart; these the meek and modest expressions, by which she gives vent to that joy, which the embassy of an angel, the salutation of her cousin Elisabeth, and the exulting of a babe, yet unborn, produced in her. A joy, than which never was any more justly indulged, and yet so indulged, as to be profuse only in the praises of God, and the depressions of herself.

Thirdly, St. Luke takes notice of one grace more, very remarkable in the Virgin upon this occasion, which is her faith: and this, in a matter so foreign, so wholly new, so mysterious and above the power of all created nature, is very extraordinary. It is true she questioned the angel, (ver. 34,) "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" But that was in a sense very different from Zachary's at the 18th verse, "whereby shall I know this?" He questioned the messenger, because he looked upon himself as deluded. She doubted not the truth, nor the authority of the message: but desired satisfaction, only as to the manner of bringing about an event, altogether unusual, and for which she saw no competent means. Less than this could not be done to save her credulity; and more than this she insisted not upon, to indulge her curiosity: for when it was declared, that the operation should be God's; that, however strange it might appear, yet his power knew no bounds; and, as an evidence that it did not, how He had already exerted it in a very wonderful instance, by giving a child to persons of her own kindred, whom both age and nature had made barren, and cut off from all expectations of such a blessing; when once, I say, this had been declared, she raises no fresh scruples, nor urges any of those difficulties which to human reason are insuperable; but returns this submissive answer, at once declaring her expectation that it would, and her desires that it might, be so; "Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word." She left God to finish his own work in his own way: not doubting, but his omnipotence would take care of his truth: she offered herself, the contented, the ready, nay, the glad object of this miracle, for heaven to fulfil all its good pleasure upon. This, without dispute, is the import of the Virgin's reply; and accordingly we find her carriage thus interpreted by Elisabeth, to her mighty commendation: (ver. 45) "Blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things, which were told her from the Lord." This was a noble resignation; fit for her, whose son was to plant a religion built upon faith: and where such virtues as these conspire, where each is so eminent, each so acceptable, we may allow the person to be "full of grace;" and discern reason sufficient, why this bright constellation should render her lovely in God's eyes and "highly favoured by him." Dean Stanhope.

Saint Mark's Day[z].

The Collect.

O Almighty God, who hast instructed thy holy Church with the heavenly doctrine of thy Evangelist Saint Mark; Give us grace, that, being not like children carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may be established in the

Heb. xiii. 9. Eph. iv. 14, 15.

[z] St. Mark's Day.] St. Mark is, in the preface to St. Jerome's comment on his Gospel, said to be by descent a Levite. It is much disputed, whether he be the same with that "John surnamed Mark," mentioned in the thirteenth and fifteenth chapters of the Acts, as the attendant, first of Paul and Barnabas; and afterwards, of the latter, whose sister's son he was. The question is not of any great consequence: but perhaps it is the more general opinion, that they are two different Marks. Dean Stanhope.

As to the question, which of the two Marks was the Evangelist, John Mark the companion of St. Paul, or the other Mark, the convert or son, as he is called, of St. Peter, and who was likewise the attendant upon his person; antiquity, if we have regard to that, will determine for the latter. For the most ancient writers of the church affirm, that Mark, in his attendance upon St. Peter, wrote his Gospel at the command of St. Peter; that that great apostle supervised it after it was truth of thy holy Gospel; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. Ephes. iv. 7.

UNTO every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love[a].

done; and recommended it to the church under the authority of his name. Upon which reason Tertullian does not scruple to call his Gospel, "The Gospel according to St. Peter." He wrote his Gospel in the year of Christ 45, as Eusebius relates. He is supposed to be a Jew by extraction, and that his name was Mordecai, and that he took Marcus as a Roman name, something like in sound, it being the custom of the Jews so to do, when they travelled from home; as Jesus, the brother of Onias, was called Jaso, Saul was called Paulus.

He planted a Christian church at Alexandria, and was the first bishop of that place. The particulars of his martyrdom are not mentioned in any very early writers. Some say that his death was occasioned by an insurrection of the heathen rabble upon him, as he was officiating in his church at Alexandria; who tied a rope about his neck, and dragged him up and down the craggy rocks by the sea-side, till they had killed him. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for the day having reminded us of the instruction given by God to the church by the doctrine of St. Mark, and having thence prayed for grace to profit by it; the Epistle acquaints us,

1. With God's giving several gifts unto men for the instruction of the church, together with the time, manner, and measure of his bestowing them.

2. The several ranks and degrees of persons, on whom these gifts were bestowed.

And, 3. with the great ends for which they are given, together with the right use we are to make of them.

In the close of the Epistle St. Paul tells the Ephesians, and in them all Christians, that, by adhering to the truth, and living in it, we live in Christ, and "grow up into him in all things," who is the Head of the Christian church. This he afterwards illustrates by the similitude of the natural body, wherein as all the members are supplied with spirits, strength, and vigour from the head; so, in the mystical body of Christ, all the members receive spiritual life, growth, and nourishment from Christ the Head of his church. This is further illustrated in the Gospel of the day, by the resemblance of the vine and branches, which is our Saviour's own comparison. Dr. Hole.

[a] The Epistle having spoken of the gifts of God being distributed to the ministers of the church, for "the edifying of the body of Christ," the following practical inferences concerning edification may be seasonably suggested:

1. That, although every thing, which hath a tendency to good, may in a larger sense be said to edify; yet a man is not properly and truly edified, either by any new light or knowledge acquired, or by any pious affections and desires kindled or cherished in him, unless these prove and exert themselves in the acts of practical and profitable virtues.

2. That, in order to render even the practice of such virtues strictly edifying, it is requisite that the benefit resulting from thence be not confined to the doer's private advantage, but that it aim at the good of others, especially the general good of religion; and of Christians, considered as one house built up together in the faith and love of Christ. Whereof each, as "a living stone," is a part; and each is bound to demean himself in all points, as may become a person possessed with, and mindful of, that persuasion.

3. That advancing the peace, order, and unity of this common body is, in Scripture language, the true Christian edification. Consequently, whatsoever tends to make any breach or division in that body, is contrary to, and destructive of, edification: consequently again, separating from a regular established church, or leaving one's proper pastor, on pretence of edifying more elsewhere, is not only wicked, but absurd. As absurd, as it would be to say, we intend to strengthen a wall by drawing out the stones; or that we design the improvement of health, vigour, and beauty, in the body natural, by unnecessarily taking away the useful limbs, and loosing the ligaments, which should compact and keep them in their functions.

4. By the apostle's urging this edification of the body in faith and love, as the great end of that ministry established by Christ and continued to the church, both ministers and people are moved to make such reflections as these. The ministers, and all who undertake to execute that office, that they are highly accountable, if by their means any heresies or schisms get ground; if they do not faithfully warn the people against these things; detect the artifices of them, who

The Gospel. St. John xv. 1.

I Am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full [b].

lie in wait to deceive; expose the error, the sinfulness, the infinite both private and publick danger of those vile latitudinarian principles, which would not only break down the walls, but undermine and root up the very foundation, of this spiritual building. In short, if they do not set forth the wickedness of all needless and wilful, and the misery of all judicial and deserved, separations from the church of Christ, with all the aggravating circumstances, so warmly, so frequently, inculcated in Scripture. For where in truth do we find any one sin more expressly forbidden, more severely threatened, or represented as more fatal and damnable, than those of division and heresy? where any duty more plainly taught, more authoritatively commanded, more earnestly recommended, or more zealously prayed for, than those of unity, and peace, and love, in all the fellow-members of this spiritual body?

But if the teachers shall either touch this matter too tenderly, or explain it too superficially; the hearers, in the next place, may, from the passage now before us, learn both the importance and the nature of their duty in this particular. The importance indeed is so evident, that few go about to deny it; but the nature of it should be more attended to, than it generally seems to have been.

Let us therefore labour, indefatigably labour, for ourselves; and let us incessantly pray for "all estates of men in God's holy church, that every member of the same in his vocation and ministry may truly and godly serve him." That they may not be, "like children, carried away with every blast of vain doctrine," but "so established by his grace in the truth of Christ's holy Gospel," as "to hold the faith in unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life." Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[b] The agreement between the Epistle and Gospel for this day may be readily observed: for though representing it under different images, they both agree in describing the union between Christ and Christians: both tend to illustrate the advantages of it: both earnestly excite our utmost diligence to preserve it: with this only difference, that St. Paul insists upon the benefits accruing from thence to the body in general; but our Lord regards those chiefly, which belong to each member in particular. From both together, we may form an unanswerable argument, for keeping that unity and promoting that edification, which, if neglected and broken, is certain, not only to disturb the peace of the church, but by cutting off, to destroy, at last, those very persons, who are guilty of making the breach. For it is by grace only, that men can be saved: that grace is no where promised to be given in an extraordinary way: it is first bestowed in, and ordinarily annexed to, the use of the sacraments, the ministry of the word, and other Christian ordinances; called, for that reason, "means of grace." What therefore can become of those branches, who are severed from all communication with the trunk? And how careful ought every one to be, neither to break himself off wilfully; nor by any unworthy and scandalous behaviour, to incur a forfeiture of those kindly influences; nor by a profane abuse or supine neglect of those religious offices, which are appointed to convey them, to draw down the fate of those sapless boughs, whose present curse (we are told here) is withering and decay, and whose end is to be burned!

2. I would call upon my reader to take notice, how pious, and prudent, and exactly agreeable to our Lord's declaration, that "without him we can do nothing," our excellent established liturgy is. In this we daily acknowledge, that "all holy desires, and all good counsels, and all just works proceed from God." In this, after the most exalted act of worship, we pray to be "prevented with his most gracious favour, and furthered with his continual help, that in all our works begun, continued, and ended in him, we may glorify his holy name, and finally by his mercy obtain everlasting life." The acknowledgments of this kind are frequent and full. No church ever took more care to declare her sense of the vanity and danger of relying upon our own sufficiency. None magnifies the freedom, none urges the necessity, of divine grace more industriously: none begs it with more humility and pathetick zeal. And they, who pray in dependence of our Saviour's promise to hear those that abide in Him, cannot implore his assistance more suitably, than in

John xiv. 6. Christ to be the way, the truth, and the life; that, following the steps of thy holy Apostles, Saint Philip and Saint James, we may stedfastly walk Heb. vi. 12. Matt. vii. 14. in the way that leadeth to eternal life; through the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Epistle. St. James i. 1.

JAMES, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted; but the rich in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. For some of the Collects; that particularly for the ninth Sunday after Trinity; with which (it comes so close up to the Scripture now in hand) I will finish this discourse. "Grant to us, Lord, we beseech thee, the spirit to think and do always such things as be rightful; that we, who cannot do any thing that is good without thee, may by thee be enabled to live according to thy will, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." Dean Stanhope.

[c] St. Philip and St. James's Day.] Two saints are commemorated by the Church this day, the first whereof is St Philip.

1. Of St. Philip.—St. Philip was born at Bethsaida, a town of Galilee, a barren country of Judea, near the sea of Tiberias, John i. 44. Our Saviour, living in this obscure remote place, was pleased to choose his disciples out of the plain ordinary men of this neighbourhood, who were mostly fishermen, by reason of the nighness of the sea of Tiberias, which was a great lake well stored with fish, and which therefore invited many of the neighbouring inhabitants to take upon them that profession. He was the next, after St. Andrew and St. Peter, called to the apostleship; and, as some think, before them; the others, after their first call, returning to their employs. He was the person to whom the Greeks applied themselves, that they might have some knowledge of the Messias, John xii. 20, 21. It was he, whose curiosity led him to know more of the Divine nature than our Saviour was willing to reveal unto him, in his address to Him, "Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us," John xiv. 8. To whom our Saviour returns this gentle rebuke, "Have I been so long with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." After our Saviour's ascension, he is recorded to have preached the Gospel in the higher Asia. Others will have him to have joined with St. Bartholomew, in preaching to the Scythians. Isidorus says, he converted the Gauls; but it is probable he means the Gallogræci, or inhabitants of Galatia. His last preaching before his death was in Hierapolis, a city of Asia Minor, now called Aleppo, where he underwent his martyrdom, as St. Chrysostom writes. And Eusebius expressly says, that Philip the apostle, having preached the Gospel at Hierapolis, was crucified, and, while he was fastened to the cross, was killed by stones thrown at him.

2. Of St. James.—The saint, which is this day commemorated, is commonly called by the name of James the Less. The reason of this compellation was, either because he was less in personage, as some have imagined; or, most probably, because he was younger than the other, and not so much advanced in years when he came to the apostleship. He was the son of Alpheus, otherwise called Cleopas, Luke xxiv. 18; and is for distinction sake called the brother of the Lord, Gal. i. 19. He was, after our Saviour's resurrection, constituted bishop of Jerusalem, and seems to have presided in the first council held there, Acts xv, and to have directed the debates of the apostles concerning the Jewish ceremonies. There is mention made of him, and that too as the brother of Jesus Christ, by Josephus, who says, he was delivered up to be stoned by the cruelty of Ananias the high priest, whose death gave great dissatisfaction to the good people of the city. There was an extraordinary opinion of his sanctity throughout all the city of Jerusalem, where he lived; from whence he got the surname of The Just. His martyrdom is recorded by the ecclesiastical historians after this manner: the scribes and Pharisees, being impatient at the great growth of Christianity in Judea, were resolved to set upon St. James, and by menaces force him to renounce that religion publickly before the people. And the better to do this, they hurry him up into a gallery of the temple, and would oblige him to make a recantation before a multitude of people who were gathered together upon the rumour which was spread abroad concerning this matter. But instead of denying Christ, he made a publick confession of Him before that great assembly, who thereupon almost unanimously cried out, "Hosanna to the Son of David;" which so enraged the unbelieving Jews, that they threw him down headlong from the high place which they had set him on. But being not quite killed by his fall, he prayed to God for forgiveness to his murderers. However, this did but enrage his spiteful persecutors the more; and one of them being a fuller, and having in his hand a staff which he made use of in his trade to beat his cloth in the scouring, he struck him over the head therewith, and killed him. Dr. Nicholls.

St. Philip and St. James being here placed together, to be commemorated in one day, for what reason does not clearly appear, the Collect likewise joins them together in a prayer that we may have grace to follow their steps. The Epistle gives some account of the life and doctrine of St. James; and the Gospel, of St. Philip. Dr. Hole.

the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him[d].

The Gospel. St. John xiv. 1.

AND Jesus said unto his disciples, Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house [d] The Epistle of the day affords a seasonable opportunity, and it will also be generally useful, to say somewhat concerning the nature of temptation.

To "tempt," in the full extent of the word, is to "try:" and, by analogy, whatever is a trial of our virtue, may be called a temptation. In this most comprehensive signification we may say, that every circumstance, every event of human life, is a temptation. Because there is not any one of these, but, according as it falls under the principle of free choice natural to mankind, is capable of being used to right, or abused to wrong, purposes; and so, of becoming the occasion of our doing well or ill, in the management of it.

But, in regard some of these require less skill and resolution to manage them, than others; and, since the use proper to be made of them is so little disagreeable to our reason and inclination, that they can hardly deserve to be called trials; therefore that name is generally confined to such, as carry apparent danger and difficulty in them. Such, as offer violence to flesh and blood; and create great struggles, between the affections of nature, and the principles of religion. Hence it comes to pass, that great afflictions, of any kind whatsoever, and especially the sufferings undergone for the sake of God and a good conscience, are peculiarly distinguished by the title of temptations.

In all these cases the Scripture acknowledges temptations to come from God. Thus He is said to tempt Abraham, when commanding him to sacrifice Isaac: the conflict which must naturally rise between the natural affection to a son, the son of his old age, his only son, the son of promise, and the consideration of his obedience due to that command; being the most difficult experiment of faith in, and love to, God, that perhaps was ever made: and consequently, the virtue of complying with it, in despite of so much suggested for declining it, is the noblest instance to be met with in story. Thus again, the temptations of affliction and suffering in a good cause are frequently attributed to God in Scripture; even when most violent, and such as the weakness of human nature is aptest to startle at, and to shrink back from. This is plainly the meaning of several passages, which do not only mention God's trying men in their hearts; but intimate the severe manner of doing it, by comparing the afflictions themselves to fire, and the persons enduring them to metals passing through, and separated from their dross in that fire. Hence they are said to be "tried," to be "refined," to be "melted" as "silver and gold:" and with regard to persecutions, upon the account of religion in particular, the trial of Christians is said to be "much more precious than that of silver and gold which perisheth, though it be tried by fire;" Ps. lxvi. 10; Zech. xiii. 9; Ezek. xxii. 20. 22; 1 Pet. i. 7; and such sufferings are called a "fiery trial," or, according to the more literal rendering, "a fire kindled for their temptation," 1 Pet. iv. 12. Now as God is said expressly to be the author of these temptations, so He ordains them for very wise and kind reasons.

Another more restrained sense of it there is, which imports seducing men into sin. Thus the devil is most emphatically styled the "tempter:" as always lying in wait and industriously suggesting evil thoughts: either drawing us from good purposes, or egging us on, and emboldening us in wicked ones, 1 Thess. iii. 5; 1 Cor. vii. 5.

This sort of temptation is also ascribed to the corrupt inclinations of our own hearts. Particularly in this chapter: for here the apostle declares, that it cannot without the utmost injustice and impiety be ascribed to God, in that remarkable text, James i. 13, 14: "Let no man, when he is tempted, say, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed."

The truth is, in all seducement the tempter plays our own artillery upon us. For man, in his primitive purity, was made capable of standing or falling by a limited understanding possible to be imposed upon, and by a liberty of will to choose, according to the true or false appearances of good. But by the corruption, which, since the fall, mankind lie under, these faculties are miserably weakened; the understanding is clouded, the will warped, and that concupiscence, which signifies a strong propension to sensuality and wickedness, is become a fit matter for the subtle enemy of souls to work upon. By these all the evil motions, excited in us, find the mind disposed to receive and indulge them; and all the deluding representations put upon the things of the world, and the appetites of nature, are now much more apt to deceive us into a wrong choice, and to draw us off from the true principles of right reason and duty. When therefore a man is tempted by his own "lust," he is also tempted of the devil; and when tempted of the devil, he is tempted of his own "lust." Because the corruption of our nature, meant by that word "lust," is the instrument the devil makes use of; and it is our present unhappiness to have a false party within, which holds correspondence with the enemy, and furnishes those very arms that he labours to slay us by. For, were it not for the depravity of our sensual appetites and passions, we should find it much more easy to form right judgements, and make wise choices of things. And were it not for the malice and cunning of our spiritual adversary without, who takes advantage of these disorders and frailties of lapsed human nature; the affections of our own breasts, and the appointments of Providence concerning us, which in the design of them are temptations of experiment only, would not, as now they so often do, prove temptations of seducement in the issue and unhappy event of them.

Thus much, one would hope, might suffice to shew how men are said in Scripture to be tempted of God; and how, of the devil, and their own treacherous naughty hearts. What those temptations are, which deserve our joy and thanks; and what those, which it is our duty with our utmost might to strive and pray against. Dean Stanhope.

are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you: and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; or else believe me for the very works' sake. Verily, verily I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my Name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask any thing in my Name, I will do it[e].

O Lord God Almighty, who didst endue thy holy Apostle Barnabas with singular gifts of the Holy Acts xi. 24; xiii. 2.

[e] Our blessed Lord here informs us, that to "ask in his name" is a condition, necessary to qualify all our prayers for success: it is a subject therefore, which may well employ our thoughts.

Now a thing is said in Scripture to be done in the name of another four several ways. Either, 1. When it is done at the command of and by commission from another. Or, 2. When men act or do it for the service and honour of another. Or, 3. When they proceed in conformity to the rules and directions set by that other. Or, 4. When they interpose the authority and mediation, the sake and merits, of another.

But the principal and most proper intent of this expression is the last: approaching the throne of grace, I mean, with an humble confidence in the merits and mediation of Christ, and resting our souls upon Him alone for the mercy and good acceptance of God. Thus did the apostles in the matter more immediately concerned in this passage. In the miracles, wrought by them for confirmation of the truth, they constantly invoked the name of Jesus Christ. When strength and limbs were restored to the lame, they are commanded in "the name of Jesus to stand up and walk," Acts iii. 6; when the sick recovered their health, they declare, that "Jesus Christ made them whole," Acts ix. 34; when evil spirits were to be dispossessed, they are "commanded in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of" the patient, Acts xvi. 18. The usual method of performing such cures was by laying on of hands, and prayer, Acts xxviii. 8; James v. 14, 15. The requests put up to God for the confirmation and increase of this power, intreat that "He would stretch forth his hand to heal, and that signs and wonders might be done by the name of his holy child Jesus," Acts iv. 30. And when these petitions at any time had their effect to the amazement of all beholders, particular care was taken to prevent those effects being attributed to the apostles themselves; by solemn and publick declarations, that they were not owing to any "power or holiness" of their own, but must be ascribed entirely to "Jesus, whom God had glorified, and to faith in his name," Acts iii. 12, 13. 16; iv. 10. So constant a dependence upon Christ did the very manner of working those miracles express, which He promises the power of, and prescribes the qualification for, here. And so just were the doers of them to their great Master's honour, in disclaiming all right to any glory from thence, any part in the operation, except that only of suppliants for, and instruments in, the use of these supernatural and truly divine gifts.

And herein they are our patterns. For we, like them, must bring the name of Christ along with us; and, whether we desire to be "forgiven those things, whereof our consciences are afraid," or to receive supplies suitable to our weakness and our wants, must come to God, in a due sense, that both the one and the other sort are such things, "as we are not worthy to ask but through the merits and mediation of thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord." Accordingly such forms as these have obtained in all ages and parts of the church. And most deservedly, since this is a manner of worship peculiar to Christians. It is an essential and distinguishing property of our religion: of absolute necessity to be observed. Let us, therefore, in due sense of our obligation and interest, be fervent and frequent at the throne of grace; and esteem it a most valuable privilege, that we may come thither boldly, when "asking in Christ's name." That is, as we have now seen, when we humbly and heartily acknowledge ourselves less than the least of all God's mercies: when we disclaim all desert of our own, and approach as becomes miserable, but believing and penitent offenders: when (after the example of our established Church in her admirable Liturgy) we interpose the most prevailing name of Jesus the beloved in all our devotions: and when with the lowest opinion of our own vileness, which makes us unworthy to beg "any thing," we do join so high and honourable a trust in his merits, that we make no doubt of obtaining, for his sake, "every thing" that is expedient for us. For the more meanly we conceive

For the Epistle. Acts xi. 22.

TIDINGS of these things came unto the ears of the Church which was in Jerusalem; and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch. Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad; and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul. And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the Church, and taught much people: and the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit, that there should be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa. Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul[g].

of ourselves, (and it is but too evident we cannot exceed on that hand,) the nobler and juster is our faith in our Saviour's inestimable sacrifice, and all-powerful mediation for us. To whom, with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be ascribed, as is most due, all honour and glory, thanksgiving and praise, now and for ever. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[f] St. Barnabas's Day.] St. Barnabas was of Jewish extraction, though born in the island of Cyprus, being descended from parents of the house of Levi, who had settled in that country, Acts iv. 36. He was sent to Jerusalem to perfect his studies in the Jewish law, under the tuition of Gamaliel. Some of the most ancient writers do affirm, that he was one of the seventy disciples sent out to preach by our Saviour, Luke x. 1. He readily complied with that injunction of the apostles, for throwing all their wealth into a common bank, for the better propagation of the Gospel, by selling his land, and laying the money at the apostles' feet, Acts iv. 37: which some authors say was not a little field, but a very large estate in Cyprus. His first publick employ in the ministry was to settle a Christian church in Antioch, several Jews in that city being well disposed to the faith in Christ by the conversation and preaching of some Christians, who were scattered abroad upon the persecution which arose about Stephen, and had fled to that city. Here his labours had great success; and, the converts multiplying upon him very fast, he goes to Tarsus to bring Paul thither to be his fellow-labourer in that great work of the conversion of so populous a city. Here God blessed their joint labours with wonderful success, the number of the faithful growing so considerable, as to be distinguished first by the name of Christians in that city, Acts xi. 22, &c. After some time of their continuance here, by the particular direction of the Holy Ghost, Niger, Lucius, and Manaen were appointed to take care of the churches in Antioch, and Paul and Barnabas were separated to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles at a more remote distance, Acts xiii. 1, 2; which they accordingly did, planting many churches in Asia Minor, for the space of three years travelling and preaching together. At last there happened a contention between them, which occasioned them to part asunder, and preach separately, which God ordered for the good of the church, the Gospel being further propagated by their single preaching, than it would have been by the conjunct labours of two such eminent apostles. After this he is said to have settled the Gospel in his native country of Cyprus; and sailing from thence into Italy, to have planted Christianity in Milan, not being suffered to come to Rome, by reason of the edict of Claudius, which had prohibited all Jews to come into that city. He is supposed to be the author of an Epistle which is full of pious instructions, though very full of allegories, according to the way of writing used by the Jews. It was allowed for a genuine piece of St. Barnabas by some of the best critics among the ancient fathers, and who lived nighest to the apostolical times; by St. Clement of Alexandria, by Origen, and by Tertullian. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for this day makes mention of the "singular gifts of the Holy Ghost, with which this apostle was endowed;" withal teaching us to pray for a competent measure of the "like gifts," and "likewise for grace to use them alway to God's honour and glory." The Epistle gives us some account of St. Barnabas's first employment in the service of the church: and since he was noted for an example of great love and charity to mankind, being therefore called Barnabas, which signifies "a son of consolation," from the great comfort and relief which he was wont to afford to distressed persons; therefore the church selected for the Gospel a portion of Scripture, wherein love to one another, in all the acts and good offices of it, is recommended to us by the precept and example of our blessed Saviour Himself. Dr. Hole.

[g] A circumstance worthy of remark in this narrative is the imposing upon the believers that name, which hath ever since been made their distinction, and justly esteemed their glory, all the world over. The enemies of the Gospel did in scorn call them Nazarenes, the "men of the sect," and the like. Among themselves they were styled "disciples, believers, brethren;" and man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my Name, he may give it you[h].

had such other titles, as imported faith and charity. But now the success of Paul and Barnabas had given them so much confidence, that, at Antioch first, they adventured publickly and solemnly to take the name of "Christians:" or persons belonging to, and believing in, Jesus of Nazareth; as the Christ of God, the Lord and promised Saviour of the world. That this distinguishing character was taken in a solemn manner, we have reason to conclude from the propriety of the original word. For that word is used with regard to edicts and proclamations; such particularly, as contained the people's profession of allegiance to emperors, and the privileges granted by them to the people; after which mutual declaration, the emperor in that place was publickly acknowledged, and the account of state transactions were reckoned from that era. As a further proof of this, we have the manner of imposing this name described; that it was done in an open assembly, by Euodius, then bishop of Antioch, and successor to the apostle St. Peter in that see at the beginning of Claudius's reign, and ten years after our Lord's ascent into heaven. These are circumstances too considerable to be overlooked, because all virtually contained in the Greek expression; which gives a quite different notion of the thing, from that too feeble rendering of being "called Christians." And as St. Luke, the author of this book, could not find a more forcible or proper phrase for the solemnity of this denomination; so he could not do greater honour to his own city Antioch, than by acquainting posterity, that the proselytes of that place had, first of all others, the courage thus to take upon them a name, which every part of the believing world gladly derive from them, and desire to be known by.

But it is of much less concern, that my reader should understand the manner of this name being first given, than that he should be duly sensible of the weighty obligations which follow upon its being constantly borne by us. Now these cannot possibly be less, than a firm belief of the doctrines, a conscientious obedience to the precepts, and as exact a conformity as we are capable to the example of that Christ, after whom we are called. When these are not observed, the name, which is meant for our crown and joy, becomes our condemnation and reproach. To preserve an incessant remembrance of these engagements, each person, at the time of being incorporated into Christ's body, receives that which is termed his Christian name. A name, deservedly placed before the other by reason it inclines us to advantages more valuable, than any possible to descend from our ancestors. A name, more strictly ours, than that of our respective families; because taken by us, not derived down to us. A name, which we are infinitely more concerned to do credit to, than that other; because it is a mark and badge of that covenant with God, upon the sincere discharge whereof all our hopes and happiness depend. And therefore, lastly, a name very properly inquired of at the beginning of our Church Catechism; because it is the signature of our profession, and an indelible monument of having contracted for those duties, in which the child is there about to be instructed. In a word, if it be deservedly accounted baseness and degeneracy, to stain our blood, and reflect shame back upon those forefathers, who were men of like frailties and passions with ourselves; think, how heinous a provocation it must needs be, when those who "name the name of Christ do not depart from iniquity," 2 Tim. ii. 19; when such minister occasion to libertines and infidels to blaspheme the Son of God and his Gospel, through their impure and vicious, that is, indeed, their infamous, absurd, and contradictory conversation. Dean Stanhope.

[h] We are here told that we must "love one another as Christ hath loved us." Which may lead us to consider the proofs of our love, or the instances wherein it ought to be expressed. For they, who "love one another as" He "loved us," must, according to their power, and as occasions offer, be ready to give the same evidence of their affection, which He was pleased to do of his. And what that was, the history of his life and death takes very particular care to acquaint us.

To enter into the detail of these proofs were endless; since every action, every word of his was a fresh one. Or rather, all He did, and taught, and suffered, in the whole course of his appearing in our nature, was but one continued act of love; diversified in its circumstances, as the wisdom of the agent, and the occasions of the persons, for whose immediate benefit it was intended, made such variety requisite. In this He was so constant, so perfect, so lively and heroick a pattern, that we need only contemplate his behaviour, and frame our own by that model, to practise this virtue in its utmost excellence. For, though such sinful sordid souls as ours can never aspire to all the perfections of this Son of God, who is love itself; though the effect of the kind inclinations we may have, can never be so great and so diffusive as his, by whose kindness unspeakable benefits devolve upon all mankind; yet we shall do well to copy after this great original so far as we can. And that we are more especially concerned to do in these three particulars:

1. By suiting our expressions of love to the circumstances of other people, in such a manner as may be most proper and profitable for them. And as our blessed Lord sometimes instructed and exhorted, sometimes cherished and fed his hearers by miracles, sometimes reproved and upbraided their faults with great severity; so we, in like manner, if we will follow his example, must dispense to each, as we ourselves are able, and as their condition requires. To the needy we must bring relief; to the oppressed and injured, protection and assistance; to the honest, well-meaning, and ignorant, instruction; to the weak, encouragement; to the sorrowful, comfort; to the wicked, reproof; and to the scandalous and incorrigible, shame and punishment; forgiveness to our enemies; prayers and good wishes to all the world. In a word, Christ's behaviour is a rule to us, for doing all the good we can; and for doing it to as many as we can; and for doing it in the best and most prudent manner that we can.

Saint John Baptist's Day[1].

The Collect.

Luke i. 11—20. 36. 57, &c.

ALMIGHTY God, by whose providence thy servant John Baptist was wonderfully born, and sent to prepare the way of thy Son our Saviour, by preaching of repentance; Make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life, that we may Matt. iii. 2—8.

2. We must make it our principal endeavour to express our love in acts of kindness to the souls of men. Our Saviour, it is true, was very merciful to the bodies of men. He sustained their hunger; He healed their diseases, He released them from the torment and bondage of evil spirits; and He died at last to purchase eternal redemption for this viler, in conjunction with the other more valuable part of us. But still in all these, and in all his other acts of mercy, He had regard chiefly to the souls of men. Those very miracles, which bestowed bodily health and soundness, had yet a farther end in view, and were designed for gaining them over to holiness and truth. And in this spiritual life and health it was, that their true, their great happiness consisted. Thus also we must shew all the kindness we can to men, in every kind and capacity: but chiefly should we labour for their spiritual advantages. For no charity is truly Christian, which does not always keep God and heaven in its eye, and direct the good works it does, to the salvation and amendment of the parties to whom they are done.

3. We must think no instance, no act, whereby we may testify this love, and profit others, too great; but must be ready and willing to promote the eternal good of our fellow-Christians, at the expense of any temporal inconvenience or hazard. St. John, you must needs allow, hath carried this point very high; when arguing expressly, that, "as Christ laid down his life for us, we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren," 1 John iii. 16. But Christ would not have thought the bodies of men, or any temporal happiness, a cause or consideration sufficient for his death and sufferings. The reason this great work cost so much was, because it was to redeem their souls: and each of these He who bought them hath taught us to prize above the whole world. Since therefore the body is not the man, but only the least and meanest part of him; when the parting with this may prove an instrument of great and manifest advantage to our own, or another's soul, the laying down of life, in such a case, is agreeable to that general rule in traffick and human prudence, of exchanging a less for a greater value. But we, who are commanded upon occasion to expose or sacrifice our lives, are no where commanded, or so much as permitted, to commit a wilful sin, for the sake of any man. And the reason is, because this brings the soul into a manifest hazard and ruin. God can make a man good amends for the loss of this life, but there can no amends be made for the loss of the next.

I conclude with desiring my reader to observe, how prudent a choice our Church makes in propounding to our consideration this lecture of charity, on a day, which give us the advantage of receiving, together with the precept, an example enforcing the practice of it. For such, in a most eminent manner, was the saint of this festival. He cheerfully devoted first his fortunes, then his labours, and last of all his life, to the service of God and his fellow-Christians, Acts iv. 36, 37. This was indeed to love his brethren, as Christ had loved him. This we have reason to esteem one of those "singular gifts of the Holy Ghost, with which" this holy apostle "was endued;" and which we beg not to be destitute of, nor yet of grace to use them always to God's honour and glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[1] St. John Baptist's Day.] We celebrate the birth of St. John Baptist, and of our Saviour, for these reasons: the births of both were full of joy and mystery. Our Saviour's we have already observed: now for St. John's, it is plain, there was more than ordinary joy at his birth, Luke i. 14; and full of mystery and wonder it was. As a virgin conceived our Lord, so a barren woman brought forth St. John, Luke i. 36. Again, his birth was prophetical of our Lord, whom he saluted out of his mother's womb. Lastly, his birth was made memorable by the prediction of the angel Gabriel, Luke i. 19.

There was formerly another holy-day for the beheading of St. John Baptist; but our Church keeps only this holy-day in memory of him; wherein, though she principally commemorates his mysterious nativity, as you may see in the Gospel; yet she does not omit his life and death: his life and office in the morning lessons are recorded; his death is related in the second evening lesson, and the Collect prays for grace to imitate his example, patiently suffering for the truth's sake. Bp. Sparrow.

It is well worth observing, that, whereas other festivals are celebrated on the supposed day of the saint's death then commemorated, this is calculated for the nativity of St. John: the only nativity, except that of our blessed Saviour, for which the Church assembles with thanksgiving. The rest did by their deaths bear testimony to Christ already come; he died a martyr too, though not properly a martyr for the faith of Jesus. But the circumstances and design of his birth were so full of significance and wonder, that this in a particular manner claims our praise to God. Because his nativity was a warning and pledge of our Saviour's; and rendered him, as St. Chrysostom expresses himself, a preacher, and worker of miracles, from the very womb. Hence, says St. Augustin, it is, that the Church this day goes out of her usual method, and pays a particular respect to the first setting out of this wonderful forerunner.

All, that concerns this part of St. John's story, is so fully related in St. Luke's first chapter, that no more need be said of it. The Evangelist acquaints us, that the fame and expectation of this child had spread itself through all the country. This, we are told, provoked the jealousy of Herod to endeavour his destruction also, at the time of slaying the children in and about Bethlehem. Zacharias is reported to have been killed in the temple, for refusing to deliver up his son: and Elisabeth, to have fled with him into the wilderness, and so early to have entered him upon that solitary life, which he persevered in, till the exercise of his ministry called him forth, and manifested this more than a prophet to Israel. St. Matthew describes to us his habit and diet; "a garment of camel's hair, a leathern girdle, locusts and wild honey," Matt. iii. 4; all resembling the rigour of that Elias, in whose spirit and power he came. And, that the correspondence might hold as well in the miraculous provision, as in the plainness of his food, there was a tradition that his mother Elisabeth died about forty days after their truly repent according to his preaching; and after his example constantly speak the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Epistle. Isa. xl. 1.

COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, That her warfare is accomplished; that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a high-way for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand for ever. O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain: O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid: say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God. Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young[k].

arrival in the desert, and that God commanded an angel to feed this important infant, till he was able to look out for his own sustenance.

His ministry will be considered in its place. His imprisonment is by Josephus imputed to Herod's jealousy, lest a person of such influence upon the people should dispose them to any insurrection. Macherus was the place of his confinement: a town and castle of great strength, a little beyond Jordan, and near the Dead Sea. Here he was beheaded, and buried (say some) between Elisha and Obadiah the prophets. The Gospel tells us the provocation: that it was rebuking Herod for taking his brother's wife; and that Herod, who had a reverence for John, was trepanned into this execution by the subtlety and malice of Herodias, who took the advantage of a rash promise made to her daughter, and instructed her to ask the Baptist's head in a charger. Josephus relates at large the wickedness, both of that marriage, and of this murder: the severe revenge taken by Aretas, king of Arabia Petræa, brother to Herod's repudiated wife: the miseries which the restless ambition of Herodias brought afterwards upon both Herod and herself, no less than deprivation of his government and perpetual exile. And the daughter is also said, by a fall through ice which broke under her, to have had her head severed from her body: so resembling that death, which at her request the Baptist had suffered before. Dean Stanhope.

There is an inaccuracy in the wording of this Collect, opposite to that noticed in the Collect for Whitsunday. See the note there. "Sent to prepare the way of thy Son our Saviour, by preaching of repentance." Here the participle, or gerund, hath improperly the preposition "of" after it: and so is deprived of its verbal regimen, by which, as a transitive, it would govern the noun "repentance" in the objective case. Besides, the phrase is rendered obscure and ambiguous; for the obvious meaning of it in its present form is, "by preaching concerning repentance, or on that subject;" whereas the sense intended is, "by publishing the covenant of repentance, and declaring repentance to be a condition of acceptance with God." The phrase would have been perfectly right and determinate to the sense, either way: by the noun, "the preaching of repentance;" or by the participle, "by preaching repentance." Bp. Lowth.

[k] The portion of Scripture for the Epistle, and that of the Gospel now before us, will be most properly treated of together; because both agree in the same design, of explaining to us the office and business of that holy person, whose wonderful birth the Christian church this day commemorates. It was, say Isaiah and Zacharias unanimously, that he might "go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his way."

This he did, by his preaching; by his baptism; and by some significant circumstances relating to his person and manner of life.

1. One cannot reflect at all upon the particulars recorded of his preaching, and not see the fitness of that preparation made by them, for Him who came to reform the world, to establish righteousness, to complete and to reveal the whole mystery of our redemption. Had these principles been entertained with the same zeal they were taught, how smooth and easy had his way been made! but they, who lay grovelling in their mire of sin, affected still to retain the situation of valleys, and refused to be "exalted." The "mountains" and "hills" of pharisaical superstition and self-sufficiency would not endure to be "made low." The "crooked" dispositions of covetousness, ambition, sensual pleasures, and worldly lusts, were not "straightened;" nor the "roughness" of angry, revengeful, haughty, and uncharitable passions "made plain," by this doctrine of repentance. And, from that inefficacy of a preparation, so competent in itself, the history of our Saviour's and his apostles' ministry assures us, it was, that so great a part even of their labours was in vain. Meanwhile, what hath been said abundantly proves,

The Gospel. St. Luke i. 57.

ELISABETH'S full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son. And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced how well this part of John's office was discharged, and how eminently he, above any other prophet whatsoever, deserved the title of our blessed Lord's forerunner, upon the account of his preaching.

2. John was most eminently our Lord's forerunner, not only as a preacher, but as a baptist too; in that his baptism was a solemn rite of renouncing sin; in that it was a profession of obedience for the future; in that it opened the way for a more perfect institution of the like nature; in that it exhibited Christ, as the object of faith, the master and guide whom men ought to follow: for being thus baptized, they were thereby led and consigned over to Him; and qualified for the Christian baptism, which exceeds that other in dignity and efficacy: for here the Spirit accompanieth the water. This confers by its own virtue, actually and immediately, the privileges imparted by that, accidentally and remotely. This confirms and completes that pardon of sins, and those assistances of grace, which belonged to no antecedent washings, farther than as they were figures of, and approaches toward, the Christian; which is therefore by way of distinction and eminence styled, "the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost," Tit. iii. 5.

3. Let us now, in the last place, observe the Baptist preparing the way for Christ, in some remarkable circumstances relating to his person and behaviour.

The first of these is his being foretold by the ancient prophets; both as to the character he should sustain, and as to the successful discharge of it. This we find done particularly by Isaiah, in his fortieth, and by Malachi, in his third and fourth chapters: passages all applied to John, by the evangelists, and by our blessed Saviour Himself, Matt. iii. 3; Mark i. 2, 3; Luke iii. 4—6; Matt. xi. 10. 14; xvii. 11—13. An honour so uncommon, that some have understood him to be entitled "more than a prophet," not only upon the account of his immediately forerunning our Lord; but because his doing so, and the spirit and manner in which it was done, were thought a subject worthy of former and long distant prophecies. Add to this the prediction of his conception, birth, name, manner of living, and ministry, by an angel sent from heaven for that purpose: the same angel which so quickly after brought the like, but more joyful message, concerning our Lord Himself, Luke i. 13—17. 19. 26. The particulars of both indeed as nearly resemble each other, as it is possible for the accounts of persons so distant to do. So circumstantial in this respect was the preparation made for the Son of the great God's approach, by the predictions of him, than whom "there had not been a greater among them that are born of women."

A second particular in his birth. His stock was of that set of men, whom God had chosen of his own, and sanctified for the nearest approaches to Himself in the priestly office. Luke i. 5, 6. Both his parents were of an age that rendered issue unexpected; and his mother besides under a natural incapacity from her youth. So that this child was altogether miraculous; and, as such, a proper forerunner for Him, who was born of a pure Virgin, without the knowledge of man: because the sight and certain assurance of the former astonishing event would, when rightly considered, dispose to the belief of the latter. That this was one intent and use of it, we have the authority of an angel to instruct us; who, to establish the Virgin's faith, in a message unaccountable to reason, and impracticable to nature, urges this argument: "And behold thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age; and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren. For with God nothing shall be impossible," Luke i. 36, 37.

Thirdly, St. John did also "prepare the way of Christ," by his manner of life. This was retired and abstemious, austere and mortified to the last degree; and such a life became a preacher of repentance, who thundered out terrors to the vicious and hypocritical. But, when reproofs and threatenings had awakened the fears and remorse of guilty sinners, and rendered comfort and encouragement seasonable to be administered, Jesus came to declare pardon and reconciliation: and it was no less agreeable to the character He sustained, to be gentle, and affable, and courteous. It was foretold of Him, that He should "not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax," Matt. xii. 20: and therefore, that He might bind up the wounds of penitents cut to the heart, and blow up the least sparks of virtuous inclination, he shewed Himself easy of access to the most profligate, and disdained not to eat and drink even with publicans and harlots for their reformation.

Thus there was a difference indeed in the conduct of that less, and this greater example; but it was a difference of decency and order and use and great propriety. It was not only profitable, but necessary, for bringing all to Christ, that they, who admired the austerity of John, might come to Jesus, for the sake of his testimony; and that they, who preferred the social virtues of Jesus, might come for the love of his own engaging easiness.

4. How "John prepared the Lord's way" in the whole course of his public ministry, hath been already shewed. I add, therefore, in the last place, that he did it also by his imprisonment and death. Although, in the series of our Saviour's actions, we are to place all that we find related by St. John, from the first to the fifth of his Gospel, between St. Matthew's account of his temptation, and that of his preaching in Galilee; John ii. and v.; though our Lord had begun to manifest his glory by some miracles, and received some disciples, and baptized in Judea, while John continued to baptize in Enon, near Salem, John iii. 22, 23; yet He did not so solemnly enter upon his preaching, till the confinement of John made it seasonable for Him to come into the same parts, and set out with the same subject. For the evangelists are express, that, "after John was cast into prison, Jesus came into Galilee, and from that time he began to preach, and to say, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," Mark i. 14; Matt. iv. 13. 17.

Out of this confinement it was, that John, by sending two of his disciples, for the confirmation of their faith, made them at once witnesses of the divine power, and divulgers of the fame of Jesus and his miracles, Matt. xi; Luke vii. Thus he contributed greatly to fixing them in, and inviting others to, the discipleship of that heavenly Master after his death. Upon the news whereof we find those that adhered to him, and had done the last offices of respect to his body, immediately repairing to Jesus, Matt. xiv. 12. And it is probably with her. And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name. And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called. And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them; and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill-country of Judæa. And all they that had heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be? And the hand of the Lord was with him. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel: for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life. And thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people, by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the day-spring from on high hath visited us; to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit; and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

believed not only that they were from thenceforth Christ's constant followers, but that the more considerable part, both of the twelve apostles, and the seventy disciples of our Lord, were first initiated under the preparatory discipline of John.

But his death was farther instrumental to this end, as it raised the esteem of John yet higher with the Jews, who held him "for a prophet before," Matt. xxi. 26. The scribes and Pharisees durst not return a direct answer to Christ's question, concerning the authority of John's baptism, for fear of either condemning themselves, by allowing it; or of "being stoned by the people," if they "should have denied it," Luke xx. 6. The opinion they had of his virtues was such, that some thought our Saviour to be John restored to life; and that God had endued him with a power of miracles to testify his innocence and the wrongfulness of his death. The perplexity which this surmise cast Herod into, proceeded from a guilty conscience, and a dread that the people should revenge upon him the cruelty committed on so deservedly celebrated a person, Matt. xiv. And the subsequent calamities on him and his family, were generally interpreted a particular vengeance, for the barbarity of that murder.

All these circumstances are meant to shew, that the death of John, as it added to his own honour, so must it in proportion add to our Saviour's; and dispose them, who held John in such veneration, to think so much more honourably of the person, to whom he bore such ample testimony; and to whom he was upon all occasions so solicitous to declare the preference, infinitely above himself, to be strictly due. Accordingly the Gospels seem to say, that the prodigious increase of our Lord's fame broke forth and diffused itself immediately after the death of John. A death, in this yet further respect, forerunning his; as it was provoked by the discharge of his duty, borne with exemplary courage and patience, and a martyrdom in the cause of truth and virtue.

Thus, after a long dark night of ignorance and vice, God was pleased gradually to restore light to a wretched world. The law and the prophets, like the glimmerings of the twilight, dawned first. The Baptist, like the morning star, gave notice of its approach: and, in proportion as this disappeared, clear day came on, and the Sun of righteousness arose. God give all them, who live under his shine, the grace to "walk as children of light," and in that "way of peace," for "guiding their feet, in which" He "visited us from on high," Eph. v. 8; Luke i. 78, 79. To whom, with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, three persons and one God, be all honour and glory for evermore. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[1] St. Peter's Day.] This eminent apostle was born at Bethsaida, a town of Galilee, John i. 44, being by profession a fisherman, Matt. iv. 18. He was brother to St. Andrew, and his elder brother most probably; because, in the catalogue of the apostles, he is mentioned and the people obediently to follow the same, that they may receive the crown of everlasting glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Epistle. Acts xii. 1.

ABOUT that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And, because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.) And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him, intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in prison; but prayer was made without ceasing of the Church unto God for him. And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the prison. And behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison; and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the before him, Matt. x. 2. The Papists indeed are very loth to allow this, because they would have him to be entitled to this precedence by his pretended supremacy; and therefore they rely most upon the authority of Epiphanius, who says he was younger than St. Andrew. But the Protestants bring the better authorities of St. Jerome and St. Chrysostom, and many others, who assert that he was the elder brother. He had, in his character, some eminent qualifications, which gave him a distinction above the generality of the apostles, though not what the Papists pretend, a supremacy over them. He was the first of the apostles who publickly professed his belief of the divinity of our blessed Lord, Matt. xvi. 16; which frank declaration of his made our Saviour promise him, that his preaching and confession should be a principal foundation of the church which he designed to build. He, together with James and John, had a particular intimacy with our blessed Lord, as appears by his being with them so frequently in private, Matt. xvii. 1; Mark ix. 2; Matt. xxvi. 37. He had a mighty zeal for his Master, which prompted him to draw his sword in his defence, and to cut off Malchus's ear, John xviii. 26; but withal it must be said, that these good qualities were eclipsed by the cowardice which he shewed in denying his Master, Matt. xxvi. 70, and by his dissimulation, which he used in complying with the Jews in the observation of their ceremonies, Gal ii. 11—14.

After our Saviour's ascension he did singular service in the propagation of the Gospel; he, by one sermon, converted three thousand souls, Acts ii. 41. He was sent by the apostolical college, together with John, to confirm the new converts that Philip had gained to the faith in Samaria, which office they discharged with great faithfulness, Acts viii. 17; though, by the way, this mission is not very consistent with the supremacy of this apostle, which, in latter ages, has been pretended; for such a papal authority as some persons would vest St. Peter with, could hardly have brooked to have been sent upon an errand, and that too with a colleague intrusted with equal powers with himself. He was imprisoned by Herod about the year of Christ 44, and was in a miraculous manner delivered from thence by the ministry of an angel, Acts xii. 7. After this, when the apostles divided themselves to preach the Gospel, (if we may credit the latter Greek writers,) he constituted a Christian church at Cæsarea Palestinæ, called otherwise Turris Stratonis; from thence he came to Sidon, and placed another bishop there: he next converted many of the inhabitants of Berytus, another town of Phœnicia, and settled a bishop likewise in that country: he then extended the Gospel to Biblos, another city of Phœnicia; after that to Tripolis; next to Antandros, a town of Phrygia: proceeding to the island of Aradus, to Balanæa and Planta, he carried on his preaching to Laodicæa, where converting many, and curing the sick, he settled a bishoprick. But besides St. Peter's preaching in these neighbouring towns of Judea, St. Jerom says, he converted many to the faith in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Bithynia, and at last settled a bishoprick, where he himself some time presided in Antioch. Some time after this he came to Rome, as Eusebius, Irenæus, St. Cyprian, Lactantius, and other authors relate: but that he came hither in the second year of Claudius, in the year of our Lord 45, as Eusebius, in his Chronicon, sets it, can hardly be evinced. When he and St. Paul had for a considerable time preached here, their ministry in the Gospel was much injured by the magical arts of Simon the magician. This was the cause, as some later writers affirm, of St. Peter's being thrown into prison at Rome, and likewise of his martyrdom, Nero taking to himself the affront which was done to the magicians, which sort of people he was particularly fond of. St. Peter being first scourged, was led out to be crucified upon the hill called Janiculus, desiring to be fastened to the cross with his head downwards, alleging, that he thought himself unworthy to die exactly after the same manner with his Lord.

That Peter was a married man, is mentioned in Scripture, his wife's mother being spoken of there, Matt. viii. 14; and that his wife suffered martyrdom, the ancient writers do affirm; for Clemens of Alexandria writes thus of her: "It is reported, that St. Peter, when he saw his wife drawn to execution, rejoiced at her being called to so great an honour, and that she was now going to her own home: that he exhorted her and comforted her, calling her by her proper name, and bidding her remember her Saviour; and telling her, that now she was going to be married in heaven." Dr. Nicholls.

The Epistle for this day gives us some account of the sufferings of St. Peter, and particularly of his imprisonment by Herod, together with his deliverance from it. The Gospel acquaints us with his doctrine; and partiangel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals: and so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. And he went out and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision. When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, which opened to them of his own accord; and they went out, and passed on through one street, and forthwith the angel departed from him. And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews[m].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xvi. 13.

WHEN Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven[n].

cularly with the famous confession of his faith in Christ, together with the stability of the Christian church founded upon it. Dr. Hole.

[m] From the narrative in this portion of Scripture arise the following observations, upon which our thoughts may be usefully employed:

1. We have in this, as in a former Herod, a tragical instance of the abuse of power; and of the merciless cruelty into which rulers and great men are betrayed; when once they let go the reins of justice, and become unsteady in the measures of government, for the sake of envy, ambition, jealousy, partiality, or any other corrupt passion whatsoever.

2. Of all those passions, this Scripture points us out one of the most dangerous, affectation of popularity and applause. With this the deadly poison is generally gilded by those, who would insinuate mischief, and persuade to wicked, because acceptable, methods. It was because the death of James "pleased the people," that Herod "proceeded farther to take Peter also," ver. 3. Nor is this any great matter of wonder: for the humours of the people are so extravagant, and their expectations so unreasonable, that whosoever takes his directions from thence is the greatest of slaves. A prince may see this, and repent too late, and wish to retrieve his liberty; but, except resolution, assisted by the grace of God and trust in his protection and assistance, break this chain, he will certainly minister occasion for that, which is my

3. Third observation: the danger and misery of going past retreat, losing all remorse, and falling from one wickedness to another. Herod first vexed some private Christians, then murdered one apostle; and, after that, imprisoned another, with intent to give him no better quarter. But against these melancholy observations, the following verses help us to set another most comfortable one, ver. 5—11.

4. The wisdom, I mean, and goodness of that ever-watchful Providence, by which the evil designs of such wicked men are disappointed, and his faithful servants wonderfully preserved from them.

5. The fifth verse instructs us, how instrumental the intercessions of good people are towards procuring such deliverances. Mighty indeed is the efficacy of prayer, when unanimous and publick; especially if the subject-matter of it be somewhat eminently serviceable to the glory of God, and the benefit of religion.

6. But if those prayers be not presently successful, the case of St. Peter forbids us to despair. "Prayer was made without ceasing of the Church to God for him," ver. 5, 6; but the angel was not sent for his release, till the very night before his intended execution. Thus it is usual with God, for the clearer illustration of his mercy and power, for the exercise of his servants in faith and patience, and for other excellent ends, to forbear the interposition of extraordinary means till human helps and hopes are given over.

7. As the season proper for miraculous operations is, when ordinary methods prove vain; so, when such otherwise inextricable difficulty is over, that season is at an end; and we are left to the use of common means, and the protection of a common Providence again. Thus our Lord commands Jairus to preserve the life of his daughter, by the usual refreshments of nature, which nothing less than an almighty Power had, or could have, restored, Luke viii. 55. And thus the angel here, after knocking off St. Peter's chains, unlocking the prison-doors, and causing the city-gate to open of its own accord, leaves him, when thus set at large, to provide for himself, Acts xii. 7—10. A

James, leaving his father and all that he had, without delay was obedient unto the calling of thy Son Jesus Christ, and followed him; so Matt. iv. 21, 22. Mark i. 20.

plain instance of our duty to be diligent in the use of means, when put into our hands; and not to expect those things should be done without us, which, by the due use of prudence and industry, we are sufficiently qualified to do for ourselves. Dean Stanhope.

[n] It will be useful to point out a few inferences which may be drawn from a proper explanation of our Saviour's promise that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church."

And, first, from hence we learn, what that church is, to which the promise in my text belongs. The term church is of an ambiguous signification. It must therefore be of great consequence to fix a right notion of it, that we may not suspect the truth of our blessed Master, nor bring the punctual performance of this engagement into question, by a wrong application of his words.

Sometimes the church signifies the elect, who are heirs of salvation, by virtue of an inward effectual calling of the Holy Spirit: and, because this inward operation of the Spirit is what we cannot discern, this is called the "invisible church." Against this church the gates of hell do not prevail indeed: but the promise does not seem to be peculiar to them only, becauses it supposes some marks, whereby we may discover who are, and who are not, the persons, to whom it is made good.

Sometimes again, the church signifies that company of men who live in the outward profession of the truth, and own the name of Christ any where in the world. Now their doctrine and worship being open and observable, such as they may be taken notice of and distinguished by; this is, in that regard, called the "visible," and, in regard of its not being confined to any limited place, it is also called the "universal church."

Sometimes also the particular branches of this great body are called "churches;" as St. Paul mentions "the care of all the churches," the church of Jerusalem, the church of Rome, of Corinth, of Ephesus, and the like. In this last sense, it is manifest, the promise is not meant. For those churches mentioned in Scripture, having some of them revolted from the doctrine and worship of Christ, and being over-run with errors and heresies, destructive of the first and fundamental articles of our faith, it is evident that the gates of hell have actually prevailed against them. So that the universal and visible church is plainly that society of persons concerned here. And so long as the Christian religion does not absolutely disappear; so long as there are, any where, men, who continue to hold all the necessary and essential points implied in that confession of St. Peter, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," so long the promise is made good still. The candle is not put out, though the candlestick may be removed from some "particular visible" churches, and so translated out of one country or province into another.

2. Secondly, this promise does not infer, that the church shall always continue in outward peace and splendour. We know, at the beginning after our Lord's resurrection, almost the whole of it, the church representative at least, was contained in that single upper-room, where the disciples assembled privately for fear of the Jews, Acts i. And, afterwards during the primitive persecutions, it was only to be found in deserts, and mountains, and caves of the earth; among such persons who, to avoid the rage of their enemies, served God, not in temples and synagogues, but in such manner and places as the wisdom of the serpent, joined with the harmlessness of the dove, put them upon taking shelter in. Therefore the character of the church is not its being countenanced by human laws, and protected by the secular arm; it lies not in the multitude of its professors, nor in the freedom of its worship; but in the truth of its doctrine, and the sincerity of its members.

3. Thirdly, it does not follow from hence, that the church of God cannot err. For as men may be saved, though they be not absolutely void of all sin; so the church may continue a true church, though it be not totally exempted from all error. All men, as such, are subject to mistakes; but all mistakes do not overthrow the being of a church. Though therefore it should be granted, that no society of men ever served God in perfect purity; yet so long as their corruptions did not overturn the main points of faith, so long as they held fast "the form of sound words," and kept to the foundation; such errors and corruptions, in matters of less moment, are by no means inconsistent with his promise. For the "gates of hell" have not "prevailed," till error rides triumphant, and draws them off from the belief and confession, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." From hence I argue,

4. Fourthly, that holding communion with this or that particular see or set of men, is no necessary qualification of the true church. For the truth of any church lies in making St. Peter's confession, and holding communion with pastors duly qualified, according to Christ's ordinance, to administer the word and sacraments to the people. And they, who continue to hold his doctrine, and this communion, though they may see good cause to separate from some practices, which they think by necessary consequence destructive of the faith, are yet truly members of Christ's church, let them hold outward communion with any particular Christian bishop or regularly constituted church whatever.

5. Fifthly, this promise may be of great comfort to us in these wicked and dangerous days, when heresy, and profaneness, and all manner of impiety and shameless wickedness, do so wretchedly abound: for, though the cause be bad, yet it is not desperate. God may try us, and suffer many to fall off, but He will vindicate Himself and his honour. Error may spread, but it shall not prevail: some trouble his church may have; great distress, but no interruption. And if our sins, which God forbid, should provoke Him to let out this "vineyard to other husbandmen, who will give him the fruits in due season," Matt. xxi. 41, yet religion shall never be totally destroyed, nor can He suffer his truth to fail. But,

6. Lastly, this should be a warning to us, to prepare for difficulties and trials, and to resolve against falling from our own stedfastness. The kingdom of Christ and that of the devil are described as two societies ever at war with one another. And therefore every one who hath listed himself under Christ's banner, should provide for engaging every hour, and fight manfully against sin, the world, and the devil. We should all pray most earnestly to God for the assistance of his grace; we should seek and love the truth; we should all pursue the things that make for peace, and we, forsaking all worldly and carnal affections, may be evermore ready to follow thy holy commandments: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Epistle. Acts xi. 27.

IN those days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit, that there should be great dearth throughout all the world; which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa. Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hand to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And, because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also[q].

The Gospel. St. Matth. xx. 20.

THEN came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom. But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. And he saith unto wherewith one may edify another; we should hold fast to the church, of which we are members, and not content ourselves with believing, but to be sure to live up to what we are taught: always remembering, that, so long as we continue honest inquirers, zealous professors, and holy livers, though God may suffer us in some points to be mistaken, yet his goodness will not suffer us to perish, nor to err fatally; and that the only means to triumph and obtain the crown of righteousness, is to "live soberly, justly, and godly in this present world, and to continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants unto our lives' end." Dean Stanhope.

° St. James the Apostle.] St. James the Great, or the Elder, was one of the sons of Zebedee, and brother to St. John. His mother's name was Mary, otherwise called Salome, a kinswoman of the blessed Virgin. This was she that came to our Saviour with a petition in behalf of her two sons James and John, that one might sit on his right hand, and the other on his left, in the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xx. 21. That this importunity did not proceed so much from the fondness of the mother, as from the ambition of her two sons, whilst they kept their uncorrected nature, not yet sufficiently cultivated by the Gospel doctrine, is plain; because our Saviour directs Himself to them, as well knowing it was they that had put her upon this unreasonable petition: "Ye know not what ye ask; are ye able to drink of the cup that I drink of?" &c. Another instance of the ungoverned passions of these two disciples, and which the evangelical goodness and wisdom taught by our Lord had not sufficiently restrained, was their calling for fire from heaven to fall upon the Samaritans, because of their inhospitable treatment of our blessed Lord, as Elijah had done before on the like occasion. For which indiscreet and furious zeal our blessed Lord gently rebukes them, telling them, that they knew not what "manner of spirit" they were acted by: this cruel imprecation did most certainly shew, they were not led by that gentle spirit which He had taught them; for He came among them, not to teach them by a cruel and bigoted zeal to take away men's lives, but his chief message into the world was to save them, Luke ix. 55. The Spaniards have a notion, that, after our Saviour's ascension, he came to preach in their country, upon which account he is acknowledged the tutelar saint of Spain; but that is a story raised without any ground, no ancient author making mention thereof, and it does not appear that this apostle ever stirred out of Judea during his life, he undergoing martyrdom there very early: for he was killed by Herod in the second year of Claudius, about eight years after Christ's ascension. He was the first of the apostles that suffered martyrdom, being brought to that trial by the wicked vain-glory of Herod Agrippa, who, being newly advanced to his kingdom, was willing to do some popular act to please the generality of the Jewish people, who, being managed by the priests, had conceived a great hatred against the Christians; which he taking notice of, thought he could not do them a more obliging favour, than to slay before their faces one of the chief teachers of this new sect. This was the occasion of the martyrdom of this blessed saint. Eusebius relates this particular circumstance at his martyrdom, out of Clement of Alexandria; Clement in his aforesaid book, asserts a very memorable story of St. James, which he tells of as a tradition handed down from his ancestors; namely, "That the person who had given in information against St. James, and had been witness against him at his trial, when he saw him so readily laying down his life for Christ, he likewise confessed himself a Christian, and so they both together were led to execution. St. James, for some little time revolving in his mind the strangeness of this accident, accosts him with this evangelical salutation, 'Peace be to you;' and he kissed him, and so they both were beheaded together. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for the day reminds us of this holy apostle's leaving all that he had, that he might become a follower of Christ; and teaches us to pray in suitable terms. The Epistle gives us a farther proof of his sincerity in submitting to die for his Christian profession. The Gospel records a very inconsiderate request preferred to our blessed Saviour; and his answer to it. Dr. Hole, Dean Stanhope.

[q] Upon the subject of this Epistle see the comment on that for St. Peter's Day.

them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many ¶.

¶ We are here informed, that the mother of Zebedee's children, together with her two sons, James and John, entertaining a very mistaken notion of Christ's kingdom, besought our Lord that when He should enter upon it, (which they seem to think would immediately follow his resurrection, foretold at the nineteenth verse,) these two apostles might have the privilege of being next in honour to this King Himself. To this our blessed Lord replies, that "they knew not what they asked," ver. 22. Their apprehensions (that is) of the kingdom of the Messias, so often spoken of by the prophecies of old, were gross, and low, and earnal. For, as his kingdom was not of this world, so neither should the manners and advantages of it hold any such proportion or resemblance to those upon earth, as they fondly imagined. Himself was not to acquire and possess this crown, by wars and triumphs, and common conquests; but by sufferings, and shame, exceeding great hardships, and universal malice and contempt. And since his servants must follow his example, as well in the methods of obtaining honour, as in the nature of the honours appointed for their recompense; He inquires whether they were content, and qualified to accept the advantage they ignorantly desired, upon such hard conditions. They, with a hasty zeal, natural to men eager in their wishes, and liberal in promising what great things they would do, answer, that they were ready to do and suffer any thing, and had not the least distrust of their own performance. Whereupon our Lord tells these bold undertakers, they should be taken at their word; and, in proportion to their making it good, they should not fail to be considered for their pains and fidelity. "Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. And he saith unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give: but" it shall be given to them, "for whom it is prepared of my Father," ver. 22, 23. Little doubt can be made, but the true importance of which words is neither more nor less than this, that the sincerity and ability of these two apostles should be brought to trial, by Providence ordering matters so, that they should be conformed to the example of their Master, and suffer bitter things for the honour and confirmation, and great advantage of the Christian religion, as Jesus had done before them.

This prediction, or promise, call it which you will, was literally and punctually fulfilled in St. James, to the honour of whose memory this festival is designed; the Epistle for the day informing us, that, when the malice of Herod had instigated him to vex certain of the church, the storm fell upon this eminent person particularly; and when that tyrant killed him with the sword, then did he, in the highest sense of the words, "drink of his Lord's cup," and was "baptized with the same baptism" that "he had been baptized with," Acts xii. 1, 2.

Respecting St. John, the other son of Zebedee concerned here, Scripture indeed is silent, as to the manner of his death. But, since the cup and baptism imply persecutions and afflictions, even short of death, the same honour cannot be denied to St. John, who, as St. Luke informs us, was both "scourged" and "imprisoned" by the council at Jerusalem, Acts v. 18. 40; and afterwards (as himself says) banished into "the isle of Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ," Rev. i. 9. Besides that, ecclesiastical history mentions his being put into a cauldron of hot oil, by the barbarity of the proconsul at Ephesus, under Domitian. And certainly that man may with great justice be esteemed a martyr, who had undergone such tortures, as nothing less than a miracle could have supported his life under, or delivered him from.

Thus much shall suffice for explaining the "cup" and the "baptism" meant here. But it is of no less importance, to be truly informed concerning another passage now before us, which is, how our Saviour meant, that "sitting on his right hand and left hand was not his to give, but it should be given to them for whom it is prepared of the Father."

The meaning whereof is by no means, what some adversaries to the divinity of our blessed Saviour would infer from it; that to distribute rewards in the kingdom of glory is a prerogative peculiar to the Father alone, and such as no way belongs to the Son. For this Son is that very Lord, whom St. Paul calls "the righteous Judge," that "shall give a crown of righteousness to all that love his appearing." He is that King, "who shall separate the sheep from the goats, and reward every man according to his works," 2 Tim. iv. 8; Matt. xxxv. 31, &c.; xvi. 27. But the design of this passage is to shew, that those rewards shall not be distributed, upon such considerations, and in such manner, as these petitioners vainly supposed. To which purpose we may take notice, that those words, "it shall be given to them," are in a different character in the Bible; which is a mark of their not being in the original, but only a supplement made by the translators. So that the "sitting on the right hand and on the left," the honours and degrees of happiness, are not the Son's to give, in the sense these apostles fancied; that is, He does not give them absolutely and arbitrarily; He is not led by partiality and fondness, or respect of persons; He is not carried by humour, or vanquished by the importunity of friends and suitors, as earthly princes are; but He is limited by the considerations of equity and strict justice, from which it can never be consistent with the perfections of his nature to depart. This then is the purport of the words, "To sit on my right hand and on my left is not mine to give, but," or except, to them alone, "for

For the Epistle. Acts v. 12.

BY the hands of the Apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people: (and whom it is prepared of my Father." And, since we are so perfectly assured, both from the nature of God, and from express revelation, that "every man shall at the last day receive according to the things done in the body;" it follows, that these are "prepared" for those who did most to obtain them. That is, every Christian shall then be exalted to a higher degree of bliss and glory, in proportion as he hath drunk deeper of Christ's cup. As his humility, his obedience, his sufferings, his patience, and his meek disposition, have brought him to a nearer conformity with his Master: so shall he be considered, and be placed nearer Him in happiness.

And thus this answer explains and confirms the parable in the beginning of the chapter. There the labourers in the vineyard, whose work one hour had expressed an equal diligence to theirs who were hired sooner, were in their pay likewise made equal to them, who "had borne the burthen and heat of the day." The apostles, and primitive Christians, in like manner, they, who had the advantage of conversing personally with Christ, or who actually laid down their lives for Him, shall in no degree have the advantage of any other Christians, whose zeal and pious disposition, obedience, and sufferings, have set them upon the same foot of fidelity, and fervency, and undaunted love of Him and his truth. Dean Stanhope.

[r] St. Bartholomew the Apostle.] St. Bartholomew is reckoned in the catalogue of the apostles, which is given by St. Matthew x. 3; St. Mark iii. 14; and St. Luke vi. 14; Acts i. 13. But his name not being mentioned by St. John, but several things being recorded by him of another disciple who is called Nathanael, of whom there is a perfect silence in the other Evangelists, it has made some persons think, that Nathanael and Bartholomew is the same person. This opinion, as far as I can find, was unknown to the ancient writers of the church: the first author that is to be met with who espoused this notion, is Rupertus, who wrote about the year 1130, and is followed therein by Tostatus, and by many learned men after them. They give several reasons, not altogether improbable, why the same person is to be understood by these two names: because the evangelists, who writ the catalogues, join Philip and Bartholomew together, as John does Philip and Nathanael; because, the vocation of all the apostles being recorded, there is no calling of Bartholomew mentioned, unless that of Nathanael be it; because the other three Evangelists make mention of Bartholomew, and not of Nathanael, and St. John makes mention of Nathanael, and not of Bartholomew; which is hardly to be accounted for, unless they were the same person; because St. John makes mention of Nathanael as one of the apostles, John xxi. 2, and his character is not agreeable to any of the apostles, unless it be Bartholomew; because Bartholomew is not a proper name, but is as much as the son of Tolmai, in the same manner as Peter, whose name was Simon, is called Barjona. There is not much to be said against the cogency of these reasons, but that this opinion is but late in the church, the ancient fathers being of another opinion. Nay, if Bartholomew be but a patronymical name, then this saint appears to be the son of Tolmai, or of a family which bore that name among the Jews; for Josephus, in his Antiquities, mentions one Tholomæus.

He is recorded by the ancients to have preached the Gospel in the greater Armenia, and to have converted the Lycaonians to Christianity. Others say he preached to the Albanians, a people upon the Caspian sea. Origen and Socrates write, that he preached likewise in India. But, that he preached the Gospel in the Indies, is a truth which is most evidently confirmed by the testimony of Pantænus, the famous Christian philosopher, who was master of the Christian University at Alexandria about the year 180; but, resolving to take upon him the office of a missionary, went and preached the Gospel in India, and after some time, returning home safe to Alexandria, he made this report concerning his mission; that he found in the hands of some of the Indians, St. Matthew's Gospel in Hebrew, which was brought among them by St. Bartholomew, and that the original book was kept among them to that day.

Some more modern authors relate, that he was crucified, like St. Peter, with his head downwards; others, that he was flayed alive; which last account is most probable, crucifixion being a Roman punishment; and since it is not recorded, that he ever returned from among the barbarous Indians, excoriation was a death which was most likely to be inflicted by the rude cruelty of those savages. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for this day takes notice of God's "giving grace to this apostle truly to believe and to preach his word;" which he did, with great fidelity and success, in the countries of India and Ethiopia, together with the western and northern parts of Asia; where he was a great instrument of rooting out idolatry, and planting the Gospel among them. And from thence we are taught to pray, that God would grant to his church "grace, to love the word which he believed, and to receive the doctrine which he preached:" by his example firmly adhering to it, and persevering in it even unto the end. The Epistle for the day speaks of the many miracles and wonderful works done by the apostles, of whom St. Bartholomew was one, for the confirmation of the truths, which they delivered. Dr. Hole.

It may be observed upon the Gospel appointed for the festival of St. Bartholomew, that the parallel place to it in St. Matthew is appointed to be read on St. James's day: and then indeed more properly, it being occasioned by the request of Zebedee's children, of which James was one. With submission, therefore, I should think, that a more suitable Gospel for the festival of St. Bartholomew would be John i. 43, to the end, which is the history of Nathanael's coming to our Saviour, who is generally allowed to be the same with Bartholomew. The occasion why that passage in St. Luke was affixed to this day was a conceit that St. Bartholomew's noble descent was the occasion of the strife that is there recorded. But, if this relate to the they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch; and of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them: and believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women;) insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks and them which were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed every one[s].

AND there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; same dispute which is mentioned by two other of the evangelists, namely, St. Matthew and St. Mark, it is plain that it was owing to another cause. Wheatly.

[s] The Epistle for the day contains the divine testimony given to confirm the apostle's doctrine, by the many signs and wonders, which they did among the people; and which carried with them such conviction, as to convert the world to the belief of it.

This affords a seasonable occasion to remark, that, upon all extraordinary and new discoveries of God's will to mankind, recorded in Scripture, it appears to have been his constant usage to strengthen their authority by miracles. The power of working these was usually imparted to the persons whom He thought fit to employ as instruments, for publishing those discoveries to the world. In proof of this there is no need to labour; the whole historical part of the Old and New Testaments bears clear and ample testimony of it. For, from the very first call of Abraham, out of a country over-run with idolatry and blind superstition, down to the latest memorials of St. Paul and the other apostles, the narrative of two thousand years' transactions abounds with instances of this kind, so very numerous, that it were an undertaking almost as endless as it is superfluous but barely to repeat them. Let it suffice then to remark, upon this occasion, that the end, such wondrous operations were designed to serve, is not merely the manifestation of God's almighty power, but, generally speaking, the employing of that power so as thereby to give evidence to some important truth, to establish the authority of some eminent teacher, to convince them who did not yet believe, or to confirm such as were still weak and wavering. They who will be at the pains to consider, and compare the facts, and their several circumstances, will quickly satisfy themselves, that this was their general intent; and will easily discern one or more of these purposes, to have been the motives, even where they were not the effects, of them. They ought indeed to have been both: and we may justly think it matter of wonder, that they should at any time fail of their intended success: when that hath been considered, which I desire may be observed in the

2. Second place. That there are few things, wherein mankind seem to be more agreed, than in the acknowledgment and acceptance of miracles, as an authentic and indisputable testimony, that the persons intrusted with such power were employed by God. This sense of the thing appears from the confession and practice, not of such only, upon whom the acknowledgment of the true God, and the prejudices of education, might be pretended to have influence, but of heathens and idolaters too. Thus Pharaoh's magicians confess the miracles of Moses and Aaron to be "the finger of God," Exod. viii. 19. Thus, in the controversy between Elijah and the priests of Baal, it was without any difficulty accepted, as a fair proposal, that he, who answered by "fire from heaven," should be unanimously served and worshipped: and accordingly, upon the prophet's sacrifice being consumed, the cause was immediately yielded. For "all the people when they saw it, fell on their faces, and said, The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God," 1 Kings xviii. 24. 39. Thus Elisha desires Naaman the Syrian might be sent to him, that his miraculous recovery from leprosy might make him know there "was a God in Israel," 2 Kings v. 8. And this effect it had, as appears by his solemn declaration, "that he would thenceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord," ver. 17. Thus again Nebuchadnezzar, and after him Darius, was so affected with the wonderful deliverance of the three children, and Daniel, as presently to reverse their impious decrees, to put to death the advisers of their punishment, to advance these peculiar favourites of heaven to the highest trusts, and to enjoin the worship of the only true God, by a most solemn ordinance, to take place throughout their whole dominions, Dan. iii. vi. Can we, after all this, think it strange, that in a country so much better informed, so much more accustomed to events of this kind, a learned ruler of the Jews should in these terms accost our blessed Lord, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him?" John iii. 2; or, that a mean man, who had been born blind, should take the confidence to confront a whole assembly of Pharisees with this argument, "Since the world began it was not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind. If this man were not of God, he could do nothing?" John ix. 32, 33; or, that a council of wicked rulers should assign this, as a politick reason for conspiring the death of Jesus: "This man doeth many miracles; if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him?" John xi. 47, 48; or, lastly, that our blessed Saviour Himself should put the credit of his doctrine upon this short issue, "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not; but if I do, though you believe not me, believe the works; that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him?" John x. 37, 38.

I forbear sundry other passages to the same effect, presuming that these suffice to make it plain, how received a testimony this of miracles was, and what success it hath used to meet with, in all ages and parts of the world. The obstinacy of some, that have stood out against it, proves it indeed to have been not a compulsive or invincible argument, for nothing can be so to reasonable agents. But the sufficiency of it hath been abundantly seen, as upon other occasions, so especially in the entertainment it prepared for the Gospel, with all whose minds were not before blocked up by those two ordinary impregnable barriers, wilful ignorance and worldly interest. Dean Stanhope.

[t] From the case of these contending apostles some reflexions may be drawn, such as suit the circumstances of men in general.

1. As, first, since the temptations mentioned in the Gospel were poverty, shame, danger, and other kinds of adversity; it may be of use to observe, how well the ends of religion are served by such providences. For they render the virtue of the persons more conspicuous; their patience, and constancy, and trust in God more approved; and especially they vindicate their sincerity from that insinuation of the devil against Job, and the too common jealousy of wicked men, that God is served only for the sake of temporal interest. When adversity falls upon pious people, it shews them to themselves, and to others. It gives them the satisfaction of knowing their own stedfastness; and convinces the unbelieving world, that there is really such a thing, as cleaving to God out of a principle of duty and conscience; that some can abstract from all those advantages and encouragements, for which Christians are often suspected to have a greater regard to the gain, than to the godliness, of their obedience.

2. But, secondly, we ought to observe likewise, what proof is given of our integrity in such cases, and upon what terms any benefit is to be expected from them. Which is, only upon condition of our continuing with Christ in these temptations. Perseverance and faithfulness unto the end, not fainting under tribulation, not growing weary of well-doing; these are the terms, these are the evidences of our virtues, to which a crown of life and righteousness is promised. The Galatians "ran well once," but "they suffered themselves to be hindered from the obeying of the truth," Gal. v. 7; but he, that wins the prize, must run on till he reaches the goal. Several others addressed to Christ, and kept Him company for a while, but they forsook Him again; and the commendation here distinguishes these apostles from such a levity, as those deserters were guilty of. We cannot indeed continue with Christ at this day, in the same manner they did then; because we do not converse with Him as they did, nor see the abuses He suffered in our flesh. But we do continue with Him in temptation, as oft as any difficulty besets us, but cannot draw us off from our duty; as oft as any misfortune assaults, but cannot vanquish our hope and patience; as oft as we see his holy doctrine traduced and vilified, his blessed name profaned, his precepts neglected, his promises and threatenings slighted and ridiculed, and yet slacken not our zeal one whit, nor are in any degree ashamed of being esteemed those simple honest men, which the Gospel calls Christians.

3. Thirdly, if we consider the persons to whom, and the time when, these words were spoken, there is yet this farther comfort to be gathered out of them, that God hath great compassion upon our weakness; and does not reckon a good man's perseverance lost and broken by any interruption, which human frailty and a surprising occasion may make in it. For did not our Lord deliver Himself in these words a little before his passion? Did not every one of these apostles forsake Him? Did not one of them deny Him in a few hours after? Did He not know, nay, had He not already foretold, this scattering and offence because of Him? Yet you see all this notwithstanding, He allows these very persons the character of friends, "that continued with him in his temptation;" and promises a reward for their courage and constancy in so doing. From whence now we have leave to argue, that God does not shew Himself "extreme to mark what is done amiss," but sets a just distinction between failings and faults. That some calamities, when sudden and violent, may put us beside our duty, and prevail too far upon our passions, without the utter ruin of our souls, or forfeiting the praise due to our former piety. And provided we be diligent in calling back reason and religion to our assistance; if we return, as soon as possible, to a right mind, and do well, and lament our offence, all may be very well. For to those, who do not transgress wilfully, nor indulge their passions till they grow into voluntary and presumptuous sins, the slips of mere infirmity shall never be imputed to their prejudice.

4. Lastly, the subject before us teaches us to despise the world, and to long for a better. This, you see, is not the place of rewards; it hath nothing in it capable of being a reward; nothing worth the sufferings and obedience of a good Christian; nothing that can satisfy the desires of a truly great soul. If therefore we would indulge a lawful and commendable ambition, let us seek that honour, which cometh from God only; and endeavour to be persons whom the King of heaven may delight to prefer. If we thirst after plenty and pleasure, none of the trifles here below can satiate our appetite. It must be sincere and lasting pleasure; it must be true and stable honour; and such is only to be had in that kingdom, which Christ appoints to all them who continue faithful in temptations. Which God grant us all grace to do here, that we may have glory for it hereafter. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

[u] St. Matthew the Apostle.] St. Matthew was the last called of the apostles. He had another name which he was likewise called by, and that was Levi; for St. Mark and St. Luke mention him under that name, when they relate his calling. He was a publican by profession, whereby he lived in very handsome circumstances, as appears by his making a considerable entertainment at his house for our Saviour, to which he invited a great many more of his own profession. Some have thought he was one of the Publicani, of which there was a sort of order or brotherhood in Rome, who were the farmers of the publick revenues, whom Cicero calls "the flower of the Roman knights, the ornament of the city, and the support of the commonwealth." These were places of vast profit which gentlemen of the fairest fortunes

The Epistle. 2 Cor. iv. 1.

THEREFORE seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ [x].

in the Roman state procured to themselves, many of them so great, that they would not have exchanged them for Herod's tetrarchate, much less would have gone to have picked up the tolls of a few fishermen in the sea of Tiberias. But the word publican is extended likewise to signify the deputies and servants of the master Publicanus, who was the provincial redemptor, and farmed the revenue of a whole province, or some considerable part of it, from the Roman state. It remains therefore, that Matthew was a custom-officer, placed by the Publicanus, or his deputy, to take up the duties laid upon the fishing trade in the lake of Tiberias; or however, to receive those which were due in the neighbourhood of Capernaum, which was the place of his settlement; for this town seems to be a very commodious place for this purpose, not only as situated upon the lake, but because all vessels, which came up and down the Jordan, must pass by it; and the Portorium, or duty for waftage of persons or goods over the lake, was probably paid here. The Telonium, or receipt of custom, was the custom-house of the place, probably a great table and bench under cover, but open to the sea-side, so that the clerk or customer, sitting thereat, might have a clear view of the ships and lading: and upon this reason it was, that our Saviour, passing by, could see St. Matthew sitting thereat. The wonderful efficacy of the Holy Spirit of God was visible in this man's conversion; for our Saviour said no more but "Follow me, and he arose and followed him," Matt. ix. 16. Indeed our Saviour doing so many miracles in the country about Capernaum might make some respectful impressions upon him, with regard to his character; but that he should become his disciple only by his beckoning to him shews an omnipotent power of a divine grace infused into the heart of this saint, to engage him to leave a wealthy employ, for the want, and penury, and dangers of the apostleship. The feast which he made to entertain our Saviour just after his call, at which several publicans or custom-gatherers were present, gave great disgust to the Pharisees, who thought, with the rest of the Jews, that all publicans were wicked men, and not fit for an ordinary Jew, much less for a holy prophet, to converse with. The usual name which they were wont to give to the publicans was Parisim, pitiful rogues, a name appropriated to rascally fellows, who used to pluck up hedges and pull down walls in the night-time. Our Saviour therefore thought fit to choose one of his followers out of an order of them whom they had the worst opinion of, to shew that the grace of the Gospel was not extended only to good men, but that all men, however flagitious, might be saved upon their repentance. Not that the employ of the publicans was unlawful, for the publicans did with more honesty gather the legal taxes, than the Jews deny them, or revile the collectors of them; but our Saviour chose to make one, whom they thought of a vile character, one of his disciples, to demonstrate to them the prevalency of his doctrine, though they by their perverseness made the worst use of it.

This apostle wrote the Gospel which bears his name about eight years after Christ's ascension, just before the apostles dispersed themselves, to go to preach the Gospel in foreign parts. He undertook this work at the entreaty of the converted Jews in Palestine, who being desirous to have some memoirs of our Saviour's life left with them, that they might have recourse to it in the apostles' absence, St. Matthew complying with this their desire, wrote this excellent Gospel which we have now in our hands. He wrote his Gospel in the vulgar Hebrew, or Syriack, as all antiquities do agree. And it should seem that all the apostles took a copy of it with them when they went to travel. And Athanasius says, that the Greek translation, we have thereof, was made by Jacobus Minor, Bishop of Jerusalem, and our Lord's brother. The province allotted for his preaching the Gospel, as ancient writers relate, was Ethiopia, from whence we do not read that he ever returned, but he probably suffered martyrdom there. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect of the day makes mention of God's "calling him from the receipt of custom to the office of an apostle and evangelist;" and from thence teaches us to pray for "grace, to forsake all covetous desires, and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same Lord Jesus Christ." In his call to the apostleship may be remarked, 1. his diligence and fidelity in the work of the ministry, to which he was called, which is the subject of the Epistle: and, 2. his readiness to obey our Saviour's call, which is the subject of the Gospel for the day. Dr. Hole.

[x] This Scripture is very properly taken into the offices of this festival: which commemorates that apostle and evangelist, to whose holy labours the Church is indebted for the earliest account she now enjoys of our blessed Saviour's actions and discourses: a Scripture equally applicable to him, and the succeeding writers and preachers of the Gospel in its primitive purity, as to St. Paul and his companions.

Their integrity in preaching the Gospel may be shewn from various considerations. Amongst others,

The Gospel. St. Matth. ix. 9.

AND as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him. And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many Publicans and sinners came, and sat down with him and his disciples. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with Publicans and sinners? But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice; for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance[y].

if we look to those rules of living, by which Christians were to walk, we shall find undeniable marks of it, particularly in the following instances:

1. They urged the absolute necessity of a virtuous life, as the natural product of a true faith; and that, without which Christ is called "Master and Lord" to no manner of purpose.

2. They ground the necessity upon the commands of our Saviour, the encouragements and assistances of his grace, the awe due to the all-seeing God and searcher of hearts, the present reproaches of conscience, the certainty of a future judgement, and the eternity of rewards and punishments; each in their kind unconceivably great, according to the good or bad things done in this body. Motives too forcible to be in reason withstood; such as leave no room for indulging one's self in hypocrisy or secret sins; but must prevail, if any can, for "cleansing ourselves from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, and perfecting holiness in the fear of God." And this the apostle seems to have had in view, when professing himself here to have "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty."

3. They inculcated these rules "without respect of persons;" not accommodating their doctrines to the lusts or humours of men; not courting the favour of the great, nor soothing the vanity of the learned and witty, at the expense of truth and their own integrity. They gave all people plainly to understand, that God, in the day of trial, will make no such distinctions, as are but too much regarded in this world; and those, whom this plain-dealing would not go down with, they dared, in conscience of their duty, to disoblige: as knowing, that, whatever were the consequences, they "ought not to go beyond the word of the Lord, to say less or more." A noble pattern for their successors, the ministers of the Gospel in all ages: which they, who are not careful strictly to imitate, betray the cause of God, prostitute their character, and have lost all right to this most valuable comfort of St. Paul before us, of not "walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully."

4. They lived up to the principles taught by them, and confirmed their instructions by their examples. Of how great influence this is, common experience proves. Every one sees the justice of that indignation, with which our Lord rebukes the hypocrisy of those "Pharisees and scribes, who bound heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and laid them on men's shoulders; but they themselves would not move them with one of their fingers," Matt. xxiii. 3, 4. These teachers, quite contrary, declined no hardship, omitted no duty to which they exhorted others; but, like true leaders in this spiritual warfare, distinguished themselves by the most eminent degrees of piety and virtue. They could appeal to every place they came to, "how holy, and just, and unblameable" their behaviour there had been, 1 Thess. ii. 10. Their bitterest enemies indeed, though they sought with all the nicety that envy and hatred could inspire, were not able to find any occasion of reproach in them. The only crime alleged against them was undaunted zeal in propagating Christianity, and inflexible constancy in the profession of it. Which was in truth not a crime, but one of their brightest virtues, and gave another undeniable evidence of their faithfulness and honesty. That,

5. Lastly, Of suffering and dying in testimony of the doctrines taught and written by them. This was the case of every evangelist, every apostle, (St. John only excepted,) so far as any notices of their lives and deaths have been delivered to posterity. And how justly he also may be reckoned among the martyrs, hath been formerly observed. Of what they endured, and how little threatenings and persecutions weighed with them, the book of Acts gives a large specimen. But, after enduring bodily torments, and all that makes this life uncomfortable, to lay down even life itself; to "refuse deliverance;" and neither be softened with allurement, nor broken with terrors; is not this a proof of believing themselves, and being in very good earnest? Can lies and forgeries, can humour and obstinacy, can artifice and popularity, can affectation of novelty living, or of a name when dead, produce one such martyr since the creation? But if some one were so infatuated, could twelve men be supposed to persist in such wickedness and folly? Could those twelve not only sacrifice themselves, but persuade others, that it is their duty to do the like, when called to it; and in this argument succeed so well, that hundreds and thousands should actually do the like; and, for three centuries together, continue to offer up themselves with joy and triumph: and in so great a number, and so long time, not one, when put to the question, discover the fraud, and at once save himself, and do his duty? These are extravagances never to be supposed; and those are effects, that never were or could be produced by any cause less powerful, than a full assurance of innocency and truth. Both which are so evident and illustrious in the first preachers and writers of the Christian religion, that a candid and considerate man may almost stand amazed, how there should remain such a thing as an infidel in the world. He must do so, had not St. Paul here told us, whence this comes to pass: when saying at the third and fourth verses, "If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Dean Stanhope.

[y] It is worth while to consider the readiness of the obedience, with which the apostles resigned themselves up at our Saviour's call: for of St. Matthew it is here said, that "he arose and followed him;" and of some of the rest St. Luke tells us, that, being called, they "left all and followed him." They delayed not the

For the Epistle. Rev. xii. 7.

THERE was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels; and prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Wo to the inhabiters of the earth, and of the sea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time[a].

time, nor disputed the equity or reasonableness of his command; but presently obeyed, and gave themselves up to Him. Of St. Matthew, the saint of this day, it may be more particularly observed, that he, without any hesitation, quitted his publican's stall, and rose from the receipt of custom, where he was sitting: and though he was then engaged in a very rich and profitable employment, the sea of Galilee pouring a copious supply of wealth into his lap; yet in the midst of his affluence and plenty he renounced all, and became a follower of the blessed Jesus: the reason was, that our Saviour being a teacher come from God, an extraordinary person, that brought salvation with Him, as by his doctrine and miracles plainly appeared: it had been folly to refuse obedience to his summons, as it was wisdom to make all haste to come to Him, prepared, as Matthew was, by the wonderful works of our blessed Lord, to receive a due impression from his call.

But, though St. Matthew exchanged a lucrative employment for poverty and hardship; and quitted his house, and all that was dear to him in the world, to attend upon one who "had not where to lay his head;" he was no loser, but a great gainer by the exchange. For he parted with the perishing things of this life, for a much more enduring substance in heaven; and in effect only exchanged a few precious trifles for a far more precious treasure. For this reason he cheerfully obeyed our Saviour's call; and diligently attended his person, to hear his sermons, and to see his works: nor was he discouraged by the mean circumstances of his appearance; for he discerned majesty under the garb of meanness, and discovered the divinity of his Lord and Saviour through the veil of his humility.

Therefore to his readiness in following Christ, he added constancy and perseverance in keeping with Him; he never left his Saviour, for whom he had left all things else, but continued with Him to the last: he followed Him in bonds and imprisonment, and a variety of sufferings, till he arrived at last to the crown of martyrdom. His example may teach us the great duty of self-denial and contempt of the world. This is the first lesson to be learned in Christ's school: "If any will be my disciple," saith our Saviour, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." This is the first step in Christianity, and will lead us on to the rest: but if we do not take this, we desert our Saviour at the first setting out, and then, as He tells us, "we are not worthy of him:" and so we shall be accounted unworthy to receive any mercy or favour from Him, unless we wean our affection from this world, and fix it chiefly on the things of a better. Dr. Hole.

[z] St. Michael and all Angels.] This festival is celebrated by the Church, in thankfulness to God for the benefits we receive by the ministry of the holy angels: and because St. Michael is recorded in Scripture as an angel of great power and dignity, and as presiding and watching over the church of God, with a particular vigilance and application, Dan. x. 13; and triumphing over the devil, Rev. xii. 7; Jude 9; it therefore bears his name. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for the day reminds us of God Almighty's having "ordained and constituted the services of angels and men in a wonderful order;" and thence teaches us to pray, that "as the holy angels always do God service in heaven; so, by his appointment, they may succour and defend us on earth, through Jesus Christ our Lord:" where we not only contemplate the order and excellences of the holy angels; but likewise commemorate the service they do to God in heaven, and the succour they afford to men on earth.

The Epistle tells us of "a war in heaven," wherein "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon and his angels." The Gospel contains our Saviour's advice to his disciples, in favour of humility, and against the affectation of worldly greatness; and his caution to them, not to offend any of the little ones that believe in Him; together with the reason of this caution, from the care taken of such little ones by the holy angels. Dr. Hole.

[a] Amongst different interpretations given by learned men of this passage, there is one which applies it in the most literal sense to the expulsion of the devil and the angels from their seats of light and bliss, after their rebellion against God. For that some of the angels did "sin," and were "cast out of heaven," the Scripture is express, 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6. The particulars of their rebellion and punishment, being a subject of no great use or concern to us, are not indeed described at large.

The Gospel. St. Matth. xviii. 1.

AT the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the Kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the Kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my Name, receiveth me. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Wo unto the world because of offences: for it must needs be that offences come: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to

The several allusions to, and applications of, this matter to other subjects, do however imply and presuppose a sense of literal and historical truth, as their basis and support. And the crime, whereof they were originally guilty, seems, if not a plain and necessary, yet at least a probable and fair deduction from the hints left us in holy writ, to have been pride; and over-value of, and too great self-complacency in, the excellences of their nature and condition; such as, instead of disposing them to grateful obedience, lifted up their minds to a vain affectation of equality with God, at least independence upon the giver and source of all good.

This literal sense of the Scripture, which, by referring it to the fall of the angels, seems best to answer the Church's design in the use of it on this festival, may be serviceable to us in several respects.

As first, (for that cannot be inculcated too often,) by making us duly sensible of the spiritual hazards, to which we stand exposed. If beings so far superior to us in wisdom and power; disengaged from such bodies and their affections, as we bear about with us; happy in the presence of God, and highly advanced in the court of heaven: if these glorious spirits, provoked by no ill persuasion or example from without, did yet sin; and so highly incense Almighty God, as by Him to be laid under an irrevocable decree to everlasting darkness and torments: how should we, poor worms, betray our deluded souls, by vain imaginations of safety, and the carelessness naturally consequent thereupon?

So reasonable and necessary it is, that the fate of evil angels should rouse us out of sleep, and quicken our care. But then, secondly, to render that care effectual, it is no less necessary to reflect upon their fault too, and what it was that caused them to fall. Now this we have seen was pride. The properties whereof are, an inordinate value of any real or supposed excellences, by attributing the merit, the praise of them to one's self; forgetfulness of, and unthankfulness to, the author and giver of them; discontent with the present state of things; aspiring and grasping after more and higher, as is supposed due; and envy at the advantages of all others. By which vile complication of qualities, it is manifest, that pride hath in its own nature the seeds and principles of rebellion, and is the source of malice, contention, and every evil work.

It should raise in us a yet greater detestation of this vice, that not angels only, but mankind also, fell by it. The aspiring to be like gods, and affecting to know what God thought fit to be concealed from them, was the prevailing temptation urged by him, who from his own experience had learnt on what side a rational soul is most successfully attacked. The same disdain of continuing ignorant in matters above our comprehension hath been the bitter root of all the heresies and schisms, that ever infested the church. Vanity, self-conceit, and not submitting to allow any other wiser and better than themselves, could debauch even heavenly beings. And earth was made a scene of misery, by an inordinate desire of that, which to desire regularly, and to possess humbly, is the greatest accomplishment of a wise and good man. So far are they from being truly wise or mortified who are yet untaught to be content with "thinking soberly," and have not ceased to be "wise in their own conceits."

But, thirdly, while we contemplate the wisdom and justice of God, in permitting and punishing the sins of evil angels, and all the dire effects of their malice to mankind; let us by no means forget the difference his mercy hath put between their case, and that of sinners tempted by them. It is true, they offended against a light infinitely clearer, without the impulse of any suggester; and consequently they sinned with more perverseness, as well as baser ingratitude. But, all these, and any other aggravations notwithstanding, it is to the free and unbounded mercy of God, that we owe the redemption of men: while spirits, once so much higher in dignity, and so much more nearly allied to the divine nature, are left under hopeless and irrecoverable condemnation. For who can sufficiently adore the kindness and compassion, which passed by this glorious order of beings, and did not disdain to assume the flesh and blood of poor feeble mortals into the Godhead, that, by becoming one of them, He might exalt them to that state, from which their betters by transgression fell.

Their hearts, which turned themselves away from God, are finally left in that alienation. Our alienation is chosen too, but yet we are not given over to sin. The Spirit of God strives with us, and, by his sweet attractives, regulates our affections when warped, helps us to be sensible of and sorry for our follies, and brings the prodigals back to their right mind. One fault drove them out of the beatifick presence of God; but that one (the grace of repentance not being granted) productive of infinite more, and so at once the increase both of their guilt and misery: we after many may obtain an entrance there: and though our "sins" be "red as crimson, and more than the hairs of our head;" yet may they be "white as snow," when washed in that "blood of the Lamb," by which the victory was gained over the devil and his accomplices, making "war in heaven," Isa. i. 18; Ps. xl. 12; Rev. xii. 11. 7; that blood which overcomes him, no less in the quality of our enemy, than God's. Dean Stanhope.

[b] The meaning of our blessed Saviour, and that which he designed to teach us in these concluding words, I conceive to be this. Not to inform us, that the holy angels in heaven enjoy the presence of God perpetually; nor to assure us that every good man and sincere believer is under the constant care and inspection of these spiritual guardians (for both these things the persons, to whom Christ spoke, most firmly believed and took for granted before). But He intended to shew, that the very meanest, meekest, and most despicable of those "little ones," who believe in Him, are thought not unworthy the very solicitous concern, and never-failing patronage, of the highest and greatest of the angels: such as, in their power and capacity above, answer to the nobility and prime-ministers of state, in the courts of earthly princes: and because the consequences of slighting and injuring those, who are secure of such zealous and such powerful friends, must in all reason be supposed very terrible, "Therefore take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones," says Christ; whom the great God, and his servants, the blessed spirits above, are so far from despising, that "I say unto you, In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

This appears to be the meaning of the passage. At the same time it may be observed, that from the information given us in Scripture concerning the holy angels several useful inferences may be drawn.

1. A reflection upon these ministering spirits being employed for the benefit of good men should powerfully excite us to thankfulness and praise. For what is man, that God shall give his angels charge over him? that these bright guards should pitch their tents about us? and that their joy should be increased by every conquest that we make over sin and Satan?

2. We should imitate this their loving-kindness and condescension, as we have power and opportunity. Beloved, if God and the holy angels are so solicitous for our souls, we ought also to be concerned very tenderly for one another's souls: and by no means to "despise" those, whom even these sons of God do not disdain to attend on, and to serve.

3. This may fortify us in our conflicts with temptations. Whatever be the power, the subtlety, and fatal diligence of that evil angel, the devil, we may comfort ourselves with the thought, that the armies of the most high God, the good angels, are encamped around us, valiant and wise, faithful to their charge, and zealous in our defence. So that we may encourage ourselves, in the language of Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 16, 17, "Fear not; for they that be with us, are more" and mightier, "than they that be against us."

4. The constant presence of these angels with us, and the knowledge they have of our actions and affairs, should make us very careful of our behaviour. They are spirits of holiness and purity; they have an irreconcileable aversion to filthiness and vice; and therefore we ought by no means to provoke or grieve them, by indulging such lusts and practices as they cannot but hate; especially we shall do well to conduct ourselves with all comeliness and gravity and reverence, in our publick and private devotions; that no lightness, or negligence, betray a disrespect of those who stand by us, and overlook us in these actions; and that they, who "always behold our Father's face in heaven," may have no cause to think themselves affronted, or to complain of our rudeness and ill usage to them, in that court above.

But, fifthly, this respect must be so tempered too, as not to run out into excess or superstition. Their knowledge of, and care for us, challenge our reverence; but neither this, nor any thing else, can demand our adoration, or render it allowable to worship and pray to them. They are of a nature more excellent than ours, but still they are brethren: and we must not pay that duty to any of the children, which belongs to their and our common Father only. They are our fellow-servants, though servants in a higher post; but let their station be ever so high, still we must preserve the distinctions, which are due and peculiar to the Master of the family. And therefore "see thou do it not; worship God." For God alone is, God alone can be, the lawful, the proper object of worship.

Lastly, From the several cases of the angels being said to assist and defend holy men in Scripture, we have reason to believe, that the benefit of their protection extends, not only to spiritual, but also to temporal, dangers and adversities: that they shield us from many misfortunes, prevent many sad casualties, and put by many a sore thrust, which our enemies endeavour to make us fall by. Let us then thank God for these bright guardians; let us imitate their diligence and condescension in doing good; let us hearten ourselves with their assistance against temptations; let us behave ourselves, as becomes men under their observation: and not only pray, but endeavour daily, that the "will of our Father may be done by us upon earth," with the same cheerfulness and vigilance, as it is by them in heaven. And let us beg of God, that "as they always do him service in heaven, so they may succour and defend us on earth;" and at last, when we shall leave this earth, that they may conduct us to the regions of immortal happiness, to "the innumerable company of angels," Heb. xi. 22, where we shall be ever with them, and like them. All which we may hope to obtain, through the sole merits and mediation of their and our Lord and King, even Jesus Christ the righteous; who submitted for our sakes, to be "made lower than the angels," Heb. ii. 7. 9; but is now set down at the right hand of God, "angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject unto him," 1 Pet. iii. 22. To Him, therefore, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, three persons and one God, be ascribed, as is most due, all honour and glory, thanksgiving and praise, might, majesty, and dominion, henceforth and for evermore. Amen. Dean Stanhope.

WATCH thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an Evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: for Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. whose memory we celebrate this day, was born at Antioch, where there flourished schools of the liberal sciences. In these St. Luke had his education; and, having passed through his preliminary studies, he applied himself to the study and practice of physick. It is thought that for some years he practised physick at Rome, being a servant in the household of one of the family of the Lucilii, and, upon his liberty obtained, he took the name of Lucas, a diminutive of Lucilius. That this was the "beloved physician" mentioned by St. Paul, Col. iv. 14, and "the brother whose praise is in the Gospel," 2 Cor. viii. 18, the most ancient writers of Christianity do allow; for this is acknowledged by Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, who lived in or next to the apostolical times. Some have thought him to be one of the seventy disciples, but this is asserted without ground; for all antiquity make St. Luke the disciple of the apostles, and not of Christ. The time when St. Luke joined himself to St. Paul, was soon after the contention happened between him and Barnabas at Antioch, in the year of Christ 51. For taking only Silas with him, in his journey to Troas, Acts xvi. 8, it is very probable that Luke was taken into company when he came to that place: for in the whole relation before this time of St. Paul's acts, the author of the Acts of the Apostles (which was undoubtedly St. Luke) says Paul "spoke," Paul "departed," Paul "went," &c. but almost ever after his being at Troas, to the end of the book, he speaks of St. Paul's actions, as if he himself had mingled with them. "We loosing from Troas; we were abiding certain days; we went out; we sat down." He wrote his Gospel about seven years after his conjunction with St. Paul, whom he never left until his death. He is recorded to have written this excellent work in Achaia and Bœotia, whilst St. Paul stayed there, which was in the year of Christ 58. He is said to have written his Gospel to hinder the faithful from being poisoned by the heretical relations of the Cerinthians, a very early race of heretics sprung up in the church. He wrote his book of "the Acts of the Apostles" about three years after, in the fifth year of Nero, and of Christ 61. There has been a general tradition concerning this saint, that he was not only a physician, but an eminent painter in his time, that he painted the Virgin Mary, St. Peter and Paul, and (if we may credit Metaphrastes) our Saviour Himself. How St. Luke disposed of himself after St. Paul's martyrdom at Rome, is not so very certain; Epiphanius says he preached in Dalmatia, in Gaul, Italy, and Macedonia. Others affirm, that when he left Rome, he returned into the east, and from thence he went to preach in Africa, and that he converted the Thebans to the faith. That he at last suffered martyrdom, the best authors of antiquity allow. The later Greek writers relate his death with more particularities, saying, that he was crucified or nailed to the branches of an olive tree, there not being upon the place dry wood sufficient to make a cross for him to suffer on. Dr. Nicholls.

In the Collect for the day he is styled "Luke the Physician, whose praise is in the Gospel:" from which profession he was "called to be an Evangelist," which at first signified in general a preacher of the Gospel, but was afterwards restrained to those four, who wrote the history of the life and doctrines of our Saviour. He was likewise called from a physician of the body to be a "physician of the soul." And thence our Church teaches to pray, "that by the wholesome medicine of the doctrines delivered by him all the diseases of our souls may be healed."

The Epistle contains St. Paul's directions to Timothy for the faithful discharge of the office, to which he was called.

The Gospel gives us a short account of Christ's sending forth his disciples into the world, together with the commission given to them. Dr. Hole.

[d] From what is here said by St. Paul we may observe the constancy of St. Luke's faith. For, when Demas forsook Christ and St. Paul from an inordinate love of this present world, St. Luke kept firm and stedfast to both; "only Luke is with me." Our Saviour had some mercenary disciples who followed Him only for the loaves; they kept with Him whilst any thing could be gotten by Him; but, when that failed, they "drew back and walked no more with him," John vi. 66. We read of others, who for a while received his word with joy; but when any tribulation or persecution arose because of the word, "by and by they were offended," Matt. xiii. 21. The apostle also speaks of some among the Galatians, that they began well, and set out right at their entrance on the Christian course, with some fair and promising hopes of their continuance: "Ye

THE Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest. Go your ways; behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes, and salute no man by the way. And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire[e].

did run well," saith He; "who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth?" Gal. v. 7.

But we are taught other and better things of St. Luke, the saint of this day: who not only began well, but held out to the last; being neither diverted by the love, nor discouraged by the hatred or terror, of the world. He never left St. Paul because he saw him resolved not to leave our Saviour; and so was a constant follower of him, as he was of Christ. He was not, with Demas, bewitched by the sorceries of the world, nor enchanted by the charms of earthly profits or pleasure: but he kept on his Christian course, as well when beset with thorns, as when strewed with palms and roses. In a word, he never shrunk or started aside from the truth: but continued with St. Paul in defence of Christianity, when others left it: and, to crown all, he cheerfully laid down his life, for the testimony of the Gospel which he had written.

2. We may observe here, not only the constancy of his faith, but the sincerity of his friendship: for, when others forsook St. Paul in his troubles and calamities, the saint of this day faithfully adhered to him. "Only Luke is with me." The chief mark and property of a true friend is not to leave another in the time of adversity: and affliction is the best touchstone, whereby to try the truth and reality of friendship. "A true friend," saith Solomon, "will love at all times: and a brother is born for adversity," Prov. xvii. 17. Thus St. Luke continued with the apostle in his troubles and afflictions, in his trials at Rome, and arraignments at Jerusalem: and never deserted him in all his perils and persecutions, but constantly attended him, till he had finished his course, and received the crown of martyrdom.

3. Here is observable, not only the constancy of his faith and friendship, but his diligence in the work of the ministry. He continued a fellow-labourer, as well as a companion with St. Paul, and spared no pains in publishing and propagating the Gospel: in which respect likewise he used the words, "Only Luke is with me." When others grew cold and remiss in this world, as Demas did, who left it to follow the world; St. Luke adhered to his calling, and abated nothing of his zeal and diligence, notwithstanding all the dangers and discouragements he met with in it. Having "put his hand to the plough," he would not "look back," but "continued faithful unto death," and hath, we trust, "received the crown of life."

Thus we see in St. Luke a pattern of constancy and perseverance in the faith; of true and sincere friendship; of unwearied diligence and fidelity in his calling. It is a lesson worthy of imitation, and may teach us to go and do likewise. Dr. Hole.

[e] The following observations and inferences will contribute to our improvement by this passage of Scripture:

1. And first, this spiritual "harvest," and the greatness of it, gives us a fair occasion to contemplate and admire the power, and wisdom, and goodness of Almighty God, in the astonishing success of his Gospel. This is undoubtedly the Lord's "doing," and such as can never be sufficiently "marvellous in our eyes." And therefore we who are, as the Apostle calls his Corinthians, "God's husbandry," 1 Cor. iii. 9, ought to reflect upon the mighty operations of his grace in ourselves and others, with holy wonder and humble thankfulness. We should constantly stir up our zeal and diligence, to answer the good intents of so amazing a Providence, and take all possible care to bring forth fruits worthy of such mercy. For dreadful will be our case at last, beyond what we are able to fear or to conceive, if we shall fall under that aggravation of our other sins, to have received this "grace of God in vain," 2 Cor. vi. 1.

2. Secondly, when the ministers of the Gospel are here called "labourers," this shews us the nature of our calling. That it is by no means a profession of ease and idleness, but of constant and painful care. When these again are said to be "labourers in harvest," this is still a greater reproach to them that are slothful; since, at such times, and upon that emergency, even the laziest are content to work, or are thought inexcusable if they do not. It likewise intimates to us, with what vigour and alacrity we should perform the several offices required of us; since the labour of harvest is not only hard, but, notwithstanding all the hardship of it, usually attended with a sensible cheerfulness and willing heart, above all others. And again, when we are told, that this is the Lord's harvest, this shews us, what end we ought chiefly to propose to ourselves; that neither honour nor reputation, interest nor popularity, must be the things we seek; for this were to forget our Master's, and to do our own business. And, however any, or all those advantages may be the consequence of our fidelity and pains, and such as we may very lawfully desire in their proper place and degree, yet the glory of God, the good of souls, the promotion of virtue and truth, are, and ought to be, the principal, the constant ends we should aim at. Nor is it any reasonable mortification to our diligence, thus not to seek ourselves in what we do: since He who appoints us our task, hath engaged to pay us noble wages; and we have ground sufficient always "to abound in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know, that our labour is not in vain in the Lord. Who then is that faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing," 1 Cor. xv. 58; Matt. xxiv. 45, 46.

3. A third thing to be inferred from the text is, the great care men ought to take, in distinguishing between the regular and true, and those other busy and pragma-

JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God

tical labourers, who, without any warrant or command from their Lord, will needs be "thrusting themselves" into "his harvest." It was God's complaint by the prophet Jeremy of old, "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran; I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied," Jer. xxiii. 21. The abounding of such teachers, who of their own heads intrude into so weighty a concern, is ever represented in Scripture, as a very grievous curse and judgment. And, how God comes to suffer this, St. Paul hath given us some account when he says, "The time will come, when men will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth," 2 Tim. iv. 3, 4. It seems, the curiosity of the people, and their not enduring to be told necessary and plain truths, is the beginning of this mischief: a mischief, which soon grows to dangerous errors, and fatal deceit, and a settled dislike of sound doctrine. For it is scarce to be expected, that they, who set up themselves, should bear the same conscientious regard to what they deliver, as others will, who are sensible they come by the direction, and upon the errand, of their Master; and who know, they must be answerable for the discharge of their duty, to that regular and fixed authority by which they were sent. But still, allowing they contain themselves within the bounds of truth; admitting it were true, which for the most part it is not, that their gifts excelled those of our lawful pastors; yet is there still one prejudice against them, which singly ought to weigh down all their boasted, and even supposable advantages in other respects; I mean, that these are not the labourers sent by the Lord; that is, they have not the same commission derived from Him, nor are entrusted with the charge of souls, as lawful pastors are. This is a warning, which I could not omit, where there is given so fair an occasion for it. And I do, in the spirit of meekness, and in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, beseech all those very seriously to consider it, who have suffered themselves to conceive any prejudice to their own duly established ministers; and who, upon any specious pretence whatsoever, are prevailed upon to make a breach in the order and unity of the Church. And for the rest, I leave this particular upon them, with that exhortation of St. Paul, (Heb. xiii. 17,) "Obey them that have the rule over you;" that is, your spiritual guides, "and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you."

After what hath been already spoken, there will certainly need but little to enforce that, which I design for my last inference, contained in this command of our Saviour. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." The success of each man's undertakings in his respective profession depends upon the blessing of God for making the means effectual: but the success of ministers is more entirely his. In other cases he needs only not forbid, or at most command, natural effects: but in this, when our persuasion bends corrupt minds to truth and goodness, He produces an effect by instruments, in no degree sufficient for it. And therefore, in our daily prayer for "the clergy and the people," we do most pertinently apply to God, as a "God who alone worketh great marvels." For such indeed it is, to turn men's hearts by the ministry of their weak and sinful brethren; who without the continual dew of his grace, must needs plant and water in vain. Dean Stanhope.

[f] St. Simon and St. Jude.] There are two saints commemorated by the Church this day. The first is Simon, surnamed the Canaanite, Matt. x. 4; and Zelotes, Luke vi. 15; Acts i. 13: which two names are the same: for the Hebrew word Canaan signifies a Zealot. There were a sect of men called Zealots, about the time of Christ, in Judea, who, out of a pretended zeal for God's honour, would commit the most grievous outrages; they would choose and ordain high priests out of the basest of the people, and murder men of the principal dignity. It is probable, that Simon, before his conversion and call, might be out of this sect: or, however, some fire and fierceness in his temper gave occasion for his being called the Zealot. He was one of the twelve apostles, and kin to our blessed Lord; either his half brother, being one of Joseph's sons by another wife, as all the Greek fathers contend, or cousin by his mother's side. Most certain this is that Simon which is meant, Matt. xiii. 55, "Are not his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?" There is a tradition, that it was at his marriage in Cana of Galilee that our Saviour was present. After our Saviour's ascension, he is recorded to have preached the Gospel in Mesopotamia; that he preached likewise in Egypt and Africa, is related by others. And (if we may credit Nicephorus, a later writer) that he extended his mission as far as Britain. He suffered martyrdom in Persia.

Jude, the other apostle whose memory is this day observed, was one of the twelve apostles, brother to James, Jude 1, and therefore bore the same relation with him to our Saviour. He was that same Judas mentioned in the verse before cited: "Are not his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?" He had two surnames, one was Thaddæus, which does not seem to be more than a diminutive, or small alteration of Judas, and is derived from the same root in Hebrew as Judas is. Lebbæus is derived from a word in Hebrew which signifies heart, and is as much as Corculum, or Little Heart. He preached the Gospel with his brother in Mesopotamia, Arabia, and Idumæa, &c., and suffered martyrdom at Berytus. Dr. Nicholls.

The Collect for this day prays God, who hath "built his church upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the head corner-stone," to grant us, "so to be joined together in unity of spirit, that we may be made an holy temple acceptable unto him." To this end the Epistle directs us to adhere stedfastly to the Christian faith.

And in the Gospel we are exhorted to brotherly love, as the best cement of that union, and the firmest bond to hold us together. Dr. Hole.

the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called: Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgement of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities[g].

The Gospel. St. John xv. 17.

THESE things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than the lord: if they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep your's also. But all these things will they do unto you for my Name's sake, because they know not him that sent me. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin. He that hateth me hateth my Father also. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen, and hated, both me and my Father. But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without a cause. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth

[g] The apostle here exhorts us to contend earnestly for the faith; by which we understand,

1. That we are to contend earnestly or sincerely for the faith, in opposition to all false or feigned pretences to it.

2. We are to contend earnestly, that is, zealously and warmly, for the faith, in opposition to all indifference and coldness about it. "It is good," saith the apostle, "to be zealously affected always in a good thing."

3. We are to contend earnestly, that is, constantly and perseveringly, for the faith, unto the end, in opposition to all weariness and apostasy: "We shall reap," saith the apostle, "if we faint not."

This however is not to be done by arms; by any external acts of violence. But we must contend for it, 1. By arguments, being "ready always," as St. Peter saith, "to give a reason of the hope" and faith "that is in us," 1 Pet. iii. 15: and we should be always ready, by Scripture and reason, to convince and convert gainsayers.

2. We are to contend for the faith by earnest and fervent prayer; since we cannot propagate or defend it by our own strength. Peter's faith had failed, if Christ had not prayed for him: and ours will fail much more without the like assistance. But though we can do nothing without Him, yet "we can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us: his grace will be sufficient for us;" and if He be for us, it matters not who is against us.

Lastly, we are to contend for the faith by magnanimity and patience in sufferings. So did the apostles and primitive Christians, who overcame all their enemies, not by fighting, but by suffering. They planted the faith by their doctrine, and watered it with their blood; till, by the blessing of God, it grew and overspread the earth.

In short, "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual; and are mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, and the building of us up in our most holy faith." Christ, the Captain of our salvation, was made perfect by sufferings; and his followers, the apostles, attained to perfection the same way: and, if we suffer with, or for Him, we shall also be glorified together.

Let us then contend earnestly for the unity, the purity, and the continuance of the faith: for the unity of the faith, against those who would divide it; for the purity of the faith, against those who would deprave and corrupt it; for the continuance and propagation of the faith, against those who would subvert and undermine it. Till, by fighting the good fight of faith, and living answerably to it, we attain at length a crown of glory, through the merits of Jesus Christ. Dr. Hole.

[h] From this day's Gospel we may learn, 1. The great lesson of brotherly love and kindness, which our Saviour here commands, and charges upon all his followers, and elsewhere makes the distinguishing mark of his disciples: willing them to love their neighbour as themselves; and to do unto all men as they would that men should do unto them.

2. We learn hence that the hatred of the world is no discharge from this duty of loving them, nor should it be any discouragement from it: for our Saviour teaches us, to "love them that hate us:" and here tells us, that "if the world hate us," we need not "wonder, for it hated him before it hated us," and the disciple cannot expect to be better than his Master. It is honour enough for us to be made conformable to his sufferings that we may be partakers of his glory; and we may well be content to bear the cross, which will surely bring us to a never-fading crown.

3. We learn hence the heinousness of the sin of unbelief, which the clear discoveries and revelations of the Gospel have rendered altogether inexcusable. For after all that Christ hath said and done for man's salvation, it must be mere obstinacy and perverseness of will, to refuse or neglect it.

Whence, lastly, we learn, the great danger of infidelity, or sinning against light and knowledge; which our Saviour makes the reason and aggravation of their condemnation; that "light is come into the world, but men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

Upon the whole then, let us take heed, that there be not found in any of us "an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God." Dr. Hole.

[i] All Saints' Day.] The feast of All Saints is not of very great antiquity in the Church. About the year of our Lord 610, the heathen pantheon, or temple, dedicated to all the gods, at the desire of Boniface IV. bishop of Rome, was taken from the heathen by Phocas the emperor, and dedicated to the honour of All Martyrs; hence came the original of All Saints, which was then celebrated upon the first of May. Afterwards, by an order of Gregory IV. it was removed to the first of November, in the year of our Lord 834, as it has stood ever since. Our reformers having laid aside the celebration of a great many martyrs' days, which had grown too numerous and cumbersome to the church, thought fit to retain this day, wherein, by a general commemoration, our Church gives God thanks for them all. Dr. Nicholls.

In the Collect for this day we are reminded of that one fellowship and communion of saints, into which God hath knit together his chosen people in the mystical body of Christ: to the intent that we may continue stedfast in the communion of the Church militant here upon earth, and so be fitted to join for ever with the Church triumphant hereafter in heaven. To this end we pray for grace to imitate their holy lives in this world, that we may be qualified to partake with them in the happiness of the next.

In the Epistle, a seal is ordered by Almighty God to be set on his true and faithful servants: and in the Gospel, our Saviour marks out the persons that are intitled to this distinction. Dr. Hole.

great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen; Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen[1].

The Gospel. St. Matth. v. 1.

JESUS, seeing the multitudes, went up into a mountain; and when he was set, his disciples came unto him. And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying, Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. Blessed are the peace-makers: for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall

[1] The following remarks may be suggested from the love of God to his saints: a due improvement whereof would be the best and most Christian method of rendering to Him, and them, the honours intended to both, by the observation of this festival.

1. First, then, the integrity of these sealed, and that purity of faith and worship so carefully maintained by them, may be of signal use to us, when attacked with violent temptations to sin. It will represent to us, by their example, the possibility of resisting and overcoming all attempts made upon our virtue, by sincere resolutions and endeavours, backed with that grace which alone can render them effectual. It will fill us with assured expectation of, and dependence upon, all such necessary strength and assistances from God, provided we hold fast by Him, and do not tamely desert his cause; which always is the cause of goodness and strength. It would guard us against the dangerous seducements of numbers, and authority, and examples; and not suffer us to love piety and virtue one whit the less, because not valued by the many, or not countenanced by the great. Quite contrary, it would possess us with a terrible apprehension of vices, that have credit and vogue, and are grown fashionable in the world; when we reflect, that these great champions of faith and holiness attained the honour and privilege of God's seal, by an inflexible, even when a persecuted, singularity in the true religion. And this leads us naturally to a

2. Second remark resulting from the eminent deliverances they were "sealed" to. These should convince us, however improbable discouraging circumstances may sometimes happen to render it, that abiding stedfastly by our duty is the best security, with regard to our present interests; it often proves so in fact. Nay, it always proves so, when God, for wise and better purposes, does not see fit to suffer the contrary. For in such cases the justice, the goodness, and the honour of God are concerned, not to forsake those good men in their distress, who made that very distress their choice, and refused to accept any other deliverance in pure love and obedience to Him. Such an assurance that Providence is engaged on our behalf, should, even to private persons, be found a firmer support, than any human appearances of safety or success. But there is another case, not subject to the same reserves: and that is the protection of the Church in general, notwithstanding all the malice and subtlety of its manifold adversaries and insulters: a very comfortable reflection, to all that love the Lord Jesus and his Gospel. Such a one, in truth, as it were heartily to be wished, the dissoluteness of some, the profaneness of others, the industrious propagation of infidelity by a third sort, and, which gives success and encouragement to all these, the general lukewarmness and indifference of those, who ought to oppose and suppress them, had not rendered almost the only anchor of our hope. For never sure could one have expected less, and never yet did religion suffer more from an uncontrolled licentiousness of striking at the very fundamentals of Christianity, than in our age and country. God in his mercy touch the consciences of those, who take, or who encourage, or who connive at, such liberties. God dispose us all, with a becoming indignation to exercise the powers we have: or, if these be too feeble, to contrive new and more effectual methods, for suppressing and reforming them; lest these crying abominations be visited upon our nation, in judgements suitable to the horror of their guilt. But I return, and observe,

3. Thirdly, that the sufferings and rewards of those saints, who died in the cause of religion, ought to be a most powerful incitement to our zeal and perseverance. They were men of like passions and infirmities with us, which takes off all pretence of their virtues being impracticable. The promises of divine assistance are the same still, and therefore the like difficulties cannot be invincible. Their examples indeed are left us, and our memories are refreshed with them for this very purpose, that we also should "run with patience the race that is set before us." Their courage and constancy, their resignation and charity, should be copied by us, as occasion requires. Their sincerity and devotion, the purity of their faith, the innocency of their conversation, their fruitfulness in good works, their contempt of the world, and heavenly-mindedness, should be patterns always before our eyes: because these are virtues that may and should be always in our practice. In a word, let us express our thanks to Almighty God for the advantage of such shining examples, and pay all due say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you[m].

reverence to their memory, by endeavouring to be like them. For, when all is done, the best and most acceptable honour we can possibly do those renowned Christian heroes, is the forming of our conduct upon the model of their graces, and aspiring after the weight and the brightness of their crowns. Dean Stanhope.

[m] The Scripture, read for the Epistle, sets before us the peculiar favour of God towards those faithful servants of his, of whom this festival is designed to transmit an honourable remembrance to all posterity. The Gospel, in order to our more ready attainment of the like advantages, sets before us those good dispositions, which recommend the saints to the care and protection, and exalt them to the dwelling and fruition, of God. For the privileges of good men we have the beloved disciple's authority: for their happiness, and the way to it, both, we have the word of the Master Himself; who at once pronounces such persons "blessed," and instructs us how they come to be so.

The virtues here mentioned, and the particular blessedness appointed to each, are a subject too copious to be enlarged upon. A few general remarks shall be offered on those virtuous actions, and good dispositions, which are prescribed as means proper for attaining the blessings here promised.

Concerning the dispositions prescribed here for the attainment of true blessedness, I observe,

First, That most of them are what we call moral, and many of them social, virtues. The former will be a warning to my reader what men of skill those are, and how far endued with the spirit of Christ, who upon all occasions disparage moral virtues as mean and legal, and beneath the dignity of spiritualized Christians; who blame us for not preaching Jesus Christ, and his Gospel, when we preach what Jesus Christ Himself preached and practised; who slanderously misrepresent this established Church as derogating from faith and grace, because her ministers urge upon their people those good works which our Saviour says, in this very chapter, ought so to shine as to be "seen of men," Matt. v. 16; which St. James demands as the necessary evidence of a true and living "faith," James ii. 14, &c.; which St. Paul declares to be the "fruits of the Spirit," Gal. v. 22; Ephes. v. 9; and which, if a man "do not," St. John pronounces him to be, "not of God, but of the devil," 1 John iii. 10. How dangerous is the delusion of those poor souls who give themselves up to the guidance of such teachers! How safe and comfortable that communion, whose guides, in this regard, bear no reproach but what falls upon the apostles and their blessed Master Himself! For so long as their Epistles are allowed, we shall never be convicted for thus detracting from grace and faith; and so long as his sermon on the mount stands upon record, this will vindicate our endeavours to bring our flocks to heaven, by taking the way that Christ first led them in.

But I likewise observed that many of them are social virtues; such as mankind are benefited and endeared to each other by. Of this kind are humility, and meekness, and mercy, and peaceableness (and if, as some have done, we shall interpret the sixth verse of justice in our dealings, we may add righteousness also). Now it is plain God could not have expressed a greater friendliness for the common good of the world, and the comforts of society, than by first enjoining the virtues that promote these excellent ends; and then providing such ample compensation in another world for habits and practices, which self will be always opposing in this world. So plainly is he the best Christian who is the greatest benefactor to order, and peace, and love; and so much more precious is an active charity than an idle and unprofitable, though never so rapturous contemplation, in his eyes who prefers "mercy before sacrifice," and who is ever doing good to all his creatures.

2. I observe of these virtues, secondly, That they are plain and easy marks to judge of our blessedness by. Many of them are such as will render themselves conspicuous to other people; but it is impossible for any of them not to be discernible to a careful examiner of his own breast; and this is an inquiry which deserves all our care; for since all of us cannot but desire to be happy, and since we must be so or otherwise, according as we excel or are defective in these good qualities; who that is so, would want the satisfaction of knowing it? Who that is not, would not gladly be awakened by such a sense of his misery as might effectually engage his utmost endeavours to become so? The spirit and temper of a Christian, as here described, does indeed differ greatly from that of the world; and this difference is another argument for our circumspection, without which men are too apt to flatter their own consciences, because like unto, or not worse than, the generality of them they live among. But, alas! this fallacy, if indulged, will ruin all; for it is not custom, or common opinion, but the rules and measures of the Gospel by which this most concerning point must be determined. And let all the world say, or act, as they please, it is not more certain that the persons thus qualified shall, than it is that none but they (ordinarily speaking) shall ever partake of the blessedness here promised.

3. Lastly, When this inquiry is made, we must not content ourselves with a partial return to it, or imagine that one or a few of these qualities will entitle us to happiness, if they be manifestly not accompanied by the rest; for without entering into any niceties about the number, the order, or the necessary connexion of the virtues here enjoined, it is evident from the whole tenor of Scripture, that God requires, in every one of us, all the dispositions of mind here mentioned, and looks that each should exert its proper acts as fit occasions offer. The merciful shall obtain no mercy from God, if he be impure; nor shall the pure see God, if he be not peaceable. In short, they are all bound upon us by the same authority, and all must go to the composition of a perfect Christian. Even the preparation to undergo persecution for righteousness' and Christ's sake is necessary, though God may never bring us into circumstances of reducing that readiness into act. But persecution alone had never exalted the martyrs and confessors of this day, had not their other virtues, like so many jewels, adorned and added lustre to that crown they now wear in heaven: the brightness whereof we justly praise God for; and do best express our thanks, by aspiring after it in the way they have gone before us. Which may He give us grace to do, for his blessed Son's sake, the Captain of their and our salvation, Christ Jesus. Dean Stanhope.

THE ORDER OF THE

ADMINISTRATION[n] OF THE LORD'S SUPPER,

OR

HOLY COMMUNION[o].

[n] The Order of the Administration &c.] Since the death of Christ hath reconciled God to mankind, and his intercession alone obtains all good things for us, we are enjoined to make all our prayers in his name; and, as a more powerful way of interceding, to commemorate his passion by celebrating the holy Eucharist, which in the purest ages was always joined to their publick and common prayers, Acts ii. 42. And to evidence our Church wishes it were so still, she appoints a great part of this office to be used on all Sundays and holy-days, and orders the priest to say it at the altar, the place where all the prayers of the church of old were wont to be made, because there was the proper place to commemorate Jesus our only Mediator, by whom all our prayers become accepted. And hence the ancients call this office "the Service of the Altar," which in the time of celebration was then also, as our rubriek now enjoins, covered with a fair linen cloth. As for the primitive and original form of administration, since Christ did not institute any one method, it was various in divers churches, only all agreed in using the Lord's Prayer, and reciting the words of institution, which therefore some think was all the apostles used: but their successors in several churches added several devout forms thereunto, which being joined to the original order used by the founder of each church, was for greater honour called by the name of that first author: and hence we have now the Liturgy used at Jerusalem, called "The Liturgy of St. James;" that of Alexandria, called "The Liturgy of St. Mark;" that of Rome, called "The Liturgy of St. Clement;" with others of lesser value: which by the fancy of adding to them in every age, have contracted many superstitions of later times, and yet do still contain many genuine and substantial pieces of true primitive devotion, easily distinguished from the modern and corrupt additions. But since none of these apostolical Liturgies were believed of divine institution, St. Basil and St. Chrysostom made new forms for their own churches, now generally used in the East: and St. Ambrose and St. Gregory the Great composed Sacramentaries for their several churches; and the Christians in Spain had a peculiar order for this office, called "The Mozarabic form;" the Gallican church had another distinct from all these; and St. Gregory was so far from imposing the Roman Missal on this Church of England, that he advises Augustine the monk to review all Liturgies, and take out of them what was best, and so to compose a form for this nation. And when the Roman Missal (afterward imposed here) was shamefully corrupted, our judicious Reformers made use of this ancient and just liberty; and, comparing all Liturgies, they have out of them all extracted what is most pure and primitive, and so composed this admirable office, which, as Bishop Jewel affirms, "comes as nigh as can be to the apostolick and ancient Catholick Church," and indeed is the most exact now extant in the Christian world, the explaining whereof will effectually serve to assist the communicant in order to a worthy preparation before the receiving, devout affections in receiving, and the confirming of his holy purposes afterwards: for it doth instruct us in all that is necessary to be known, and to be done in this sacred and sublime duty, and is contrived in this curious method.

2. The whole communion office consists of four parts. First, a more general preparation to the Communion, and as either common to the whole congregation in the exercise of, 1. Repentance, by "the Lord's Prayer, the Collect for Purity," and "the Ten Commandments." 2. Holy desires, by "the Collects for the King," and "the Day." 3. Of obedience, by the hearing of the "Epistle and Gospel." 4. Of faith, by repeating "the Creed." 5. Of charity, by "the Offertory" and "the prayer for the holy Catholick church." Or else this general preparation is proper to those who ought to communicate, namely, "the warning before the communion," and "the exhortation to it." Secondly, here is the more immediate preparation, contained in, 1. The proper instructions, in "the Exhortation at the Communion," and "the immediate invitation." 2. The form of acknowledging our offences, in "the Confession." 3. The means of ensuring our pardon, by "the Absolution," and "the Sentences." 4. The exciting our love and gratitude "in the Preface" and "the Hymn" called "Trisagium." Thirdly, here is the celebration of the mystery consisting of, 1. The communicant's humble approach, in "the Address." 2. The minister's blessing the elements, in "the Prayer of Consecration." 3. His distributing them according to "the form of Administration." Lastly, here is the post-communion, containing, 1. Prayers and vows, in "the Lord's Prayer, the first and second Prayers after the Communion." 2. Praises and thanksgiving, in "the Gloria in Excelsis." 2. The dismission by "the final Blessing." Dean Comber.

¶ And if any of those be an open and notorious evil liver[q], or have done any wrong to his neighbours by word or deed, so that the Congregation be thereby

[o] Or holy Communion.] This service is so called in the Liturgy: and well it were that the piety of the people were such, as to make it always a communion. The Church, as appears by her pathetical exhortation before the Communion, and the rubrick after it, labours to bring men oftener to communicate than she usually obtains. Private and solitary communions, of the priest alone, she allows not; and therefore, when others cannot be had, she appoints only so much of the service, as relates not of necessity to a present communion, and that to be said at the holy table: and upon good reason; the church thereby keeping, as it were, her ground, visibly minding us of what she desires and labours towards, our more frequent access to that holy table: and in the mean while, that part of the service which she uses, may perhaps more fitly be called "the second service" than "the Communion." And so it is often called, though not in the rubrick of the Liturgy, yet in diverse fast-books, and the like, set out by authority. If any should think, that it cannot properly be called the second service, because the morning service and Litany go before it, which indeed are two distinct services; whereby this should seem to be the third, rather than the second service; it is answered, that sometimes the "Communion Service" is used upon such days as the Litany is not; and then it may, without question, be called the second service. Nay, even then, when the Litany and all is used, the Communion service may be very fitly called the second service: for though, in strictness of speech, the Litany is a service distinct, yet in our usual acceptation of the word service, namely, for a complete service with all the several parts of it, psalms, readings, creeds, thanksgivings, and prayers; so the Litany is not a service, nor so esteemed, but called "the Litany," or supplications; and looked upon sometimes, when other offices follow, as a kind of preparative, though a distinct form, to them, as to "the Communion, Commination, &c." And therefore it was a custom in some churches, that a bell was tolled, while the Litany was saying, to give notice to the people, that the Communion service was now coming on. Bp. Sparrow.

Of the many compellations given to this sacrament in former ages, our Church has very wisely thought fit to retain these two in her publick service, as those which are most ancient and scriptural. As for the name of "the Lord's supper," which name the papists cannot endure to have this sacrament called by, because it destroys their notion of a sacrifice, and their use of private mass, we find this given to it, as its proper name in the apostles' time by St. Paul himself, "when ye come together into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper," 1 Cor. xi. 20. And this name is frequently given to it by ancient writers. So for "the Communion;" this is plainly another scriptural name of the same holy sacrament. "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?" 1 Cor. x. 16. Which name is given to it, partly, because by this we testify our communion with Christ our head; partly, because it unites us together with all our fellow-Christians; partly, because all good Christians have a right to partake of it: hence with St. Chrysostom and St. Basil "to communicate" is the common word to express the participation of this sacrament. Dr. Nicholls.

[p] So many as intend to be partakers—shall signify their names &c.] The reason of this injunction is, that the minister of the parish may have time to inform himself of the parties who design to receive: so that if there be any among them who are not duly qualified, he may persuade them to abstain for some time; or, in case of their refusal, repel them. Now in several cases persons may be unqualified to partake of this sacrament, either by the prescript of God's word, or by the canons of the Church.

1. A want or a contempt of the rite of Confirmation unqualifies persons to receive: for the rubrick of the Common Prayer, which is confirmed by the Act of Uniformity, says, "No one shall be admitted to the holy Communion, until such time as he be confirmed, or be ready and desirous to be confirmed." This is agreeable to the provisions of the ancient church. And the only reasonable impediment to Confirmation is the want of a bishop near the place.

2. Persons excommunicate, or who are doing penance by church censure for any notorious fault, are unqualified to receive; for such persons are shut out from the Communion, and therefore called excommunicate.

3. Persons under frenzy are unqualified to partake of the holy Communion. And all persons, under the foregoing want of qualification, may lawfully be refused admission to the Communion by the minister: for the ecclesiastical law imposes great penalties upon the minister, who shall give them the Communion in such cases.

4. A person may be unqualified by notorious wickedness, or flagitiousness of life. But of this more in the next note. Dr. Nicholls.

[q] And if any of those be an open and notorious evil liver, &c.] In the primitive times, when discipline was strictly maintained, all such persons, as soon as known, were put under censure: but if, before censure, they offered themselves at the Communion, they were repelled. And indeed such severe discipline might not be amiss, whilst it was grounded only upon piety and zeal for God's honour, as it was in those devout times. But afterwards, some persons being debarred from the Communion out of private pique and resentment, an imperial injunction prohibited "all, both bishops and presbyters, from shutting out any one from the Communion, before just cause be shewn, that the holy canons do give them power so to do." And the canon law did not allow a discretionary power to the priest to thrust away every ill person from the sacrament: "a vicious person, offering himself to receive the Communion, is not to be expelled, but is to be carried privately aside, and to be exhorted not to receive the Communion." Indeed the later canonists did interpret this only of occult crimes, and such as were not generally known; allowing only persons "notoriously guilty" to be expelled: and of this opinion were the compilers of our rubricks in Edward the Sixth's time, as appears from their wording this rubrick, "If any be an open and notorious evil liver, &c." But, however, they limited this discretionary power of the minister, obliging him, even in "notorious" crimes, to "admonish" such persons first to abstain, and only upon obstinacy to repel. But, nevertheless, this formerly gave occasion to several exceptions and disputes; and therefore, in the last revision of the Common Prayer, repulsion was not left to the absolute power of the minister, but he was obliged to give notice thereof to the diocesan, and to take his advice therein. And still it remains so uncertain, what is "notoriety," both in presumption, law, and fact, that a minister is not out of danger of transgressing his rule, if, before judicial conviction of a crime, offended; the Curate, having knowledge thereof, shall call him and advertise him, that in any wise he presume not to come to the Lord's Table until he hath openly declared himself to have truly repented and amended his former naughty life, that the Congregation may thereby be satisfied, which before were offended; and that he hath recompensed the parties, to whom he hath done wrong; or at least declare himself to be in full purpose so to do, as soon as he conveniently may.

¶ The same order shall the Curate use[r] with those betwixt whom he perceiveth malice and hatred to reign; not suffering them to be partakers of the Lord's Table, until he know them to be reconciled. And if one of the parties so at variance be content to forgive from the bottom of his heart all that the other hath trespassed against him, and to make amends for that he himself hath offended; and the other party will not be persuaded to a godly unity, but remain still in his frowardness and malice: the Minister in that case ought to admit the penitent person to the holy Communion, and not him that is obstinate. Provided that every Minister so repelling any, as is specified in this, or the next precedent Paragraph of this Rubrick, shall be obliged to give an account of the same to the Ordinary within fourteen days after at the farthest. And the Ordinary shall proceed against the offending person according to the Canon.

he goes farther than admonishing any person to abstain. Dr. Nicholls. Our law in England will not suffer the minister to judge any man as a notorious offender, but him who is convicted by some legal sentence. Bp. Andrewes.

Notoriety in fact is one thing; and notoriety in presumption is another. And in either case it should be a notoriety in law too, to indemnify the minister for proceeding upon the rubrick, or to render him safe, in point of law, for repelling any person from the Communion.

Upon the whole of the matter, however, though this rubrick may "require some explanation," as Bishop Cosin remarks, "for the avoiding of disputes and doubts between the communicants and curates; yet, if it be taken in all its parts, namely, that no person, however "notoriously wicked," shall be withheld from the Communion, till he be admonished to withdraw himself; and that, when he is repelled upon his obstinacy, it is only till such time as the advice of the ordinary can be had therein, to whom the curate is obliged to give early notice of such his act; it seems in this view the best, and I think the only ecclesiastical, rule, we have to go by in such case: nor doth it appear liable to exceptions, unless it be in that particular, of how far we are safe in acting according to it.

But, as this is properly a point of law, it is not so fit for me to undertake any determination of it, it must be left to the gentlemen of that profession. Only thus much I would put in; that, if a clergyman's conduct in this matter shall appear to be upright, dispassionate, and disinterested, and I wish it may never appear otherwise, so as to gain the approbation of reasonable and indifferent persons, which I think it would gain in all notorious and flagrant cases, which are those mentioned in the Rubrick, it is to be hoped and presumed, that the interpreters of the law would, in their turn too, shew him all the favour and regard they could. Archdeacon Sharp.

[r] The same order shall the Curate use &c.] The minister here seems to have power given him, to deny the sacrament upon his own personal knowledge of the party's unfitness to receive it. There is only one instance indeed of this unfitness mentioned; namely, in cases where he "perceiveth malice and hatred to reign," in which cases "he is to use the same order as before," of admonishing, and, upon obstinacy, of excluding from the Communion. And this too without regard to the notoriety of the malice or the offence given thereby to the congregation. And by parity of reason, what he is allowed to do upon his own knowledge in one case, he may be presumed to have the liberty of doing in any other that is parallel; that is, where he himself is equally convinced that he has a just and sufficient cause, according to the canons, to refuse the Sacrament, though at the same time he cannot produce any legal testimony of the crime for which he debars the party from communicating.

Hence there arises another question, different from the former; namely, whether a minister ought at any time, by denying the Sacrament, to pass a publick and open censure upon secret crimes, to which none are privy but the parties and himself, and that perhaps by accident, as may be, and sometimes hath been declared to be, the case.

Upon the whole, the conclusion here is the same as in the former point; namely, that every minister must be his own judge and guide in extraordinary occurrences, which come not within the letter or supposed meaning of the rulers that are set him by authority for his direction. Only it will greatly concern him to act with the utmost care, fidelity, and circumspection, that he do not either deprive any persons of the privilege of Christian communion, or set upon them such a publick mark of infamy and disgrace as a repulse from the Sacrament is commonly held to be, without a real necessity to justify his conduct herein. Archdeacon Sharp.

[s] The Table,] Altar was the name by which the holy board was constantly distinguished for the first three hundred years after Christ; during all which time it does not appear that it was above once called "table," and that was in a letter of Dionysius of Alexandria to Xystus of Rome. And, when in the fourth century Athanasius called it a "table," he thought himself obliged to explain the word, and to let the reader know that by "table" he meant "altar," that being then the constant and familiar name. Afterwards indeed both names came to be promiscuously used; the one having respect to the "oblation" of the eucharist, the other to the "participation:" but it was always placed altar-wise in the most sacred part of the church, and fenced in with rails to secure it from irreverence and disrespect. Wheatly.

In King Edward's first service book the word "altar" was permitted to stand, as being the name that Christians for many hundred years had been acquainted withal. Therefore when there was such pulling down of altars, and setting up of tables, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, she was fain to make an injunction to restrain such ungodly fury; and appointed decent and comely tables covered to be set up again in the same place, where the altars stood: thereby giving an interpretation to this clause in our Communion-book. For the word "table" here stands not exclusively, as if it might not be called an "altar," but to shew the indifferency and liberty of the name; as of old it was called "mensa Domini," the table of the Lord: the one having reference to the participation, the other to the oblation of the eucharist. Bp. Overall.

It is called an "altar," 1. Because the holy eucharist being considered as a sacrifice, we offer up the commemoration of that sacrifice which was offered upon the cross. 2. We offer with the action prayers to God for all good things, and we need not fear to call the whole action by the name of a sacrifice, seeing part of it is an oblation to God of hearty prayers, and it is not unusual for that to be said of the whole, which is exactly true but of one part: and as the word "sacrifice" may be used without danger, so also the ancient church did understand it.

And it is called a "table," the eucharist being considered as a sacrament; which is nothing else, but a distribution and application of the sacrifice to the receivers, and the proper use of a table is to set food upon, and to entertain guests, both which are applicable to this. Clutterbuck.

[t] —having a fair white linen cloth upon it,] It was the practice of the primitive church to have the altar covered with a clean linen cloth. In the Sacramentary of St. Gregory it is called "Palla altaris," to distinguish it from the "Corporis palla," or the cloth thrown over the consecrated bread. The Scotch Liturgy orders, that "the holy table at the Communion time should have a carpet, and a fair white linen cloth upon it, with other decent furniture, meet for the high mysteries there to be celebrated." And by our own canons, at all other times, when divine service is performed, it is to be "covered with a carpet of silk, or rather decent stuff, thought meet by the ordinary of the place, if any question be made of it; which was originally designed for the clean keeping of the said" [white linen] "cloth;" though the chief use of it now is for ornament and decency. Dr. Nicholls, Wheatly.

[u] —shall stand in the Body of the Church, or in the Chancel,] Custom has generally prevailed that it should stand in the chancel; and our governours manifestly approve it. And, if in the chancel, it should stand close to the east wall; the shorter sides or ends of it pointing northward and southward. Dr. Bennet.

The words "where morning and evening prayer are appointed to be said," ought to have been expunged, after the place was transferred from the table to the reading-desk. Shepherd.

[x] And the Priest standing] "We pray standing," saith St. Augustin, "which is a sign of the resurrection," at the time of Easter: whence also on all Lord's days that practice is observed at the altar. Bp. Cosin. See page 35, note a.

[y] And the Priest standing at the North side of the Table] Wherever the table be placed, the priest is obliged to "stand at the north side," (or end thereof, as the Scotch Liturgy expresses it; which also orders, that it "shall stand in the uppermost part of the chancel or church,") the design of which is, that the priest may be the better seen and heard; which, as our altars are now placed, he cannot be but at the north or south side. And therefore the north side, being the right hand or upper side of the altar, is certainly the most proper for the officiating priest, that so the assisting minister (if there be one) may not be obliged to stand above him. And Bp. Beveridge has shewn that whenever, in the ancient liturgies, the minister is directed to stand "before" the altar, the north side of it is always meant. Wheatly.

This seems to have been ordered, for the purpose of avoiding the fashion of the priest's standing with his face towards the east, as is the Popish practice. L'Estrange.

This rubrick is to be understood even of that part of the office, by which another rubrick, namely, the first at the end of the office, is appointed "to be said when there is no Communion." This case will admit of exceptions from unforeseen circumstances. For, since the customary placing of altars in chancels, it becomes almost impossible in large churches, and where the chancels are almost equal in length to the churches themselves, to perform that part of the Communion service, which is to be read always on Sundays and holy-days, at the Lord's table, without quite defeating the intention of its being read at all; namely, "that it should be heard of the people." But then, pray let us observe further, that where this necessity for breaking through the rubrick cannot be pleaded by us; that is, where this service "may be conveniently enough performed at the table itself," situated in the chancel; there will be no excuse for us for reading it in the desk; as it is but too commonly done in our churches, contrary to the letter and plain meaning of the rubrick. Archdeacon Sharp.

It was the custom of the ancients, that all things, which pertained to the celebration of the Lord's supper, should be said at the altar. In this celebration there is hardly any difference between us and the Protestants in Germany, but that among us the prayers are said by the bishop or minister at the altar, but among them in the desk: in which matter they do not agree with the ancients. Bp. Cosin.

As the Church gives it the name of the "Communion Service," so she orders it to be read at the communion table: and thus by retaining the ancient place and name, as memorials of her primitive zeal, she testifies to all her children, that there ought to be now in these days, as in the days of old, an holy Communion, whenever this service is appointed; that is, on every Lord's day and on every holy-day, whether festival or fast. Dr. Bisse.

It was an ancient custom of the Church, to be traced up as high as the third century, to sing an anthem in this place, called the "Introit;" because, while this was singing, the priest made his introit, that is, entrance, within the "septum" or rail of the altar; which

OUR Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. Amen.

The Collect[a].

ALMIGHTY God, unto whom all hearts be open[b], all desires known, and from whom no secrets Acts i. 24. Heb. iv. 13. Ps cxxxix. 1—3; xxxviii. 9.

introit was usually a psalm suited to the day or solemnity. And this custom was ordered in the first book of Edward the Sixth; and, though omitted in the rubrick of the second book, yet it has been, and is still, continued down in our cathedral churches, and in quires and places where they sing.

Now in many parish churches, instead of this anthem, is commonly sung a psalm: which is very proper, though the minister should not go up to the communion table; and rather the more so when he does: because this interposal of a psalm makes a separation and distinction between the two services, which ought to be thus made by distance of time, when it cannot be done by difference of place. Not but in all parish churches, as well as in quires, where it can be done with convenience to the congregation, this service ought regularly to be said at the Lord's table: a thing, which Bishop Beveridge, that great saint and ornament of our Church, and great admirer and promoter of our Liturgy, much desires and insists upon, as useful to remind people, that there ought at least to be a sacrament, though there be not, on every Sunday and holy-day. Dr. Bisse.

[z] — shall say the Lord's Prayer.] This holy sacrament, and this divine prayer, had one and the same author; and therefore the Lord's Prayer must be the most proper preface to the Lord's supper, in the celebration of which the primitive church always used this prayer, as the Fathers testify; and St. Jerom affirms that Christ Himself taught it his apostles to be said at the holy Communion. It seems indeed that our Saviour intended it should be joined to all our offices of devotion, because He ushers it in with this injunction, "When ye pray, say Our Father, &c." Luke xi. 2. In compliance therewith, as the Church hath again placed it at the entrance into this service, so let us repeat it with a fresh devotion: considering that these, being the words of the Son of God, will, if duly repeated, make way for the acceptance of all the rest of our petitions and services. Dean Comber.

When this divine form of prayer is said, the people, being humbly on their knees, are to accompany the minister, not only in their hearts, but with their lips. For, though it be not particularly ordered in this place, yet it is in the rubrick after the Confession in the "Order for Morning Prayer:" where the minister is to use the Lord's Prayer, "the people also kneeling, and repeating it with him, both here, and wheresoever else it is used in divine service." Archdeacon Yordley.

The reason of the Church's appointment, that the Lord's Prayer should be said by the whole congregation, is to shew a peculiar regard to this divine form of our Lord's inditing above all human compositions, for "full of grace were his lips" above the sons of men: but chiefly in obedience to his injunction, who commanded it to be said by his disciples whenever they prayed: which, lest any one should omit through ignorance or neglect, our Church hath injoined it to be rehearsed by the people, "whenever it is used in the divine service." But in all the other prayers the people are directed to accompany the minister only with a pure heart, and at the close to "answer, Amen," with an humble voice.
